16. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says:—The Pioneer has already announced that the scheme of reorganisation of the ministerial establishment of the Judicial Department in these Provinces, which had been under consideration for over three years, has been sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India. The details are, it is said, now being worked out in the High Court's office, and may take some time to be completed and communicated to District Judges. It is impossible to say how far the prospects of District Judges' Courts' Munsarims will be improved. But it is an open secret that the pay of a few (four or five) of them will be raised. While the increase will be a trifle, it is rumoured that the proposed pittance will be given in the shape of a local allowance, and not as pay, in certain selected judgeships—an arrangement the unfairness of which will be self-evident. A local or personal allowance does not count for pension. And yet even this small increase may not fall to the lot of the most senior men or the men of most meritorious service. Under the law, as it stands, District Judges appoint their ministerial officers; but the Local Government can, at the instance of the High Court or of a District Judge, transfer a ministerial officer from any Civil Court under the Act (XII of 1887) to any other such court. A District Judge, who is not dissatisfied with his Munsarim, is not likely to recommend his transfer in order to make room for a senior official from another judgeship. On what principle then will the selection be made? It will not be on that of favouritism, it is certain, inasmuch as the Hon'ble High Court have not been known to show, within a decade or so at any rate, any particular bias in favour of any District Court Munsarim. If anything, the case has been the other way. The impression is that District Judges' Courts' Munsarims as a class are not in the good books of the High Court. Standing orders of Government have been set at nought, and qualified Munsarims have had to seek the patronage of the Judicial Commissioner for appointment as Munsifs in Oudh, as the High Court did not deem them deserving of such promotion in their own province. In the good old days ministerial officers of the Judicial Department, meritorious District Judges' Courts' Munsarims and translators were advanced to the positions of Deputy Collectors and Munsifs. But times have changed: other gods, other ways. In these days once a clerk, always a clerk; he cannot aspire to anything better or higher. A writer in the service of the East India Company could rise to the highest appointment in their gift; but a writer in the service of an Imperial Government is debarred from holding any appointment in the Provincial Service. Is a District Judge's Court Munsarim less fitted to be a Deputy Collector than a Tahsildar, a Police Inspector, or an Assistant in the Government Secretariat, the High Court, the Accountant-General's or the Board's office? Is an experienced Munsarim less qualified to be a Munsif than a briefless pleader who has marked time for three years.

The District Judge of Ahmedabad, and native shoes.

17. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th March, in an article headed "Nangon-ka-darbar" (a darbar of the naked), referring to the circular said to have been issued by the District Magistrate (Judge), Ahmedabad, forbidding people to enter the local courts with native shoes on, on the ground of its being contempt of court, observes that the wearing of native shoes in court could hardly be said to constitute any such thing, but that the officer in question cannot, probably, tolerate them because they are native. If the circular is then intended to check the Swadeshi movement, the officer had better enjoin people to put off also their native coats, turbans, &c., before they entered his court, so as to make his order more effective.

Hard lot of copyists in the courts in the United Provinces.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th March, says:—The smallest wheel in the machinery of administration is that which is turned by the humble copyist, and yet he is absolutely necessary, for without him almost all work would come to a standstill. He is not, however, particularly well treated. Even the chaprasi earns his pension, but the service of the copyist is non-pensionable. The one hope left to him was that in the event of his giving satisfaction, there was a chance of his being brought on the permanent and pensionable ministerial establishment. If a correspondent, whose letter appears to-day is to be believed, the copyist is to be deprived even of this hope. An order has been issued that no copyist is to be appointed to a pensionable appointment without the sanction of the Local Government. Once a copyist always a copyist, and no matter how satisfactorily he does his work, and gives promise of doing equally well in more responsible positions, there is no chance of his getting a pensionable appointment. On the other hand, another man with no better qualifications than the humble copyist may get a pensionable appointment if he has some one to back him. These are very hard lines indeed, and we do not know how this order has originated. Copyists are eligible for permanent pensionable appointments in other provinces, and the practice has hitherto been the same in these Provinces. On what grounds has it been now decided to abolish this practice and deprive a humble but deserving class of public servants of a chance of rising in life? No disqualification is so depressing as an unjustifiable disqualification, and no Government should introduce an innovation unknown elsewhere.

SAHIFA,

Suggestion for extension of the Oudh Settled Estates Act of 1900 to the Province of Agra.

19. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th March, observing that the Panjab and the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Acts have proved highly beneficial to the agricultural classes affected thereby, expresses its complete approval of the intention of the Government to make the provisions of the Bundelkhand Act applicable to other parts of the province also. The Hon'ble Sir Faiyáz Ali Khan lately held a meeting at Aligarh regarding another matter of similar importance, at which it was decided to hold another meeting early in March, and resolve to request the Government to extend the provisions of the Oudh Settled Estates Act to the Province of Agra, and thereby enable big landholders of the latter province to preserve their estates to their families, if they choose, in the same way as their confrères have been enabled to do in Oudh. The editor hopes that the Government would readily comply with the request when it is formally laid before it. [The Zamindár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for February expresses the same views.]

Suggestion for transfer of the officials of the Court of Wards from one district to another after every five years.

SAHIFA,
5th March, 1906.

20. A correspondent of the Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th March, complains that while officials of all the other departments of Government are transferred from one district to another, from time to time, no such transfers ever take place among the officials of the Court of Wards. It would tend to the interests of the estates if ziladars and other subordinates of the Court of Wards were transferred every five years, and not allowed to remain in one place permanently.

A complaint regarding conservancy carts at Allahabad.

KAVINDRA BATIKA,
February and March 1906.

21. The Kavindra Bátika (Allahabad), in its joint number for February and March, complains that while formerly conservancy carts (containing night-soil) passed out of the inhabited parts of the town at Allahabad by 6 A. M., they are now seen plying on the public roads at all hours of the day. This is a very objectionable practice, and might lead to the outbreak of a dangerous disease.

The proposed establishment of a Hindu University.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th February, 1906.

22. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th February, refers to the explanation which Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya has published in certain papers, stating that his Hindu University scheme has had nothing to do either with the Congress or the Bengal boycott movement, and, refusing to accept this explanation, adds that the statement is as true as the other according to which the Swadeshi movement is independent of the anti-Bengal partition agitation.

Appointment of a paid agent by the Muhammadan Educational Conference to establish local Committees for promoting its objects in the various parts of the country.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th February, 1906.

23. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th February, states that the Central Standing Committee of the Aligarh Muhammadan Educational Conference has appointed one Munshi Anwár Ahmad as paid agent to move about the country and induce the Muhammadans to establish Local Committees to promote the objects of the Conference. The Munshi has begun with the United Provinces, and it is to be hoped that enlightened Musalmans will render him what assistance they can in his mission wherever he goes.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,

24. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st March, says that though Mohsin-ul-Mulk (Secretary to the Muhammadan College, at Aligarh), does not stand in need of any title from Government (to raise his social position), yet as a matter of conventionality the Muhammadan community strongly desire that Government should take advantage of the present happy occasion (of Their Royal Highnesses' visit to the Aligarh College) to confer a suitable title on him (in recognition of his services to the cause of Muhammadan education).

Suggestion for increase in the educational grant to the United Provinces.

25. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st March, referring to the last year's Educational Report of the United Provinces, is glad to notice that education is making fair progress in these Provinces. But it is a matter for great regret that Government expenditure on education in these Provinces should be the lowest of all other provinces. This is certainly not a fair treatment, and the Government of India would do well to increase its grant for educational purposes in these provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th March, 1906.

The Local Government on Female Education in the United Provinces.

26. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th March, referring to the correspondence between the Director of Public Instruction and Government lately published in the local official gazette re the Report of the Committee on Female Education in the United Provinces, says:—In the letter of the Government to the Director of Public Instruction it is distinctly stated that 'His Honour regrets that the Government has no funds to make any further allotment during the year 1906-07.' Neither is it suggested that any allotment on a suitable scale may be made in future. The reticence may be due to the fact that there will be a change in the Administration when the next year has to be dealt with. In the opinion of His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor, aided schools and classes should be relied on for the expansion of female education, and the work should be done entirely through district boards. Nevertheless, during the official year that will begin next month, the appointment of an Indian Educational Service Inspectress is to be made. This is reform at the wrong end. When there will be no addition to the number of schools and girls, no direct expenditure by Government for expanding female education, where, in the name of common sense, is the need of the appointment of a highly paid Inspectress of Schools? It is the appointment of the head of a department without the creation of the department itself! The salary that will be paid to the Inspectress could be much better and far more properly utilised in the establishment of a new school, or the expansion of existing schools under the existing supervision. The second proposal to be carried out during the year is the enlargement of the Normal School at Lucknow for larger accommodation. The third scheme, and which can be unhesitatingly commended, is the establishment of a second Normal School at a suitable centre, Meerut, Aligarh and Allahabad being named. The choice of one of these places is apparently a matter of indifference, the only recommendation in favour of Allahabad being that "there is a nucleus to start from in the Crosthwaite Girls' School." Since there is a Normal School at Lucknow and a nucleus for another exists at Allahabad, this city should have been fixed upon for the second school; but in the estimation of the Local Government, Meerut, and Aligarh are just as good as Allahabad. If, after this, people say that the Local Government is inclined to neglect Allahabad, the Government ought not to resent such a grievance. Of the two Normal Schools, one should teach exclusively in Nagri and the other exclusively in Persian. If Aligarh is fixed upon for the location of the second Normal School, how is the division of languages to be made? Will the Aligarh School teach exclusively in Persian, and Lucknow in Nagri? Between Allahabad and Lucknow the problem would be easier of solution. What perplexes us more than anything else was the appointment of the Committee. If there were no funds to carry out any of the suggestions of the Committee, why was it at all appointed? Surely the appointment of an Inspectress on a high salary and the establishment of a Normal School could have been easily made without the labours of the Committee.

ADVOCATE,
8th March, 1906.

Local Government on Female Education in the United Provinces.

27. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th March, says:—The correspondence between the Director of Public Instruction and the Local Government on the report of the Female Education Committee will be read, we must confess, with a feeling of not a little disappointment.

When the Committee was appointed in 1904, when its Report was published with the Government Resolution last year and public opinion invited, the impression was created that there would be no lack of funds and that mere financial considerations would not prevent Government from carrying out the recommendations which would be considered "valuable" for the progress of female education in these Provinces. But it appears that the Local Government, much against its wish, is unable to carry out the suggestions of the Committee in their entirety or even partially adopt such of them as were supported by Mr. Lewis. Thus, for the present the labour of the Committee has practically come to nothing beyond placing on record some suggestions which the successor of Sir James Digges LaTouche may or may not carry out. It will depend entirely on his interest in the cause of female education. The step in advance which the Government is going to take might have been taken without the labours of the Committee. The Local Government might plead poverty owing to famine operations in the Bundelkhand : but surely the Government of India ought not to have treated these Provinces in this matter so shabbily. Money should have been found to make a decent start. It is this sort of treatment and handling of important questions which impresses on the people the feeling that the taxes realised from the people are not to be spent for them, and that the Government which is always crying for female education is unwilling to give back to the people from whom it realises over nine crores of rupees, even nine lakhs for female education, even when both the people and the Government agree about the line in which to work. Of course, private agency must do a great deal in the matter ; but private agency has to be encouraged not by mere pious good wishes, but by grants of money.

We are glad that the Government has sanctioned the appointment of an Inspectress for the Indian educational service. Some people may object to the appointment of a European lady, and even go to the length of saying that while Government could not find money for new schools, one more berth has been found for a European. But this is not our view. We have reason to believe that the Government is not getting work worth the money which is being spent for the spread of female education. The Director of Public Instruction and the Inspectors cannot have full control on the existing schools. We want an Inspectress who would be a central authority with a position almost equal to that of any Inspector in direct subordination to the Director, who will be able to do a great deal and to prevent abuses, stories of which now and then reach us. Much will of course depend on the selection of the first Inspectress. If she is enthusiastic in the cause of education and succeeds in interesting the Divisional Commissioners and the District Officers and the leaders of public opinion in every part of these Provinces, much can be done to get out good work from the present expenditure on female education. The extension of the Normal School at Lucknow would be a good thing, but it should not be only for day scholars. The boarding accommodation must be increased and more girls induced to get admission to receive the training of a teacher. We do not think it will be a wise policy to make the proposed Allahabad School or the Lucknow School one for teaching purely in Hindi or Urdu. At both places teachers for the two vernaculars ought to be prepared. Separation will be necessary only when we have secured a sufficient number of trained Kistanees (Native Christians) and Panditas.

The grant of four annas per girl to the village school teacher from the District Board Fund will be an inducement to open girls' classes in village schools. We hope that the District Boards will be in a position to give liberal grants to teachers, and that while the village school teacher will be enabled to add a couple of rupees to the pittance given him for his days' work, he will be able to create a thirst for education in the village girls. We hope the municipalities will also be asked to make similar grants to the teachers of primary schools in large towns. Private girls' schools are also springing up. There is an awakening which, let us hope, will be encouraged by proper grants.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR,
February, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the Eastern Jumna Canal.

28. The Zamíndár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for February, publishes a letter from four zamíndárs, in which they complain that while for some years past the yield of the soil has become very meagre, the authorities of the Eastern Jumna Canal continue to collect the water-rates to their full amounts from the agriculturists. The method of supplying canal water to the cultivators is also very unsatisfactory, and has lately caused some bloodshed among them in connection with the distribution of water. What is worse still is that though the supply of water is generally insufficient, the rate continues to be increased from time to time. Both the zamíndárs and tenants have now become so very dissatisfied with the Canal Department that they are now seriously contemplating making the irrigation of their fields quite independent of the canal water; and with this object in view the old wells in Kandhla are already being repaired, and new ones are being sunk. If this idea spreads, it will necessarily lead to the falling off in the Government revenue from the canal.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,

Famine relief measures in Bundelkhand.

29. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st March, referring to the Government famine relief measures in Bundelkhand, complains that the authorities have cut down the list of pardanashin ladies in Orai, to whom the local officials recommended relief. Again, respectable men seeking employment on the relief works are required to do as much digging as can be expected from regular labourers. Men who are young but emaciated are not admitted into the poor-houses. Brahmans are refused relief as a class on the ground that they can live on alms. Surely Government ought to adopt a more liberal policy in affording relief to the famine-stricken people. God visits a country with famine or similar other calamity to test, as it were, the liberality of Government and private rich people, and both should try to minimize the distress of the sufferers as much as it lies in their power to do.

ADVOCATE,

Alleged want of discretion shown in the suspension and remission of land revenue in the Muttra District, on the ground of scarcity.

30. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says :— With reference to the recent remission and suspension of rent and revenue, consequent on famine condition prevailing in Muttra district, I beg to make the following remarks :—

Wholesale remission or suspension in canal or well-irrigated areas is extremely impolitic and unnecessary. So far as could be ascertained the crops on irrigated lands were normal in the last Kharif, and when we take into consideration the rise of prices of agricultural products, the tenant was so much the gainer for it. Notwithstanding, rents and revenue have either been remitted or suspended. May I suggest that this is hardly consistent with the Government Resolution and the recommendations of the Famine Commission ?

There is no denying the fact that an unprecedented scarcity of fodder still continues. But this by no means justifies the somewhat unusual display of sympathetic feelings, especially in view of the fact that the ryot has been allowed the free use of the trees—a supply of fodder which always stands the ryot in good stead.

The village which enjoys the benefits of canal irrigation can not only cope successfully with a scarcity like the present, but is looked upon to supply the wants of neighbouring villages. The crop is none the less normal for want of the monsoon : on the other hand the prices of foodstuffs rise so high, that in most irrigated areas lean years often make the ryot's fortune.

Muttra is not the only district affected by the scarcity—and one therefore would expect some sort of regularity in the measures taken to cope with it. Does Agra enjoy better means of irrigation, or was there any difference between the rainfall of the two districts ? Why is it then that for one village where revenue has been remitted or suspended in Agra, there are at least five in Muttra district ?

It is evident, therefore, that proper discretion was not exercised by the Revenue authorities and the rights of Zamindars were too often ignored. While persons who stood in no need have been given substantial help, the poor, who really wanted it, have been left in the back ground.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,

Famine in Bundelkhand.

31. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th March, says that as famine has again occurred in Bundelkhand, and both men and cattle have begun to suffer from the distress, the Government would do well to organize relief measures sufficiently early, so as to prevent the repetition of the terrible loss of life which took place during the famine of 1900.

Swadeshism.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ, 16th February, 1906.

32. Awazáh-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 16th February, publishes some Urdu stanzas in which the writer, referring to the past grandeur and wealth of India in ancient days, is pained to see her reduced to poverty at the present time. But India owes her present condition mainly to the decadence of her indigenous industries and trade. It is, however, a happy sign that the Swadeshi movement has been started, so that if the Indians now only give up the use of foreign goods and promote their own industries and trade, they can recover their lost wealth and position in the world in a few short years. It is to be hoped that the Indians will not let the present opportunity slip, and acting jointly do all in their power to patronize and promote Indian manufactures if they love their country.

HAFIZ-UL-MULK, February, 1906.

33. The Háfiz-ul-Mulk (Hapur), for February, referring to the reply lately given by Lord Minto to the address of the Indian Association of Calcutta, says that, as His Excellency has refused to interfere with the Partition of Bengal on the ground that it had been sanctioned by the late Secretary of State for India, and not disapproved of by the entire people concerned, the Bengalis should renew their agitation in every town and village, and take steps in England to have pressure brought to bear upon the Secretary of State to cancel the Partition.

The late editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette, and the Swadeshi movement.

ADVOCATE, 4th March, 1906

34. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says:—Some time ago it was given out that the services of Mr. Moínuddin, editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette, had been dispensed with, because his pro-Swadeshi article had caused dire offence in some quarters, and that the College authorities were not prepared to identify themselves with the view therein expressed. The Gazette contradicts the rumour, and says that Mr. Moínuddin's connection remained with the paper even after his article on the Swadeshi movement had appeared. The Aligarh party favours the movement, though it does not support the boycott of English goods or the use of the movement for intimidating England. This is a sound view and nobody can object to this attitude. The principal reason for the change in the editor has been that the paper does not pay its way. The College has to subsidize it to the extent of Rs. 1,200 a year, which cannot be spent any longer. The circulation of the paper has never increased beyond 250 copies including the exchange and complimentary list. This proves two things. One is that, whatever may be the pretensions of the Aligarh party, their political views are not shared by the majority of educated Muhammadans; it also proves what little progress Urdu journalism has made in these Provinces.

Bestowal of medals as marks of honour on certain Bengalis judicially punished in Bengal in connection with their Swadeshi agitation, and the Musalmans.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 4th March, 1906.

35. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 4th March, referring to the medals which the Bengalis have conferred, as marks of honour, on those fellow countrymen of theirs, who were lately punished judicially in Bengal for their Swadeshi "madness," regrets that even some Musalmans should have thought fit to join in honouring the ex-convicts in question in this way. The submissive attitude which their religion requires the Musalmans to assume towards the powers-that-be did not permit them to treat the offenders of the Government in the manner they did. Surely it was not true patriotism but downright madness on the part of the Musalmans to misbehave in this way. One of these mad Musalmans went to the length of even averring that it was a pity that none of his own co-religionists too had become a martyr to Swadeshism: would that this desire of his heart were never fulfilled! The Musalmans are already guilty of very many follies, and there is no need that they should add one more to them.

ADVOCATE, 4th March, 1906.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says:—What protection does in a self-governing country, Swadeshism has to some extent achieved in India. The latter has done something more; it has infused into the educated classes the spirit of real patriotism.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th March, 1906.

The President of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on the Partition of Bengal.

37. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th March, quoting the remarks which the Hon'ble Mr. Apcar, the President, made at the last annual meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, re the partition of Bengal, says :—With reference to these remarks it has to be said that it is very doubtful whether Lord Curzon would have abandoned the partition scheme even if he had been perfectly aware of the animosity it would arouse. As a matter of fact, he was perfectly aware of it when he passed the measure at Simla. His settled policy was to take no notice whatever of public opinion or popular opposition, and this was repeatedly illustrated. Leaving out of consideration the partition of Bengal, what did he do when the Official Secrets Bill was passed ? The whole country and the whole community, European and Indian, opposed it most bitterly, and yet it was carried with a supreme disregard for public opinion. Then again, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, with the one reservation about the jurisdiction of the High Court, openly and officially supported the partition, and the reason was not far to seek. The European firms of Calcutta expected a substantial increase of business by the creation of a new port at Chittagong. Finally, it is a clear exaggeration to say that the boycott offended against law and order or introduced mob and school-boys' rule. It was disagreeable to those against whom it was directed, but it was perfectly legitimate and constitutional, and the mob had nothing to do with it. The part that school-boys took was perfectly innocent, though it was frequently treated as criminal.

ADVOCATE,
4th March, 1906.

The Hon'ble Mr. Apcar on the anti-Bengal Partition agitation.

38. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says :—The Hon'ble Mr. Apcar's reference to the Swadeshi movement, in his speech as Chairman of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, has been sympathetic. But his argument about Partition vs. Boycott is more plausible than real. It is simply no argument. If the people do not make a great noise, you refuse them your support, saying there is no agitation worth the name. But when their agitation, after exhausting all other courses, becomes effective in a way not to your taste, you say you have gone too far. Boycott may or may not be a right economic principle, but the unrest created by Lord Curzon's utter disregard of public feeling would not have drawn the attention, both in India and England, it did, were it not for the boycott movement. Why, even without the boycott, the agitation on the partition scheme had been as strong as it could be, yet the non-official Anglo-Indians kept quiet. Why did they do so? If they had then come to co-operate, the agitation would have gained in strength and boycott would have not been resorted to.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th March, 1906.

Mr. Morley on the Bengalis' agitation re the partition of Bengal

39. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th March, says :– Mr. John Morley has said that he has been assured on the highest authority that the feeling regarding the Partition of Bengal is subsiding. In East Bengal public meetings have been dispersed by the police and other symptoms of public agitation have been put down by force. In Bengal itself, and even in Calcutta, leaders of Swadeshi and other processions have been warned, and certain public places have been closed to public meetings. If, in spite of all this, agitation can be revived and carried on with all the old vigour and zeal, it will no longer be open to Government to say that the feeling is subsiding. The whole country is anxious to learn when the leaders of Bengal and East Bengal are going to remove the impression that has been conveyed to the Secretary of State. If the agitation is revived, as it ought to be revived, there are friends of India in the House of Commons who will bring the fact to the notice of Mr. John Morley, who will then possibly make an inquiry whether the assurance given to him was not somewhat premature.

ADVOCATE,
4th March, 1906.

The Bengal Partition scheme in Parliament.

40. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says :—Many people feel that the motion about the Partition of Bengal, in reply to the Speech from the Throne, was brought forward rather too soon : a contemporary has even gone to the extent of characterising it as a tactical blunder. Mr. Morley was perhaps not well posted in order to reply to the Amendment. Hence the commonplace character of his speech, though enlivened by a few admissions. The need of some sort of relief to the over-burdened Lieutenant-Governor of United Bengal was repeated; the Partition as an accomplished fact held up as a reason for no immediate change; the disregard of the wishes of the majority of the Bengali people admitted; and the subsiding character of the agitation against the Partition sought to be proved on the highest authority. The arguments are, to say the least, jejune; and from Mr. Morley more than this was expected. It may be that the raising of the question at this stage was meant for putting on record a needed protest more on principle than for any immediate action. When this is said, perhaps the best that could be said of the time chosen for moving the amendment has been given out. If the step be taken for a move made not at the psychological moment, the withdrawal must be characterised as a very wise course, leaving thus an opportunity for the question to be raised afresh. And for this we are not to wait long. The petition that it was resolved upon at the last Calcutta Town Hall meeting to submit to the Secretary of State, is in course of preparation. When this reaches England, an opportunity will come in the way of our friends to open the question again. Not only this. Mr. Morley's very speech is a direct invitation to continue the agitation. But what strikes us most in this connection is that the motion was perhaps not at all a Partition amendment; most probably it had for its subject the great unrest in India, particularly in Bengal. As the partition has been the main cause of this state of affairs, it naturally absorbed the greater part of the attention of the House.

CITIZEN,
5th March, 1906.

Mr. Morley on the Partition of Bengal.

41. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th March, says:—The Home Government are, by their attitude and action, resolved, we are afraid, to make of us confirmed pessimists. Whether it is the Liberals or Conservatives that come into power, the case of us (Indians) seems to be as hopeless as ever. We expected much, and, at any rate, justice from Mr. John Morley; but with all his honesty of purpose and administrative ability, he has so far as Indian affairs are concerned, proved as unfeeling and austere as Mr. Brodrick himself. In reply to the demand of Mr. Roberts and others for a reconsideration of the partition question of Bengal, Mr. Morley seems to have taken a view thoroughly illiberal and unsympathetic. He does not discuss the merits of the reconstruction as actually carried through, but, fatalists as we are, he desires us resignedly to accept the accomplished fact. To add insult to injury, as a reason for non-interference, he says that he has it on the highest authority that the agitation against the partition is subsiding! Since this opinion of the Secretary of State reached the provinces of Bengal, there has been much weeping and gnashing of teeth.

HINDOSTHAN,
5th March, 1906.

Partition of Bengal in Parliament.

42. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 5th March, referring to the amendment to the address moved by Mr. Herbert Roberts in the House of Commons, re the Partition of Bengal, says:—How many members of the House viewed with concern the so-called widespread unrest in India connected with the partition? Surely a handful whose names are on the tips of our fingers; but no loyal Indians at all; and it was the outcome of the Bengali students and a few old agitators who only live to find fault, rightly or wrongly, with the Government. To talk of allaying discontent is absurd. Bengali agitators could never be contented unless the Government of that Province were handed over to them, for which they are not yet prepared. The Hon'ble mover has grossly confused the facts of the matter, when he said that "The demands of the Indian people for a larger share in the administration should receive the consideration of the Government." There is no demand whatsoever of the Indian people, but the supporters of the Partition agitation want, rightly or wrongly, to force the Government to yield to their wishes by keeping a large province under a single Lieutenant-Governor, instead of dividing the work between two Governors, and thereby lightening the administration so as to be carried on smoothly.

The seconding of Sir Henry Cotton was most absurd and impracticable; because Assam could not be amalgamated with Bengal, and no new province could be created westward with a capital at Patna as he proposes.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th March, 1906.

Anti-Partition agitation in Bengal.

43. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 7th March, says:—Some of our Bengali contemporaries are becoming positively ludicrous in the manner of their disappointment with regard to Mr. Morley's action on the Partition question. Some suggest, like Mr. Smeaton and Captain St. John, a Royal Commission of enquiry, some individual enquiry from certain noblemen of Bengal, some one thing and some another. None of these things will ever occur. Months ago, we said that after mature consideration Government, in the interests of the community of Bengal, had decided not only to lessen the responsibilities of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, but for the better administration of its affairs, had created a second province, now known as Assam and East Bengal. We have always held, and still hold to the opinion that the Government acted wisely, and that when the course it has adopted is given a fair trial, and found wanting, Government without the aid of any hulla-balooing from Bengal, will adopt measures to correct or modify what seems to them defective.

Once more we invite our Bengali friends to be patient and listen to reason. Eschew such fanaticism as took place in College Square on the night of the 27th ultimo. Shun agitators and agitation in any form.

ADVOCATE,
8th March, 1906.

Mr. John Morley on the Partition of Bengal.

44. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th March, says:—The Partition debate in the House of Commons ended in the withdrawal of the amendment by Mr. Herbert Roberts. It may be that the failure of the amendment was a foregone conclusion, but it would be idle to deny, to use the words of our eminent leader, that the heart hoped and yet it trembled, as it had never hoped and trembled before. It was not so much the ascendancy of the Liberal Party, as the personality of John Morley, which caused this hoping and trembling of heart. But he has disappointed us, though I am not one of those who are prepared to condemn either him or the Liberal Government for this one failure. I have more faith in the British people than to do this, and our judgment must be suspended till at least the end of the present Parliament. It is by the general tendency of their administrative and legislative work as regards India that we must judge the present Ministry, and it is too early yet to form any opinion on that basis.

But what should we say of the grounds on which Mr. Morley has arrived at his decision? He acknowledges that Partition was carried out against the wishes of the people of Bengal, but refuses to interfere, (1) because it is an accomplished fact, and (2) because the agitation is subsiding. Now let us analyse the meaning of these assertions. Does Mr. Morley mean that any injustice, howsoever gross, as soon as it becomes an accomplished fact, also becomes sacred and inviolable. I appeal to those very Liberal principles of which Mr. Morley is such a distinguished apostle against this demoralising doctrine. The raison d'être of Liberalism is progress and change, which must always go against the "accomplished fact." Mr. Morley is a Home Ruler, but is not Union an accomplished fact? The Liberal Government of the day repealed the Vernacular Press Act, which was an accomplished fact. The British nation abolished slavery which was an accomplished fact. But it is useless to multiply examples. The Congress movement would become a sham and a delusion if this principle of political action was recognised; for is not the whole system of bureaucratic rule against which it protests an accomplished fact? It was said and said truly of Mr. Gladstone that he had "Kept the soul alive in England:" but the most distinguished upholder of that glorious tradition comes forward and lays down a principle which eliminates conscience from the political arena! Surely this was not expected of the disciple of John Stuart Mill. And if unfortunately this principle is to become the guiding rule of the British Government in its dealings with India even under a Liberal Ministry of such progressive tendencies as we have at present, then the new school of thought presented by the New India and the Punjabi shall not only have considerable justification for the line they are pursuing, but a considerable section of the more sober-minded and moderate men of the Congress school shall have to reconsider their position as regards the utility of constitutional agitation.

But the second reason put forward by Mr. Morley for his non-interference has even a deeper meaning. The agitation is subsiding: but why? Because the people of Bengal had some faith in Mr. John Morley. He had disappointed these hopes, and now we hope and trust that the agitation will recommence with redoubled fury. But that is not all. Here Mr. Morley lays down another very important principle. He says that the people of India should not expect anything from him unless they make themselves uncomfortable; that their wrongs will not be righted unless they compel the attention of the British people by becoming a thorn in their side. This is the plain meaning of Mr. Morley. But we have no hesitation in saying that this is a most dangerous lesson for any Government to teach, and for a people to learn. It is for this reason, more than for any other, that we beg to protest against Mr. Morley's decision, for we do not want India to become a bigger and a more dangerous Ireland.

The Swadeshi movement, and the Bengal Government.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,
8th March, 1906.

45. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th March, observes that the Swadeshi movement has, it would seem, completely transformed the views of the Bengal Government. While certain young men were, according to the Bengal papers, returning from a meeting, held on the 1st February last, the police assaulted them with lathis, and thereby caused them such serious injuries as necessitated their removal to hospital. Has the British Government now changed its former policy and come to adopt Russian methods of administration? Is it any sin to sing a national song?

Renewal of the Anti-Partition agitation in Bengal.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th March, 1906.

46. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th March, says:—Mr. John Morley having declared that he had been informed on the highest authority that the feeling in Bengal against the partition was subsiding, the leaders of that Province have quickly taken up the challenge. To-morrow twenty meetings will be held in Calcutta, and these will be followed by other meetings in the mofussil. Whether these meetings will convince the Secretary of State of the unabated excitement in Bengal will depend very much on the manner matters are represented to him by the Government of India.

Mr. John Morley is at a distance, and his only source of information is the Government of India. If it is represented to him that the renewal of the agitation is due to his remarks in the House of Commons, he may not be inclined to attach much importance to it. It will consequently behove the Bengal leaders not to spend the greater part of their energy on the agitation that has been renewed, and to keep the Swadeshi movement in the forefront of their programme.

Prostitutes at Benares.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,
16th February, 1906.

47. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th February, referring to the demoralization which prostitutes cause among people, strongly urges the authorities to turn the prostitutes out of the town at Benares.

Suggestion to establish sanitary associations in the United Provinces for improving the sanitation of the houses of the people.

HINDOSTHAN,
4th March, 1906.

48. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 4th March, says that, as plague has been doing havoc in the United Provinces for several years past, steps should be taken to establish sanitary associations in these Provinces with a view to spread sanitary knowledge among the people, and improve the sanitation of their houses.

A suggestion to Government for enlisting Indians more largely into the Indian army.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th March, 1906.

49. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th March, referring to a rumour that Government contemplates reducing the British garrison in India on account of British recruits not coming forth in sufficient numbers to keep up the present strength of the British troops in this country, says that in these circumstances, Government had better place its reliance on the loyalty of its Indian subjects and freely enlist the valiant Rajputs and Pathans, thousands upon thousands of whom are available, and thereby raise their ambitions and aspirations.

Alleged effect of residence in India on the minds of Britishers.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th March, 1906.

50. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th March, states that a British soldier who lately went home from India and assaulted his mother was hauled up before a law court for the offence. The mother however recommended him to the court for mercy, urging that he had lived in India, and that a person who has done so loses his head. The old lady certainly told nothing but the truth. It is, however, not the climate of India but his absolute power over the poor Indians that turns the head of even an ordinary Britisher residing in that country.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th March, 1906.

Last Annual Administration Report of the United Provinces.

51. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th March, in commenting upon the last Annual Adminstration Report of the United Provinces, says:—The Government thinks that 'under the new system of increased powers and responsibility which is being introduced, the business of local self-government will be more attractive.' The following remarks are more sententious than philosophic:—"How far efficiency should be sacrificed to the administrative education of the people is a question of the future. A good many experiments must be made before the best method of employing non-officials in the administration is discovered; some failures must be expected." It may be added that if the experiments are made with a whole heart there would be no question of sacrificing efficiency. Wherever the authorities have worked in the true spirit, self-government has proved a success, but the spirit is frequently wanting. No power, however small, is relinquished easily, and that is the reason why local self-government in India has remained a dead letter.

The excise revenue went up with the 'continuance of prosperity'; but has it been known to go down with scarcity, except in the area of actual famine?

* * * * * * *

The paragraph on the principal topics of the Native Press, probably compiled by the Reporter on the Press, is more entertaining than interesting reading, and might be well omitted in future Administration Reports. What good is it to any one in the world to know that Afghan affairs attracted little attention, or a number of protests appeared against the partition of Bengal? What were the Afghan affairs, by the way? And does the Reporter himself know them? If the Local Government will refer to the other Administration Reports, it will be found that topics of the Native Press never find a place in them. And the other Local Governments are wise. It is a difficult work and requires a particularly good man to do it well. Besides, it is absolutely unnecessary, and merely helps to emphasise the invidious distinction between the Native Press and the Anglo-Indian Press over which the Government has apparently no jurisdiction.

VI.—RAILWAY.

HAFIZ-UL-MULK,
February, 1906.

Need for increasing the staffs at the small railway stations.

52. The Háfiz-ul-Mulk (Hápur,), for February, says that the late railway collision near Sásni on the East Indian Railway, in which some 300 lives are said to have been lost, occurred owing to the neglect of the overworked assistant station master at that station. The station masters at the small railway stations are generally given only one assistant, so that they have, between them, to attend to all sorts of work during the day and night and the result is that whenever they are unable to bear the strain of work accidents like the above take place. The higher railway authorities would therefore do well to make a suitable increase in the present undermanned staffs at the small stations.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th February, 1906.

Certain postal complaints at Budaun.

53. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th February, complains that, while before the construction of the railway to Budaun, letters, money-orders, &c., were delivered to the public of that town by 8 A. M., they are now delivered as late as 12 A. M. Again, a letter posted at Budaun after 9 A. M., reaches Sahaswan on the third day. All this is very unsatisfactory, and the higher postal authorities should see to the matter.

ADVOCATE,
4th March, 1906.

Hard lot of low paid subordinates in the Postal Department.

54. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says:—I have read with considerable interest but extreme disappointment, the two or three letters that have lately appeared in the Pioneer regarding the employés of the Postal Department. "Hopeless," "Hopeful" and "Truth," all appear to be Europeans or their Indian descendants. For had it not been so the letters would not have dealt exclusively with persons of the rank of Superintendents and Post Masters. There is certainly too much of overwork and underpaying in the Post Office Department, but not in the direction to which these correspondents are pleased to call the attention of the public, nay of the Government. The Postal Department is, according to the rule laid down by the Government, meant exclusively for natives of this country and for them Rs. 200 to Rs. 600 per mensem is not only not "starvation wages" but is princely remuneration. When we remember that even in the best departments open to Indians, i.e., Judicial and Executive, the ultimate prospects are but Rs. 600 to Rs. 800 per mensem, the controversy that the Superintendents are underpaid appears simply ridiculous. The thing is that our "white" brethren (if it be not impertinent to call them so), are desirous to make the higher ranks of the Post Office a preserve for themselves, and have well nigh succeeded in doing so. Hence the cry of more pay. They want only their "Bhai-band" on the top of the Department. Let the poor "white" element keep apart, and there will be no complaints of insufficient remuneration in the higher ranks of the Department.

The cry of Superintendents and others of their rank being over-worked is meant only to make a strong case for increase of pay. As a matter of fact, even the most industrious Superintendents have, at the most, barely 7 hours' ordinary work to do, and many glide on to the highest grades with but 2 hours' indifferent working. Compare with this the attainments, and the nature of work of a Munsif or a Deputy Collector.

The class of people in the Post Office who deserve not only sympathy but pity also, are officials below Rs. 100 grade. They have 8 and 9 hours of work prescribed, and, to the utter disgrace of the Postal Department and its supervising officers be it said, are made to work in many cases for 12 hours and more. As for the starting pay and prospects the former is Rs. 15 and the latter Rs. 50 to Rs. 100 after about 20 years' service. This for specially competent men; mortals of ordinary type die (or in a few cases retire) on less than Rs. 50 per month. Is there no Pioneer to voice the feelings of painful despair of these silent sufferers whose loyalty and industry form the groundwork of the Post Office structure. Mr. Editor, will you please take this duty on yourself? If the Government is anxious or desirous to do something for those who deserve it, or to improve the efficiency of the Department, let these receive the first attention. Let the Superintendents and higher ranks be recruited from qualified Indians as is done in the provincial line of the Judicial and Executive Departments, and there will come into existence a most efficient, industrious and contented supervising staff, and no cry of "more work and less pay" will be raised.

ADVOCATE,
4th March, 1906.

Hard lot of letter Sorters in the Postal Department.

55. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says:—The other day a correspondent of the Pioneer drew a horrible picture of the Railway Mail Service Van—in summer it is a "blast furnace, during winter it is a stony cave of Himalaya, and in rainy days a black hole, and a depôt for flying insects!" In addition to the hardships which the poor sorters in working there undergo, I beg to draw your attention to a dismal tale which makes one believe that neither mercy nor humanity nor civilization exists in the Department. Recently a sorter in the O. Division applied for leave from the deathbed of his loving son. The Superintendent did not see his way to grant him leave, and could not comply with the sorter's wishes to be allowed to attend his son during his last critical moments. Not because any arrangement could not be made at the time for his work—as his fellow workers were ready, under the circumstances, to proceed again on a tedious journey of hundreds of miles to do his duties, and not to allow the work to suffer—but simply because the will or the whim of the officer must be done and his orders must be obeyed and not interfered with on the penalty of being dismissed from the Department. Even submitting a petition without his previous sanction was an insult to the Superintendent, who consequently heavily fined the sorter for his impertinence in staying at home, whatever the circumstances might have been, without the Sahib's previous sanction. In other words, why did he not inform him a month before or so that his son was to be taken ill on a certain day, or why did he allow the disease to touch and grasp the child? To go on with the tale, the boy breathed his last. There is a funeral march. But where does the father go to? No explanation, however plausible it might be, can be accepted for such conduct.

AN-NAJM,

An appeal of Indian Musalmans for funds for propagating Muhammadanism in Japan by means of pamphlets.

56. An-Najm (Lucknow), of the 7th Muharram (corresponding to the 3rd March) announcing that the editor has opened a fund in his office for the purpose of propagating Islam in Japan, by means of pamphlets explaining the doctrines and excellence of the religion, appeals to Indian Musalmans to help forward the noble movement by making liberal contributions. The pamphlets which the editor intends to bring out for the purpose will be useful for Indians also.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th March, 1906.

Obscenities at the Holi festival.

57. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th March, says :—As the festival of Holi is approaching, I venture to address these few lines to you in the hope that they will attract the notice of the authorities. It is notorious that this festival is celebrated by a number of people indulging in obscenities of various kinds. So long as these are done privately, however culpable they are in themselves, they do not come into notice ; but when these exhibitions are made in public, they are bound to become matter of public concern. As a matter of fact, things go on in such a manner that one feels inclined to ask whether the sections of the Indian Penal Code relating to such matters were intended to be dead letter.

Obscenities and indecencies are not matters of religion and find no justification in the Scriptures of the Hindus. The State, we have been taught to believe, is the custodian of public morals. And in the name of religion have we not then a right to ask that those offensive practices which at present pollute the celebrations may be done away with ? It is a gross libel upon religion even to think that the things witnessed on the day of the Holi are sanctioned by religion ; and it is a breach of the law to permit them. In my opinion the matter deserves the serious attention of the district authorities.

AL BASHIR,
6th March, 1906.

Alleged proposal of the Arya Samajists to celebrate the death anniversary of Pandit Lekhram, one of their late leaders.

58. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 6th March, referring to the assassination of one Pandit Lekhram, an Arya Samajist, by some person, who was not identified some years ago, states that the Arya Samajists now propose to hold meetings on the 6th March, the day of his assassination in all those places where they have association of theirs. At these meetings, the editor is afraid speeches exciting ill-will towards Musalmans will be made.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

ADVOCATE,
8th March, 1906.

Boycott of a newspaper by the Government of Sir Bamfylde Fuller.

59. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th March, says :—If an order takes time to reach the Local and Provincial Governments from the Imperial Secretariat, an idea is no less slow to filter down from Calcutta or Simla into the heads of Provincial Satraps. It seems the petty meanness of striking an editor in his back—realised and given up by the Supreme Government—has not yet made itself plain to Sir Bamfylde Fuller. Hence the latest fiat in the form of a communication from Mr. Lyon to an editor. The letter runs as follows :—" I am desired to acknowledge receipt of your letter, dated 13th February 1906, and to inform you that Government support has been withdrawn from your paper owing to your refusal to retract the untruthful report you published in the matter of the alleged assault upon a sweeper woman by a police sepoy at Barisal." The step is more serious than what was the matter in the case of the Statesman. The Anglo-Indian paper could be prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act for not doing which the Government came in for a good rating at the hands of the public. The Chronicle does not come under this Act, nor under the Sedition clause : at best its assertion may be said to have defamed the character of a sepoy more than of the mehtár woman. Why did not one of them put the editor in court ? No, that was not to be ; but Sir Bamfylde Fuller's entire administrative machinery (was) set in motion. Our contemporary has thus the unique distinction of being attended to by the Lieutenant-Governor's Chief Secretary.

European Powers, and Turkey.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th March, 1906.

1. THE Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th March, referring to the various crusades that European Powers undertook in ancient times to wrest Palestine from Turkey, says that those Powers have ever since been anxious to dispossess Turkey of Armenia and Macedonia, and thereby save the Christians residing in those countries from the disgrace of the yoke of a Muhammadan Power; but they have hitherto failed to do so, because they are not able to act in concert with one object in view.

Germany, and the Musalman Powers in the Near East.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th March, 1906.

2. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th March, says that the sympathy which Germany has, for some years past, affected for Turkey, and has recently shown for Morocco, cannot possibly be considered sincere. For, if the Kaiser were truly a friend of the Muhammadan Powers in the Near East, as he would let the world understand by his recent attitude towards them, he could not have looked calmly on the Russo-Turkish war, the bloodshed of thousands of Turks in Crete, or the rebellion of the disloyal people of Armenia and Macedonia, but must have extended a helping hand to the Sultan. A true friend's sympathy is what Japan has shown for China in fighting with a formidable Power like Russia for her sake, and delivering her from the latter's iron grip.

Alleged undbated greed of the European Powers for territorial aggrandisement.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th March, 1906.

3. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th March, indignantly observes that Russia went about Central Asia and the Far East absorbing or occupying territories one after another, but has lately received a crushing defeat and check at the hands of the Japanese, from the effects of which she is not likely to recover for many years to come, the other European Powers continue to pursue undeterred their policy of territorial aggrandisement. They, for instance, still seek to wrest Macedonia from Turkey in the same way as they took some of her other provinces in the Near East before. But Turkey is no longer the "Sick Man" of the past. She has already made vast improvements in her army, and continues to strengthen both her naval and military prowess, and in the course of a few years she will become as strong or rather much stronger than Japan, and capable of measuring swords not with one but all the European Powers combined. The European Powers have also lately been interfering in the affairs of Morocco on flimsy grounds. Surely if these greedy Powers do not give up their present practice of thrusting their nose into the affairs of other Powers, it will produce not one but several Japans to stop their insatiable thirst for territorial acquisitions, and deliver the world from the constant aggressions of the piratical nations (of the West) for good.

The Sultan of Turkey, and the Indian Musalmans.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th March, 1906.

4. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 10th March, deprecates the conduct of those educated Indian Musalmans, both in India and England, who express their sympathy with the Sultan of Turkey, in season and out of season, and would represent him to be the Khalifa of the entire Muhammadan world. It is quite a different thing for the Indian Musalmans to express their sympathy, on the ground of the communion of religion, with any Muhammadan country that is wronged by the European Powers, or to send subscriptions in aid of the Turkish wounded in a war, or of the Hedjaz railway funds, or even to inform the British Government that they would not approve of its participation in any combined action which the European Powers might take against Turkey; but to interfere in the international affairs of the European countries, or in the relations of the British Government with the Muhammadan Powers can hardly be said to be a safe or wise course for them. As regards the question of Caliphate of the Sultan, it bristles with many difficulties, and had better be let alone. It would, for instance, give rise to serious differences of opinion in the Muhammadan community itself, the Shias recognizing no such personage in the world, according to their religious faith.

RIYAZ-UL AKHBAR,
8th March, 1906.

Appeal to the Indian Musalmans to take shares in the company proposed to be established for providing funds for the construction of a railway line from Jeddah to Arafat.

5. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th March, urging the need of the construction of a railway line from Jeddah to Mount Arafát as a branch of the Hedjaz railway, for the special benefit of pilgrims to Mecca, puts the cost of the construction of the line at Rs. 45 lakhs; and, publishing a scheme of a joint stock company to be started for raising the necessary funds for the purpose, calls upon the entire Musalman population of India to liberally buy shares of the proposed company.

TAFRIH,
7th March, 1906.

The King's Speech at the opening of Parliament, and India.

6. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th March, regrets that no announcement of a grant of any special concession to Indians was made in the King-Emperor's speech at the opening of Parliament, in honour of their Royal Highnesses' visit to India. The loyalty of the Indians is recognized on all hands, still no privileges are extended to them, while the turbulent Transvaalers have been promised self-Government in the near future. The visit of Their Royal Highnesses will no doubt strengthen the bonds of Indian loyalty to the British Crown, but it would do so still more, if it were marked by some special concession to the people. [The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th March, expressing the same views, adds that this utter indifference to the claims of India shows that she can hope nothing either from a Conservative or a Liberal Ministry.]

ARYA MITRA,
8th March, 1906.

Alleged apprehension of the loss of India to the British Government on account of the present dissatisfaction and unrest among the Indians.

7. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th March, rejects, as absurd, the fear of the Hon'ble Mr. Herbert Roberts that the dissatisfaction and unrest existing in India at the present time might cause the loss of that country to the British Government. The Indians are a very pious and law-abiding people; so that it is sheer ignorance of their character on the part of anybody to entertain any serious apprehension of their revolt against the British Crown.

ADVOCATE,
11th March, 1906.

Question of appointment of some Indians to the Council of the Secretary of State for India.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says:—Mr. Battersby sympathises with the Congress in its demand for the appointment of Indians on the Viceroy's Executive Council and the Secretary of State's India Council. The request has been pronounced important considering the good that would accrue. It is true that the Secretary of State himself can in many matters, representing the Cabinet and the House of Commons, overrule his Council, but he must always hear their advice, and in some matters he is by law precluded from ignoring the advice they give. If therefore Indians were appointed to the Council of the Secretary of State, they would exercise a real influence upon the Government of their country. Not only would their advice, as officially given, have legal weight, but, in addition it is certain they would be unofficially consulted both by the Secretary of State himself and by independent members of Parliament. The Statesman thinks this is a reform which should be specially pressed upon the attention of the present Government. With all his anxiety to proceed cautiously, Mr. Morley would not be revolutionising the administration by appointing an Indian to sit on his Council. The step would mean real participation of Indians in directing and controlling the policy.

ADVOCATE,
11th March, 1906.

Proposal for appointment of a Standing Committee of the House of Commons to control Indian affairs negatived by Mr. Morley.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says:—Mr. Morley is developing into the friend of the status quo a little too fast. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman began his administration with the assertion that Indian affairs would be kept clear of party politics. This raised once again the question of having a Standing Committee of the House of Commons to control Indian matters on neutral lines. In reply to a question, the Secretary of State has refused to sanction such a course which is exceptional, not being known in any other Department. India is to remain outside the party question; at the same time a non-party Committee should not look into its affairs. How is then Parliament to take cognisance and shape the policy of the India Government? The position of this country in English politics seems to be indefinite and therefore unenviable.

Indians, and politics.

CITIZNE,
12th March, 1906.

10. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th March, says:—There is a strong wave of reaction and reform everywhere. We want reform in many things, but we try to reform the Government first. This we should not do. We cite the instance of the Japanese, but we forget that they let politics alone at first. They first reformed their personal ways and manners, by teaching their men, women and even little children to be dutiful and truthful members of society, and to sacrifice everything for the good of their country. Their progress has been gradual and not by leaps and bounds, and their present position is the necessary outcome of an iron will and adamantine determination. But the Indians, more specially the Bengalis, will let other important things take care of themselves, and will first interfere with politics. If they look up to Japan as their guiding star or the embodiment of everything that is worthy of imitation, they should begin in right earnest as the Japanese have done.

The British Government, and India.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th March, 1906.

11. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th March, regrets that while the United States has already given Local Self-Government to the Philippines and Cuba, France contemplates making similar political concessions to her colonies, and even the British Government is going to grant political enfranchisement to the turbulent Transvaalers, the latter, notwithstanding it has now ruled for more than a century in India does not yet think her fit for receiving any form of Local Self-Government. What is worse still, fresh restrictions are being put every day in the way of the education of Indian youths.

The Congress, and the Musalmans.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th March, 1906.

12. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th March, says that however much the leaders of the Indian National Congress may boast of their seeking to ameliorate the condition of all classes of Indians without any distinction of race or religion, they are not yet able to eradicate from their minds their religious prejudices against the Musalmans. The Urdu-Hindi controversy showed that although Urdu was a language born in India, the Congressists wanted to destroy it simply because the Musalmans were better masters of that language than the Hindus. The Congressists had better first cleanse their minds from prejudices before they strive to unite all the Indian communities into one nation, and get them to work unitedly for their common good and improvement.

The Congressists, and the Liberal Ministry.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th March, 1906.

13. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th March, says that the leaders of the Indian National Congress who entertained high hopes from the Liberal Ministry must be sorely disappointed with the decision of Mr. Morley regarding the Partition of Bengal, &c. Until the people of India have made sufficient progress (in all directions) as a whole nation, they cannot expect to obtain any important right from Government, it being inexpedient on the part of the authorities to place the people at the sweet mercy of a few advanced individuals among them by granting them political privileges.

Alleged need for the establishment of a Provincial Political Association in the United Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th March, 1906.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th March, says:—Wisdom to a great extent consists in seeing things in their proper light, and that too, much in advance of other people; and the people of the United Provinces are certainly to be congratulated on their possessing the quality of wisdom in an extraordinary degree. It was in November, 1903,—though the question had been discussed previously—that it was decided to organise a United Provinces (Political) Association, and steps were actually taken here to bring that body into existence. Some months later, in April 1904, a meeting was held at Lucknow and a donation and subscription list was actually opened. Even rules were framed and printed, but nobody has ever since heard anything of the Association. Provinces which are considered to be more backward than the United Provinces—for instance, the Central Provinces and the Punjab—have shown greater political activity, although they have not displayed as much wisdom as the United Provinces. The people of the Central Provinces held their first provincial Conference last year at Nagpur, under the presidency of Mr. Khaparde, and this year again they are going to hold during the Easter holidays another Conference at Jubbulpore, at which Mr. Chitnavis will preside. Even in the Punjab there is a proposal to hold their provincial Conference, and to revive the political work they had carried on during some past years: but our people here have seen the futility of political agitation and do not propose to stir in that direction. Great credit is certainly due for this to the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, who, we believe, were nominated the first Secretaries of the United Provinces Association. Only we would like to suggest that it were best for all parties concerned if this superior wisdom were spurned for a while, and the people of these Provinces also acted in unison with—it may perhaps amount to joining them in their folly—the people of other provinces in respect of the adoption of methods of political agitation.

UNION GAZETTE,

Prosecution of Shaikh Ali Huisan, father of Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, at Rampur.

15. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 9th March, referring to the prosecution instituted at Rampur against Shaikh Ali Husain, father of the notorious Shiakh Zia-ul-Haq (vide article No. 6 on page 66 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), observes that it is widely reported that this suit was instituted against the father with the object of attracting thereby the son to Rampur, and then punishing him for the publication of his pamphlets against that state or silencing him for good by conciliation. This plot has evidently failed, and the son not appearing on the scene, the father has been committed to the court of sessions for trial, so that the Rampur authorities seem determined to have the father punished for the offence of the son. As the case is sub judice the writer does not like to say anything about it at present. But when the Judge has given his decision, the writer will be able to discuss whether the accused was not assisting the party of the Rampur Minister in their efforts to conciliate his son Zia-ul-Haq. It would, however, be much better if the case were tried in a British court.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
7th March, 1906.

Need for extension of the provisions of the Oudh Settled Estate Act of 1900 to the Agra Province.

16. The Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 7th March, stating that a meeting was to be held at Aligarh on 9th idem to request the Local Government to extend the provisions of the Oudh Settled Estates Act (of 1900) to the Province of Agra, says that it is very desirable that this step should be taken for the preservation of big landed estates in the latter province, which are generally being ruined by the prodigality of their indiscreet owners; and expresses a hope that both Hindu and Muhammadan zamindars of the province will muster strong at the meeting to adopt a memorial to the Government on the subject.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th March, 1906.

Approval of the Indian Government's intention to extend the provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act to other parts of the country.

17. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th March, says that the zamíndárs, who generally lead a very simple life, are extremely hospitable, obedient to Government authorities, and the very backbone of Government, contributing, as they do, the lion's share to the State treasury, are allowed to be freely fleeced by the money-lending class. The Indian Government passed a law some time ago which prevents zamíndári rights being sold up in satisfaction of money decrees in the Punjab. It is reported that the Government of India now contemplates extending the provisions of the said Act to other parts of the country; and the writer thinks the sooner this highly beneficial step is taken the better it will be for the interests of landholders.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th March, 1906.

Two British soldiers accused of causing the death of a native at Lahore.

18. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th March, referring to the arrest of two British soldiers on the charge of having caused the death of a native at the house of a prostitute at Lahore, says that it is useless to arrest a European for murdering a native, as the courts generally either acquit them altogether, or, at the most, punish them only with a small fine of, say, Rs. 30, or with imprisonment for three months or so. Again, European convicts are supplied with all their requirements and comforts, so that they are hardly worse off in jail than when they are free; while, on the other hand, native prisoners are provided with the poorest and scantiest diet costing only six pice a day, and with the coarsest cloth to cover their nakedness. Imprisonment thus having no fear for Europeans in India, there is nothing to deter the latter from laying violent hands on natives (on the least provocation.)

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th March, 1906.

The late contempt of court case at Agra.

19. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th March, observing that a native, however responsible and high a post he may hold under Government, does not enjoy even as much respect in the eyes of the authorities as a British soldier does, refers to the late contempt of court case at Agra, and says that the utmost reparation to his dignity that the Small Cause Court Judge might expect in the case would be an offer of apology by the offending British officers, which would be no amends worth the name.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th March, 1906.

The Indian People on the contempt of court case at Agra.

20. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th March, says:—Verily the present time is full of surprises and sensations. We know not to-day what will happen to-morrow. As in the kaleidoscope, you are presented with varying views perhaps every moment. While our brethren in one part of the country are being badgered with mediæval barbarity, and life, rank, and dignity are being set at naught, matters are improved upon in these provinces by even the precincts of a court of justice being desecrated. 'Man is often a wolf to man.' This may be true in the relations of private life; but what in a court of law? Law, we are told, is no respecter of persons. The high and the low must equally bow to its authority. But how are things reversed! Perhaps we still have to read the history of law at the wrong end. The regrettable incident in the court at Agra is by this time too well-known and needs not further publicity. We have heard since that the offenders have made amends by tendering public apology. All's well that ends well: and we are not in the least desirous of opening up old sores. Let matters rest where they are. The action of the District Judge, however, in letting the offenders go before any orders had been passed in the case of contempt, cannot pass without a word of comment. The least that can be said of it is that it betrays an absolute lack of the sense of dignity, if not grave ignorance of the law; and what is more, it may even lead some people to doubt his impartiality. The fact cannot be blinked that the matter involved very serious issues.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th March, 1906.

Partial observance of the Muharram holidays in the Allahabad High Court.

21. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th March, says:—Our readers are aware that the North-Western Provinces High Court is not closed for a part of the Muharram holidays for non-Muhammadans. A grievance seems to be made of this fact by almost all parties concerned, for in the public press a short while ago letters appeared on the subject which purported to emanate from the practitioners in the Hon'ble Court as also from the Amlas employed therein. These public protests were, however, not heeded, and the High Court remained open as usual up to the 3rd March 1906, for non-Muhammadans. The Hon'ble Judges of the Allahabad High Court deserve to be congratulated upon the untiring industry and the zealous devotion to duty which seems to characterise them in so marked a degree. But it is to be apprehended that their lordships in their zeal sometimes run the risk of forgetting the homely but time-honoured adage, viz., "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

Abkari administration.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says:—Mr. Sunder Singh Bhatia, B.A., LL.B., Editor, Daily Times, Lahore, has submitted an interesting paper on behalf of the Amritsar Temperance Society, of which he is an active member, to the Excise Committee, in which he has made certain valuable suggestions about the liquor sold, illicit distillation and supervision. The complaint is one and the same all over the country, namely, there is much room for improvement in the administration of the Ábkári laws. The remedies suggested point to the fact that the Government without sacrifice of revenue can confine the evil to a limited number of men and take away the temptation from the way of those who do not regularly drink, and remove the shops from amongst those who do not desire to be near them.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
11th March, 1906.

Need for reducing the number of liquor shops in India to check increase in the habit of drinking.

23. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th March, regrets that in spite of the great efforts made by various temperance societies and religious institutions to reduce the consumption of liquor, the habit of drinking continues to increase in India, as may be gathered from the continued rise in the Government revenue derived from excise, and in the number of liquor shops spread all over the country. The Government of Madras has lately issued orders forbidding the sale of liquor to boys below 14 years of age, and enhancing the tax thereon. This is a step in the right direction. But so long as the number of liquor shops is not considerably reduced, a marked check in the vice of drinking can hardly be expected, and the Excise Committee now sitting would do well to give serious consideration to this point.

ADVOCATE,
11th March, 1906.

Municipal elections in the United Provinces.

24. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says:—In the United Provinces the rules for Municipal elections are almost a quarter of a century old and require amendment to get rid of the abuses which are attendant on them. We do not know whether it will not be to the general advantage to discontinue the annual system of elections and thus prevent excitement every year.

Then the system of registering voters also requires some change. The qualification of the voters, now that all incomes below one thousand are not taxed, require to be revised, and it should no more be left to the caprices of the Municipal members or Municipal employés to put in the names of the persons whom they choose. It is the interest of the State to see the men whose names appear on the list are men really qualified to vote, and are not men of straw whose votes have no value. The present system of registration of the voters is most defective, and has been tried in different ways and found to be open to serious objections. It is not enough to say that people do not object to the existing rules; people have to be trained to take interest in civic affairs. Whether they take any interest in the Municipal elections or not is beside the point in the matter of making the rules up to date.

Then the mode of voting is open to serious objection. The sending of ballot papers by post to the elector is undesirable. The voter does not unoften lose the paper. Days before the election his paper is snatched away from his hands and mutilated, and he is asked to vote according to the wishes of the man who can influence him. The life of an elector who is not strong enough, becomes unbearable. He is not unoften intimidated by some over-zealous distributors in the police force, not unoften given unpleasant hints, and thus finds himself between two fires. One of the objects of election by ballot is to keep the voting secret. This is not done. The voter is often made to vote even against his will. He not unoften becomes a mere signing tool. The result of the voting is known on each side long before the hour and date of election. This defeats the object of election. We think this system should be changed. Every registered voter should be informed by a post-card of the place, date, time of election and the names of candidates. He should come to the polling place furnished with the voting paper containing the names of the candidates and asked to vote for whomsoever he pleases. Illiterate persons can ask the returning officer to help them by witnessing the persons for whom they desire to vote. We would even go to the length of disenfranchising people who do not know one of the principal vernaculars of the district rather than allow the whole system of election to become a huge sham. The spectacle of the agents of rival candidates following the postmen, even attempting to bribe them, that of constables interesting themselves in the votes of the poorer class of voters and snatching away papers at the police station and not unoften creating rows is sickening and disgraceful. It is in the interest of the Government and the people alike that these abuses should be removed and the vice of corruption in connection with Municipal elections checked.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th March, 1906.

Suggestion for providing the town at Agra with electric light.

25. A correspondent of the Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 15th March, complaining that the present arrangement of the Municipal Board for lighting the streets at Agra is very defective and unsatisfactory, suggests that the Board might put its water-works engines to the further use of providing the town with electric light, at a small additional cost.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th March, 1906.

A suggestion to prevent people from affected areas taking up their residence at Moradabad.

26. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 16th March, stating that the residents of Chandausi where plague is raging again this year, are fleeing for safety to the town at Moradabad, says that as this is calculated to infect the latter place also with the disease, the local authorities would do well to prevent people from affected areas taking up their abode there.

CITIZEN,
12th March, 1906.

Abolition of the system of imposition of fines on boys in schools in the United Provinces.

27. A correspondent of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th March, says:—Hitherto according to the Code of Punishment for Anglo-Vernacular Schools any boy, who committed an offence, could have been punished by the class teacher with fine. But the educational authorities, who, as a general rule, have not to come in contact with the boys and hence do not realise the teacher's difficulty in controlling them, theorise a thing without considering the practicability of it. Thus they have abolished the punishment of fine which according to the Code could have been imposed by the class teacher for all offences except inattention to study. This has resulted in such a confusion and laxity of discipline that he finds it difficult to do his work properly. Now-a-days a boy can absent himself from the school or do some other offence without any fear of even the headmaster, not to speak of the class teachers.

The schoolmaster has lost all control over the boys who are sometimes a hindrance to his work. To remedy this state of things, either the punishment of fine should be replaced or some other form should be substituted as soon as possible. The punishment of fine is an effective one if used judiciously, because the boys are thereby punished, not at school, but rather at home—the most suitable place for punishment.

28. Famine in the United Provinces.

29. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 14th March, referring to the famine relief measures started by Government in Bundelkhand, complains that the respectable poor cannot profit by those measures, because they are required to do as much work as a regular labourer can. Young men who are too weak to work are not admitted to the poorhouses. Petty zamindars are trying to tide over the bad times either by mortgaging or selling off their estates. During the famine of 1896-1897 Government ordered such transfers of property to be held invalid, except in special cases. It is to be hoped that the Government of Sir James Digges LaTouche will issue similar orders this year also if necessary. Hard is also the lot of poorly paid clerks and menials, and Government would do well to give a temporary increment in their salaries to enable them to get over the present hard times.

RAHBAR,
7th March, 1906.

Punishment of four Muhammadan advocates of the Swadeshi movement at Barisal.

30. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, says that some people have been under the impression that Sir Bampfylde Fuller was showing special favours to the Muhammadans to put down the Hindus in East Bengal. But this impression hardly seems to have been well founded. On the 12th February last four Muhammadans were judicially punished on the charge of having wrongfully thrown some British salt from a boat into the river. Let this awaken from their (fond) dream "those Muhammadan brethren of ours who have been exulting at their having become the 'dear wives' of Sir Bampfylde Fuller." His Honour is the enemy of Swadeshi agitators, whether they be Hindus or Musalmans, his professions of special love for Muhammadans being all sham.

RAHBAR,
7th March, 1906.

Alleged slackness in the Swadeshi movement in the United Provinces.

31. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, is sorry to notice that though the people of the United Provinces may be foremost in giving subscriptions (for this or that movement initiated under the auspices of the authorities), they have been most backward in providing the means for supplying their daily wants in their own province. While all the other provinces have been taking practical steps to promote Swadeshism in right earnest, the United Provinces have so far remained inert, no new factories or Swadeshi shops having yet been opened in them. Again, an educated young man can learn weaving in three months, and, buying a hand-loom for Rs. 30, can easily earn Rs. 15 a month by it. But no, he would still prefer to dance attendance upon ten persons to secure an appointment of Rs. 10 a month, rather than take to the independent profession of weaving and earn more. O God! when will the Indians get rid of this indifference (short-sightedness)? In another place, the editor urges that so long as the Indians do not curtail their wants and thereby give up the use of such foreign articles as cigarettes, collars, neck ties, &c., they cannot expect to derive any (immediate) benefit from their Swadeshi movement.

RAHBAR,
7th March, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement, and the Muhammadan party at Aligarh.

32. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, regrets that, while every educated Indian ought to be a supporter of the Swadeshi movement, the Muhammadan party at Aligarh have thought fit to dismiss Munshi Muín-ud-din, M.A., from the editorship of the Aligarh Institute Gazette, simply because he was in favour of the movement.

RAHBAR,
7th March, 1906.

A Muhammadan preaching Swadeshism in the streets at Calcutta.

33. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, stating that one Maulvi Liákat Husain has got together about a hundred graduates and under-graduates at Calcutta, at whose head he appears every day in the evening without fail in a certain public street in that town, preaching the benefits of the Swadeshi movement and singing patriotic songs, says that all advocates of the movement ought to be most thankful to the Maulvi for what he is doing so earnestly in support of the cause.

AL BASHIR,
13th March, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement.

34. A correspondent of Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 13th March, calling the Swadeshi movement a suicidal measure, says that until and unless the Indians improve their arts and industries to such an extent that their products can successfully compete with foreign goods in the open market, it is sheer folly on their part to seek to boycott the latter. They do not possess enough factories to supply all their wants at present. They could no doubt start new factories to turn out a larger amount of goods, but what, if Europe refused to supply them with the engines and other machinery needed for the purpose? As regards the Partition of Bengal, the writer fails to see how it can be injurious to the interests of the Bengalis, seeing that all of them are still under the same benign Government that has made them so "arrogant" by its over indulgence. The Bengalis had better give up their useless agitation, or it will do more harm than good to India.

Mrs. Besant on the Swadeshi movement.

35. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th March, says:—On the occasion of the anniversary of the Boarders' Union, Central Hindu College, Benares, Mrs. Besant made an earnest appeal in support of the Swadeshi movement. She said the movement was very necessary on account of the changed conditions of India, and that every Indian ought heartily to support such a movement. It was also necessary to guard the movement from all possible dangers and to distinguish between the right and the wrong method of work. The present period through which India was passing was a period of transition. Under the present condition, India was suffering from want of food. Previously there used to be at least one year's supply of food in every household, and it was also the duty of the State to keep in the State granaries a store of food which would suffice to feed the people for at least one year in times of drought or flood. The people could, therefore, fight against famine for at least one year, and sometimes even more with the help of the State granary. But the introduction of steam and electricity and facility of locomotion and communication resulting in large exports of grain had changed the economic situation. Now not only the surplus produce but rather more went to foreign countries and thus the people always lived on the verge of famine. The import of foreign grain into India in times of famine did not help much. In the famine of 1898 American wheat was imported into India, but was neither suited for cultivation nor for ordinary consumption, because the people were not used to it. The Government of India ought to prohibit the export of grain when there was famine in the country. There was not only want of food but also the want of money in the end. It was therefore very necessary that the people should not depend on agriculture alone, but ought also to devote themselves to manufactures. What was required was to keep a balance by directing national energy both to agriculture and to manufactures. Hence the necessity of the Swadeshi movement, which aimed at the encouragement and development of home industry and manufactures. England had gone quite to the other extreme and had become almost solely a manufacturing country. It was partly natural for England to be a free trading and a manufacturing country, because it had abundance of coal and iron.

Among other causes, one of the chief cause of the decline of Indian art and manufactures was the negligence of the Indians themselves, particularly the richer classes. The poorer classes did still consume to a large extent the commodities manufactured at home and were not mad after foreign goods. If they used any foreign goods it was because they got them cheaper. But with the richer classes the case was quite different. They were mad after foreign goods, because it was more fashionable to use them. The Swadeshi movement was not a new movement. It had been doing some good work in other parts of the country but it lacked life and vitality. Bengal used to pay no attention to it and the Bengal Zamindars, some of whom were very rich, were the largest consumers of foreign goods. It was therefore in the fitness of things that the movement received such an impetus in Bengal on account of the Partition affair which had now urged the Bengal Zamindars to help the Swadeshi movement in two ways: firstly by using home-made goods in preference to foreign goods, and secondly by providing capital which was absolutely essential for industrial development. With the determination to use home-made goods and the provision of capital with the object of producing commodities it was also essential to acquire the skill necessary for producing such commodities. It was good to send young men to foreign countries in order to make themselves proficient in sciences and arts. Such young men when they came back should teach others in turn and give to their country the benefit of the knowledge they had derived in foreign countries. But this would take a long time. In the meantime it was necessary to employ Europeans to train young men in India. This could only be succesfully done when the Indians gave up the mania for Government service and the bar. The Government servants and the lawyers were necessary and useful, but the whole nation could not enter Government service and join the legal profession. For example, short-hand and typewriting were very useful. A commercial class was opened in the Central Hindu College where shorthand and typewriting were taught. It was deplorable that in the whole of Benares only three have availed themselves of such an opportunity. Reasonable young men should try to acquire those things and enter into those lines which were paying, and had for the time being what they called scarcity value.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th March, 1906.

Swadeshism, and the Bengalis.

36. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 15th March, referring to the Swadeshi movement, says that, as Lord Minto has already given out, his Government is not opposed to Swadeshism, but that His Excellency rightly deprecates the useless agitation and fuss that the Bengalis are making about it. Indians are free to use foreign or home-made goods, as they please; but there is no need for them to make noisy demonstrations in the public streets as to what they intend to do. Many of these so-called Swadeshi advocates make excited speeches on public platforms in favour of Swadeshism, but if one were to look into their private rooms, he would find them full of foreign furniture and other articles. This is not true Swadeshism indeed.

ARYA MITRA,
8th March, 1906.

Question of the constitution of Behar into a separate province.

37. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th March, expresses approval of the suggestion made in Parliament, by Sir Henry Cotton, to the effect that instead of the recent division of Bengal into East and West Bengal, it would be well if Assam were amalgamated with the whole of Bengal proper, and Behar separated and raised into a new Lieutenant-Governorship. The language, manners, customs, &c. of the Beharis are entirely different from those of the Bengalis; and hence the separation of Behar would not be open to the objections which have been taken to that of East Bengal. Some of the Hindi-speaking districts of the Central Provinces might also be transferred to Behar if it came to be constituted into a separate province.

ADVOCATE,
11th March, 1906.

Renewal of the Anti-Partition agitation in Bengal.

38. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says:—Whether Mr. Morley be held responsible or not for it, the agitation against the Partition has received a new lease of life. On Saturday last Calcutta had no less than twenty meetings in different parts of the town. The meetings were attended by the leaders from all sections of the community. Identical resolutions were passed against the Partition and a vow was taken to keep up the agitation.

* * * * * * * *

Meetings at Calcutta have been followed by meetings in the mofussil, and the Calcutta papers are now full of the account of these meetings. These prove one thing that Bengal has made up its mind to keep the fire of agitation alive undaunted by the failures to get a hearing from the Secretary of State. People are eagerly looking to the Provincial Conference to be held in Barisal, which will appoint a deputation to go to England to interest the English public in the partition question. The meetings in England will be followed by agitation in India. The question is, how long will the Government allow the public feelings to continue to be excited? How long will this bitterness of feeling be allowed to continue? Sir Bampfylde Fuller has tried repressive measures, but he has not been successful in removing the passive resistance which is growing in strength. The tone of the Press has become still more strong and from all appearance it seems that the agitation instead of subsiding is ever on the increase.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
11th March, 1906.

Mr. Morley on the Partition of Bengal.

39. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th March, fails to see any justification in Mr. Morley's refusal to cancel the Partition of Bengal, because it was an accomplished fact. Even most important schemes and measures are liable to be dropped (when they are found inexpedient); whereas the Bengal Partition scheme was only a petty measure, which was not completely carried out in all its details, nor was much money spent in its execution so far, so that it could easily be withdrawn. Mr. Morley's action has, at any rate, sorely disappointed the Bengalis, and they have renewed their agitation against the measure with redoubled energy and indignation, holding large meetings, boycotting British goods, &c.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th March, 1906.

Bengalis' sore disappointment at Mr. Morley's refusal to cancel the Partition of Bengal.

40. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 11th March, referring to the Bengalis' great jubilation at the appointment of Mr. John Morley as Secretary of State for India at first, as if he would at once change their entire destiny, and then to their sore disappointment on receipt of the news flashed from London, on the 26th February last, (that he had refused to interfere with the Partition of Bengal on the ground of its being an accomplished fact), says that it was a serious mistake on the part of the Bengalis to entertain any high hopes from a Liberal Ministry. Conservative and Liberal Ministries have from a long time been succeeding each other in England at intervals; but where is the precedent in which one party, on coming into power, reversed an internal measure once sanctioned (in India?) by the other party? The Liberal and Conservative parties of England are not like the Hindu and Muhammadan parties of India, whose "inside" (real character or motives) and "outside" (outward deeds or assertions) do not differ.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th March, 1906.

Comments on Mr. Morley's refusal to reopen the Bengal Partition question.

41. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th March, says:—Mr. Morley's reply to the amendment to the address in respect of the Partition of Bengal lends itself to some very serious reflections as to the future of constitutional agitation in India. It was admitted by the Secretary of State that the Partition disregarded the wishes of the majority of the people, but it was "a settled thing" and therefore it was unnecessary to re-open the question. We fail to understand the wisdom of the policy adopted. In the first place the partition has not become a "settled thing," for who does not know that many matters of detail have yet to be settled; besides, if the two Bengali-speaking divisions retained in the old province, were also transferred to the new province, as was contended, no possible harm could have been done, nor any administrative dislocation taken place. Even if it were a "settled thing," the broader principles of justice and good Government required that the question should be re-opened. It otherwise tantamounts to telling the people in so many words that however strong their opposition, however just their claims, however great the wrong perpetrated on them by the Government of India, the people's voice was nothing in comparison to the wishes of the Indian bureaucracy. It is a bad lesson for any Government to teach, and for any people to learn. Statesmanship requires and the interests of good Government demand that the wishes of the majority of the people should be respected, the more so when the methods of protest and agitation adopted by the people are of the most peaceful nature. It is nothing short of folly to teach the people that lawful and constitutional agitation is at a discount and will avail nothing.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th March, 1906.

Renewed Anti-Partition and Swadeshi agitation in Bengal.

42. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 16th March, referring to the meetings recently held in Calcutta and other places in Bengal, expressing resentment against Mr. Morley's decision regarding the partition of Bengal, and advocating Swadeshim enforced with fresh pledges, fears lest this exhibition of inordinate passion might lead the authorities to take up a hostile attitude towards the Swadeshi movement, to which they have been favourable so far. The Bengalis had better give up their foolish thought to coerce the Government.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th March, 1906.

Question of a larger employment of Indians in the administration of their country.

43. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 9th March, referring to the discussion latetly raised in Parliament for giving the Indians a larger share in the administration of their country, regrets that the Secretary of State should not have thought them yet fit to hold higher posts under Government. The British people have been ruling over India for more than a century, and it is a matter for surprise that there should not be found a few Indians capable of filling such high posts now as were given to their ancestors under the late Moghal rule, even in the Civil Service, the commissioned ranks in the army being practically closed to them.

ADVOCATE,
11th March, 1906.

Mr Morison on the question of a larger employment of Indians in the administration of their country.

44. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says:—Though not a friend of the Indian who asks for representative institutions for his country, Mr. Morison, late of Aligarh, thinks some more share in the administration of India should be given to him. In order to know what posts educated Indians may fill with honour to themselves, profit to the country and to the satisfaction of the British rulers, his suggestion is that one small Province or Chief Commissionership should be administered from top to bottom by Indians. It would then turn the Magna Charta into a living spirit of fulfilment. "The first Empress of India," writes Mr. Morison, "told her people that no one of her subjects would be debarred on account of race or religion from service under the Crown, and, as Mr. Battersby has very well pointed out, the present ill-will in India is largely due to a sense of injustice, to a sense that the generous promises of the Queen's Proclamation have not been kept." Very much as we would wish the suggestion to be acted upon, it sounds too Utopian for the rulers to listen to. There is, however, much on record to show that as District Officers and Divisional Commissioners, Indians have generally proved their capacity to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. In other spheres of activity the scope is as much limited as it is quite otherwise in that of a Magistrate or Commissioner. Hence our special reference to these posts.

HINDOSTHAN,
12th March, 1906.

Appointment of Indians as Chief Justice and Ordinary Member of the Viceroy's Council.

45. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 12th March, says:—Sir John Jardine is said to have advised Government to extend the principle of associating natives of intellect and proved character with the Government of India.

This we do not clearly understand, but it could not mean the association of the natives with the Civilians; because if we rightly remember Indian Civilians could occupy one-sixth of the number; but with all their high education and improvements they have not yet received even 100 posts in the Civil Service, though the cadre of the Civil Service of India amounts to about 1,000 or more. As for the Provincial Service we have no reason to grumble, but we still can aspire for two appointments—one the Chief Justiceship of some of the High Courts, which has been given to Indians many times temporarily but not permanently; and the other position we hope to receive is that of the Ordinary Membership of the Supreme Council. It may be an honorary post without pay or with pay as the Government pleases. But where there are six European Members, we do not see why there should not be one Indian also. By doing this, our Liberal Government will greatly distinguish itself, and lay Indian subjects under everlasting gratitude. It is high time that Indian soldiers were treated like British soldiers. When we have received the privilege of belonging to the Cadet Corps, and when our Rajas and Maharajas are allowed to maintain the Imperial Service Troops, it is quite time that we were appointed as Chief Justices and get one Ordinary Membership at least in the Supreme Council.

ADVOCATE,
11th March, 1906.

Military expenditure in India.

46. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says :—While India stands little or no chance of retrenchment in the military expenditure, the new Government in England has shown some decrease—however small—in the army estimates of England.

* * * * * * * *

The pity is that while India is said to require rest after Lord Curzon's strenuous administration of seven years, her military affairs have to be more and more attended to.

CITIZEN,
12th March, 1906.

Appointment of a Committee to inquire into the question of the purchase of Government stores in India.

47. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th March, says : —Only the other day Lord Minto declared that he was in favour of Swadeshism as an economic movement, and, as a practical demonstration of his sympathy, we now find his Government appointing a Committee to inquire into the problem of the purchase of Government stores locally.

* * * * * * * *

We regret to note that on the Committee there are no Indians, official or non-official. We hope it is not too late yet to remedy the evil.

OUDH AKHBAR,
28th February, 1906.

Suggestion for raising Masauli in the Bara Banki district to the status of a town.

48. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 28th February, writing in the name of the residents of Masauli, a village in the Bara Banki district, says that though Masauli is an important village, having a large population with a goodly number of well-to-do, educated and commercial men, grand buildings, &c., it has not yet been raised to a township, and provided with a town police, &c., while Saidanpur, a much smaller village in the neighbourhood, has lately been made a town. The district authorities would therefore do well to take the claims of Masauli into their consideration, and make it a town. The same paper in its issue of the 13th March publishes a letter from another correspondent in which he says that the people of Masauli want no such thing as town police, &c.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th March, 1906.

A complaint regarding the weights used by shop-keepers at Gorakhpur.

49. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th March, states that special local weights are used at Gorakhpur. These weights are, however, generally made of stones or bricks by the users themselves, and bear no Government stamp; so that they are not quite reliable, and people are liable to be cheated by shop-keepers. The District Magistrate would, therefore, do well to have these weights made of iron with a Government stamp impressed on them.

COLONEL,
1st March, 1906.

Gambling in opium speculations.

50. A correspondent of the Colonel (Moradabad), of the 1st March, states that the practice of gambling in opium speculations is spreading fast even in small towns, and referring to its ruinous consequences, asks Government to prohibit it authoritatively.

A postal complaint.

MUFID-I-AM,
10th March, 1906.

51. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of the 10th March, says that under the present rules of the Postal Department a postage stamp of half an anna is to be affixed to a letter weighing up to half (sic.) a tola, but that if the letter weighs somewhat more, however slightly, an additional half anna postage stamp is to be affixed. This is not fair; and the writer agrees with the Naiyar-i-Azam in thinking that in such cases only a quarter anna postage stamp should be required to be added for every additional quarter of a tola.

A complaint on behalf of the clerks of the Dead Letter Office at Lucknow.

ADVOCATE,
11th March, 1906.

52. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th March, says:—I beg to bring to the notice of the Postal authorities the sad state of the Dead Letter Office, Lucknow. One is generally surprised to see the clerks of that office working on Sundays and other holidays. On enquiry it appears that they are so hard pressed with work that even working after 5 or 6. p. m. daily they cannot finish their work without attending the office on holidays. So much so that even on the King's birthday many of the clerks were seen working in the office. This state of things surely tells upon the health of the clerks who can unfortunately very seldom obtain privilege or other kind of leave to recoup it. As this is, I believe, for want of men, the Postal authorities should increase the staff, for the sake of humanity, if not for efficiency of work.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

Burial of tázias at two different places at the last Muharram celebration at Lucknow.

AN-NAJM,
10th March, 1906.

53. An-Najm (Lucknow), of the 14th Muharram (corresponding to the 10th March), stating that as the Sunnis and Hindus were highly dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Shias, who with the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner, required people visiting the Karbala (tázia burial-ground), at the Muharram celebration last year at Lucknow, to go bare-footed, bare-headed, &c., they applied this year to the Deputy Commissioner for permission to establish another Karbala, and, their request being promptly granted, they buried their tázias on the grounds near Musa Bagh; and thus a serious riot which was apprehended between the Shias and others was averted. The writer hopes that the Shias will be more careful in their doings in future, and try to avoid giving offence to the other communities in religious matters.

Burial of tázias at two different places at Lucknow during the last Muharram festival.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th March, 1906.

54. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 10th March, states that during the last Muharram festival at Lucknow the Sunnis and Hindus buried their tázias on the grounds near the mosque known as that of Jins (genii), while the Shias buried theirs at the old Karbala, as usual. The Shias wanted the Sunnis and others to go to the Karbala bare-headed, bare-footed, and without chewing betel leaf; but the latter did not consent to do this, and hence the selection of a new site for burial of their tázias by the non-Shias. This has naturally strained the relations between the Shias and other classes, which must be regretted.

Need for taking steps to prevent the proceeds of Muhammadan religious endowments in India being put to illegitimate uses.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th March, 1906.

55. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 13th March, approving of the views expressed by a correspondent in its issue of the 1st idem, regarding the strict application of the proceeds of Muhammadan religious endowments to the objects for which the donors made them (vide article No. 61 on page 111 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), says that it would be well if one or two Muhammadan theologians were associated with the management of every endowment with a view to see that its funds are applied only to legitimate purposes, and not allowed to be diverted to ulterior objects. For instance, with the income of the endowment of an Imámbára (a place where the Shias deposit the tázia, and where offerings are made to the dead) in Hugli, several educational institutions, where the majority of the students are non-Muhammadans, are supported. This is surely misappropriation of the money, and both Shias and Sunnis had better take steps to establish a joint committee of their respective theologians whose duty should be to lay down broad rules according to which the incomes of the various Muhammadan endowments in India should be used. If necessary, Government may also be moved to pass a law to prevent the misappropriation of the funds in question either by the trustees of the endowments or others.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th March, 1906.

Government, and native newspapers.

56. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th March, referring to the conviction and punishment of the Bhala of Poona for publishing a seditious article, says that, according to the Bombay Times, the fate of the Bhala should serve as warning to other similarly disaffected papers published at Poona. But so long as Government does not carry out the wishes of the King-Emperor and strictly observes the laws, and its officers do not cease to oppress the people, punishment of native papers, far from lessening disaffection among the people, would rather tend to increase it, and such disaffection is much more dangerous than that which finds expression in the press.

CITIZEN,
12th March, 1906.

Boycott of the Sylhet Chronicle by the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

57. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th March, says:—Considering that the editor of the Sylhet Chronicle mentions the very parties to whom the allegation of assault was made by the woman, and gives other facts to show that whatever was written was written in good faith, we need not pause to judge whether the report made by the editor was untruthful, or the demand that Sir Bampfylde made for retraction and apology was unjust and mean. But we may well pause to consider the nature of the support that the Government at one time gave to the paper and now agreeably to its threat has withdrawn it. This support, so far as we are aware, mainly consisted of the grant of a copy of the Government Gazette free of cost, and occasional supply of dry and uninteresting items of news, known as press communiques. The withdrawal of the privilege of the Government Gazette being supplied gratis would not, we are sure, entail such an enormous loss as to cause the conductors of the Chronicle to break their heart. Indeed, from personal experience, we are in a position to say that a weekly or bi-weekly to which no such Government support is vouchsafed flourishes better than others receiving such support from Government. And, accordingly, the Citizen is grateful to the Government of Sir James Digges LaTouche.

SIPAHI,
20th March, 1906.

The Prince of Wales' visit to India.

1. THE Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 20th March, expressing satisfaction at the Prince of Wales' visit to Baluchistan, where His Royal Highness should have seen something of the martial spirit still lingering among the people, says that his visit to India could hardly have enabled him to learn the true condition and feelings of the Indians. He was, throughout his stay in the country, surrounded by Government officials, and had little occasion to come in contact with the people or their non-official representatives. He would have learnt much about India if he had visited Benares during the session of the Indian National Congress and had talked with its leaders, but the British authorities here would not allow him to do so. The writer, however, hopes that His Royal Highness, who is India's future emperor, will not forget her.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd March, 1906.

Conclusion of the Royal visit in India.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd March, says:—The last station visited by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during their Indian tour was Karachi, the picturesque and pretty capital of the remote province of Sind. In some respects it is a fitting termination of the Royal tour. After the bustle and crowds of Bombay, the cities of Northern India and Calcutta, the quiet of Karachi was a welcome change, and the words of farewell were spoken in an atmosphere of calm and to an undemonstrative people. The Prince of Wales spoke feelingly and sincerely, and we have no doubt His Royal Highness has been equally impressed by the magnitude of the Indian Empire and the loyalty of the people. We respectfully and regretfully bid their Royal Highnesses farewell. Our regret is edged by a feeling of disappointment that it was not found possible to arrange that the Royal tourists, who visited so many places in the United Provinces, should honour the capital city with a visit. Almost every provincial capital, with the exception of Allahabad, has been visited. We have been told that the omission of Allahabad from the programme of the tour is not due to the neglect or omission of the Local Government. The Government did suggest that the capital should be visited, but the idea did not find favour with the higher authorities. That was still more unfortunate. Apart, however, from the local disappointment, we share fully the gratification which the Royal visit has caused to all Indians. It would be unreasonable to expect any tangible result from the Royal visit in the administration of the country, but it is by no means a small thing that the King-Emperor and his son and heir should feel a direct and a sympathetic interest in the affairs of this country and its people. The King-Emperor rules, though he does not govern, and the personal knowledge of the Royal family of the largest and most important dependency of the empire is a factor in the future of the country that cannot be overlooked.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd March, 1906.

The Indian People's reflections on the late Royal visit to India.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd March, says:—For four months the heir-apparent to the British Empire, with his Royal spouse, was a guest of India, travelling from place to place of these vast dominions, seeing men and manners, taking the leading part in a multitude of functions, some interesting, others merely formal, and making such observations as opportunities afforded. Since India became a direct appanage of the Crown in 1858, the relations between the Royal family and this country have tended to become more intimate. Several years, however, elapsed before it was found practicable to arrange that a member of the Royal family should pay a visit to this country. The late Queen Victoria, the Good, after the part that Her Majesty took in drafting the Royal Proclamation of 1858, felt more and more drawn towards India, and early in the seventies of the last century Her Majesty was in a position to sanction the visit of her second son, the late Duke of Edinburgh, to this country. This was followed in 1875-6 by the visit of the Prince of Wales, now the King-Emperor. That was the crowning event of the connection between the Crown and India. The Prince was not accompanied by the Princess, but still his visit produced an enthusiatic outburst of loyalty, which has not been since equalled. The Prince of Wales returned to England charmed with his visit and the impression that he carried with him was so favourable that some years later, his brother the Duke of Connaught was actually sent out to serve in this country. That was the culmination of the relationship between India and the Crown. No member of the Royal family has yet served in any of the self-governing colonies, between whom and the parent country the relationship of race is far more intimate than between India and England. The Duke of Connaught served here for some years, mixed freely with the princes and the people, and carried with him the warmest sympathy for and attachment to this country. And it was this attachment that induced him to come out as the representative of his Royal brother, the King-Emperor, at the Delhi Coronation Darbar. The Duke of Connaught was followed by the Duke of Clarence, who would have been Prince of Wales had he been living to-day, and whose affianced bride is to-day Princess of Wales. And now the Prince of Wales, following the example of his father thirty years ago, has travelled through India and spent four months in the country, and has now set his face homeward, richer by the pleasant experiences he has gained in this country and impressed doubtless by the character of the people and their wonderful loyalty.

The present position of the connection between India and the Royal family is this : while every member of the Royal family, including the heir-apparent is free to visit India, the Sovereign may not personally honour this dependency with a visit. It must be remembered that every part of the Empire, excluding the United Kingdom, is in the same position as India so far as the visit of the Sovereign is concerned. The late Queen Victoria went on the Continent and to the south of Europe for the benefit of her health. His Majesty the King-Emperor also travels in Europe, but it has become the recognized practice that beyond Europe the King may not go. The Prince of Wales may travel over the whole world, but the King cannot go to Canada, Africa, Australia, or India. It is profitless to enquire into the why or wherefore of this custom. On the whole, it is wise, for it is difficult for the King to visit his worldwide Empire. But from nowhere is the response quicker or warmer than from India when some personal relations are established between the Royal family and this country. For instance, there is a widespread feeling in India, apart from the political aspect, that it would be a great advantage, if a member of the Royal family could come out to India as Viceroy in the same manner that the brothers and sons of the Moghal Emperor ruled the various provinces of India as Governors and Viceroys. We cannot conceive that any Royal Viceroy would drive the country so hard as Lord Curzon, because whereas that young politician tried to play the Great Moghal, a scion of the Royal family would be naturally above such a temptation. Had the Duke of Connaught been Viceroy of India for ten or twenty years we feel assured he would have done a great deal to raise the status of the people and earn their gratitude. This kind of speculation, however, does not help us very far, as there is not the remotest chance of members of the Royal family being associated in the work of Government in the present constitution. The people of England are loyal, respectful, and they maintain the Royal family in a position of dignity, but they will not give a jot of power in their hands. So far the change that came over the constitution long ago is irrevocable and the existing arrangement is, on the whole, for the best. But India has had such bad luck in the lottery of administration that it almost seems it would be change for the better if an exception could be made in the case of this country, and a member of the Royal family appointed Viceroy of India.

From the Indian point of view there is something more to be said, about the Royal visit. Is the visit undertaken from the purely English point of view, or are some concessions made to Indian notions as well ? In ceremonials the Prince conformed to Indian customs as far as possible, while in the cordiality of manners he was unaffectedly English. Everywhere he displayed a marked contrast to the insular frigidity of the English and was perfectly at ease wherever he appeared. We understand that the visit of the Prince of Wales has no political significance, just as the Prince himself has no share in politics. English publicists regard the Royal visit to India as nothing more than a gigantic hunting expedition, though in the present instance the most important hunting trip has had to be abandoned. But the people of India associate a Royal visit with more substantial blessing. The Prince has given four donations to four religious institutions, and a similar donation to the Aligarh College, which is the luckiest educational institution in this country. We know fully well that the visit of the Prince of Wales will make no difference in the administration of the country, but the people have a hereditary notion that when the king or his son appears among his people blessings follow the auspicious visit. Alas! those days are gone beyond recall. While the Prince of Wales was here every one spoke and wrote glibly about the loyalty of all classes of the people. But we know what such testimonials are worth. There will be the same tendency to characterise freedom of speech as disloyalty and to belittle every agitation, however earnest. Newspapers will be pounced down upon as soon as they slip ever so little, and there will be the same contemptuous disregard everywhere for the people of the country, specially the educated classes. In spite of all these discouraging facts, the Royal visit is certain to be productive of some good, for when the Prince of Wales and his wife hear the people of this country or their representatives abused they will be disposed to ask themselves whether the people who treated them so well are really so bad as they are represented.

RAHBAR,
14th March, 1906.

Higher classes of Indians under British rule.

4. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th March, observes that the respectable classes of Indians are fast declining and that unless the British Government take special steps to preserve them they will become altogether extinct in the course of a few years. It is a pity that while America is going to allow self-Government to the Philippines after a few years' rule, the British Government does not see its way to make a similar concession to Indians after a rule of 2 (sic.) centuries. The Indians enjoy no rights whatever—they are not given the power of appointing even a chaukidar! If the Government associate the Indians more largely with the administration of their country, this will bring about a large reduction in the home charges, provide suitable employment for the higher classes, &c., and, what is still more important, will enable England to keep a smaller force of British troops in India and cease to be always seeking the good will of Japan and Persia for the sake of her Eastern Dependency: the Indians themselves if trusted and given high posts in the army will be able to protect the country both from internal disturbances and foreign invasions. It is high time that the British Government made up its mind to give local self-government to India as it is now prepared to give to Ireland, and thereby prevent Indians being reduced to hewers of wood and drawers of water, to which condition they are fast gravitating under the present system of administration of this country.

CITIZEN,
19th March, 1906.

Mr. Battersby on the present political situation in India.

5. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 19th March, says:—The passion and prejudice of party spirit cannot long obscure the real situation in a country. The clouds that are raised by the dust of sectional antagonism and rivalry are now and then suddenly dispelled by agencies whose welcome advent has not been anticipated before. We in India have just witnessed such a triumph of truth with reference to the political situation in this country. What we Indians have so long urged as the consequence and result of Lord Curzon's repressive rule has come to be owned by a prominent member of the party that has ever been the champion of the rank imperialism which was the very soul of Lord Curzon's policy.

Mr. Provost H. Battersby came to India with the Prince of Wales as the special correspondent of the Morning Post, an old leading London daily journal of rank conservatism. Mr. Battersby is no doubt a gentleman of the political school to which his employer belongs. But evidently he came here with a determination to see things for himself and not to be prejudiced by partisan cries. He assumed the attitude and temper of the judge, and his verdict on the political situation in this country bears on it an impress of impartiality, worthy of a thoroughly judicious and unbiased mind. Mr. Battersby fully admits the existence of dissatisfaction and unrest in India, and rightly and faithfully attributes it to the reactionary policy of the late Viceroy. The boycott in Bengal and the discontent in other parts of India have come, according to Mr. Battersby, "from those great agents of moral tension, a sense of repression, a consciousness of injustice, bred by hopes only to be discouraged." This sense, this consciousness, the writer points out, is believed by Indians to be the most significant product of Lord Curzon's administration. Lord Curzon aimed to make British rule in India strong by rendering that rule independent of assistance from the people. Mr. Battersby freely admits that he found this impression to be "exceedingly deep-seated" in the Indian mind, and to be the cause of every exhibition of popular feeling, and he believes that if it be nursed into assurance, it would lead to further and more serious outbursts. Now, this calm and impassioned view of the present situation is impossible to be grasped by our Anglo-Indian rulers, and why ? Is it not because they are infected with that peculiar temper, the Anglo-Indian imperialistic hauteur ? This is a morbid passion of the mind which only the Anglo-Indian is privileged to feel and enjoy.

Our rulers have perfect faith in brute force, and evidently on the ground that such force is wholly on their side, the people of India having been long disarmed, they think they can go on in their career of that selfish and reckless administration which tramples on the wishes of the people. Therefore, they are regardless of the effects of their act and cannot see what they are and what they will be. But these effects cannot be hidden from the discerning eyes of unprejudiced observers like Mr. Battersby. Of the effect of the repressive policy, he says : "It has created a mordant hostility to our rule which has a more considerable distribution and more uncompromising depths than have been made apparent, and it has converted what was once belief in our faith and admiration of our polity into distrust and despair." Here Mr. Battersby speaks the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

If our British rulers were wise they would never forget the historical truth that they never conquered India, but were willingly let in by the people to come and rule over them. It is not an Indian, but an Englishman, a historian of high order, the late Professor Seeley, who proved this fact in his work entitled "The Expansion of England." Mr. Battersby reminds our rulers of this great truth, and then says :—"Now, before considering the claims of the progressive party in India it may not be amiss to point out that our ascendancy here could not be maintained on its present insignificant basis—a hundred and fifty thousand to three hundred millions—were India not in a sense a consenting party to that ascendancy." And the keen-sighted Mr. Battersby follows up the above reminder with the following warning: "We must not forget that the telegraph and the railway are as potent factors in the spread of disaffection as the means for crushing it, and that we have had under present conditions no experience and have given probably no thought to the difficulties of ruling an even mildly disaffected India. To say that it would tax our resources is not to suggest the dimmest vision of the truth. It would require us fundamentally to reconstruct them."

The significance of Mr. Battersby's utterances should be apprehended and realized by the Government, both in India and in England. They should have the sense to see that if they can throw off the bias that is so apt to overcome them whenever called upon to consider the just claims of the people of the land, they would find nothing in Mr. Battersby's conclusions to which they can take exception. The bias at first in this matter of the representative of the Morning Post, an old conservative journal, was naturally the same as that of the Government, but Mr. Battersby is evidently a sincere lover of truth and when he saw how serious the state of matters was in this country, he did not scruple to tell the truth about it even though such outspokenness on his part went against the traditions of the very journal which he represented. The Viceroy and the Secretary of State ought to grasp the plain fact that Mr. Battersby, a Morning Post man, would have been the last person to say what he has said about the present political situation in India, if it were not the real truth, the undeniable fact. Lord Minto and Mr. John Morley are men who have heads over their shoulders, and we cannot persuade ourselves to think that Mr. Battersby's eminently true and wise representation of the situation in India will be without its effect on their thought and actions.

In conclusion, we must express our admiration of Mr. Battersby for his sincere love of truth, his admirable moral courage, and his keen political insight, and our deep obligations to him for the unquestionable service he has done to this country by his reasoned, bold and sympathetic writings on her present condition and on the duties of British rulers of the Indian people.

SIPAHI,
20th March, 1906.

Lament at the alleged decadence of martial spirit among the Indians under British rule.

6. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 20th March, bitterly deploring the alleged decadence of martial spirit among the Indians under British rule, observes that just as a man in his old age has to regret the indiscretions of his youth, so the British Government will rue in time of sore need and weakness the disarmament of the people of India it has effected in its days of power and glory. In the native states too, the warlike races, failing to obtain military employment, have mostly taken to peaceful pursuits just in the same way as they have done in British territories, with the result that if the British Government wanted at this time to enlist natives who may be able to fight at once without requiring any training, it would not find even thirty such men among the whole of the thirty crores of the people. Government is at present busy strengthening its military forces to protect India from the old dreaded invasion of Russia on her North-West frontier, and it ought to reconsider whether it would not be far better and less costly to qualify the Indians themselves to defend their own country than to provide for her defence by foreign men. [The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 20th March, says that though the Rajputs, and other martial races in India have been losing their military prowess during the last fifty years, a large number can still be found among them who are thoroughly fit for military service, and will readily enlist, if Government offer them liberal terms.]

ADVOCATE,
22nd March, 1906.

Suggestions for utilizing the balance at the disposal of the Queen Victoria Memorial Fund Committee, Agra Branch.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd March, says:—We understand that there is a balance of not less than Rs. 48,000 in the hands of the Queen Victoria Memorial Fund Committee, and therefore its President, Sir George Edward Knox, has asked for suggestions as to how this sum should be utilized. In the letter addressed by him on the subject, Sir George says,—"It has been suggested that these balances could not be more suitably applied than by devoting them as the nucleus of a fund for the foundation of medical scholarships to be held by women in these provinces." Whatever may be the merits or demerits of this particular suggestion, nobody can quarrel with the President for having mentioned it in his letter. But we do strongly object to its having been put forward as a suggestion which has met with the approval of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor. Sir George Knox knows it as well as we do, that many people will not be found in these Provinces who will have the courage to oppose a proposal which has emanated from high quarters, more especially when it has the approval of the head of the Government to add weight and authority to it. Such a proposal will unfortunately be regarded by many in the light of an order which has to be meekly carried out. If the real feelings and opinions of the gentlemen communicated with were to be obtained, they ought to have been left free to fully and frankly express them, without being hampered in any way. We may say that we approve of it, because we think that Queen Victoria's name cannot be connected with a better and more useful movement than the training of women in the art of medical relief to the distressed and miserable women. We know that the Dufferin Hospitals are doing an amount of good work and they require to be strengthened and their work extended, and this can be done by increasing the number of women fully trained in the art of healing. We are going to have a medical college for women, to which girls can be only attracted by the grant of scholarships, and we would be glad if money be devoted to this purpose. But as difference of opinion is possible there may be earnest men who may think that it will not meet with the wishes of the vast majority of those from whose pockets the money has come. In view of these differences of opinion we should direct our attention to other objects of equal, if not greater, importance. The utility of technical education is recognised by the Government and the people alike; why not devote this sum to the awarding of scholarships to those deserving students who may be willing to go to Japan or to any other foreign country for the purpose of receiving such education? Or we may try to save some of those unfortunate children whom every famine or plague leaves as orphans to the tender mercies of the missionaries. A provincial orphanage may be founded at some central place ; and what other institution can with greater appropriateness be associated with the name of Victoria, the Good ? It is true that with the funds at our disposal only a small beginning is possible, but who does not know that many great things in this world have had small beginnings ? Another useful idea would be to build a University museum which would help students in the study of biology and geology, &c. The University of Allahabad is soon to have a library of its own, and it would be greatly increasing its usefulness if we could add a museum to it. Of late there has been a good deal of talk about reforming the Universities and the result of it has been the thrusting down our unwilling throats the Universities Act with the solemn assurance that it would purify and invigorate our entire educational system. We believe the cause of real education is advanced, among other things, by founding libraries and building museums and not by officialising the Universities. If none of the above suggestions be accepted, we venture to make one more. The poverty of our vernaculars is deplored by every one who has given any serious thought to the educational problem in this country. Look to Japan where the Universities teach their alumni all the subjects in the language of the country. There does not seem to be a chance within any measurable distance of time of English becoming the medium of instruction for the vast majority of the people. Perforce, they will have to be taught through the medium of the vernaculars. Is it not then our duty to make every possible effort to enrich our vernacular ? Let a few fellowships be given to graduates who may be required to translate scientific works in the vernacular of the Province. In the space of a few short years we are confident a valuable addition will be made to our literature.

We have made the above suggestions in the hope that they will receive the consideration of the Committee before any decision is arrived at. The decision will of course rest with the Committee. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will, we hope, be pleased to consider these and other proposals that will come up before him for consideration. The suggestion of the scholarships is excellent in itself, but if the desire be that the funds collected for the Queen Victoria Memorial be kept separate from the Medical College movement, then one of the few proposals hinted by us can be adopted, and thus besides the statue that will remind us of the great Sovereign, there will be, however humble it may be, some memorial of an utilitarian nature which will keep the memory of the deceased Queen ever green in our minds.

RAHBAR,
14th March, 1906.

Alleged unjust sentence of imprisonment passed on a native clerk on the complaint of Mr. Leake, Superintendent, Saharanpur Botanical Gardens.

8. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th March, referring to the case in which one Babu Amrit Lal, Head Clerk in the office of the Saharanpur Botanical Gardens, was lately sentenced by the Magistrate to three months' imprisonment on the charge of assaulting Mr. Leake, Superintendent of the Gardens, says that without the least regard to the fact that the Babu himself had received a good beating resulting in the loss of a tooth and bleeding from the nose and eyes, the Magistrate punished the innocent native on the ground that a clerk's assaulting his superior officer was a serious offence. It was nothing but racial prejudice that prevented the Magistrate from dismissing the complaint preferred by Mr. Leake against his clerk. A more flagrant case of injustice can hardly be imagined. It is to be hoped that the High Court (on appeal or revision) will do justice in the case.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th March, 1906.

Alleged assault, in a railway carriage, on a European gentleman by an Afghan.

9. The Rohilkhand Gazatte (Bareilly), of the 16th March, has heard that while an Afghan and a European gentleman were travelling together first class from Saharanpur, the European finding the Afghan asleep threw the latter's golden cap out of the carriage for fun. When the Afghan awoke and found his cap missing, he was much annoyed but kept quiet. Some time after when the European taking off his clothes went into the bath-room, the Afghan saw his opportunity and flung all his clothes, &c. out of the carriage. After taking his bath the European gentleman returned and inquired about his clothes from the Afghan, and he was told that they had gone in search of the latter's cap. The European was naturally very angry, but considering discretion the better part of valour, contented himself by wiring to the last station for his missing things. The Afghan thinking that the telegram despatched was a complaint against himself, threw the European gentleman bodily out of the carriage while the train was in motion. The ultimate result is not yet known.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th March, 1906.

An ekka driver beaten to death by some native sepoys at Allahabad.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th March, says:—About two weeks ago an ekkawala was so severely assaulted by some native sepoys in undress in Katra that the man died shortly afterwards. There was some altercation about the man's fare, and then a number of sepoys fell upon him and struck him repeatedly with fists and kicks till he fell down and became insensible. The whole affair was witnessed by a crowd of people, but no one ventured to interfere. The later stages of the case are shrouded in mystery. It is not known, for instance, whether the injured man was taken to the hospital, and, if so, whether a post mortem examination was held, and what was the verdict. It is tolerably certain that no arrests were made. It is not known whether the police made any report, and if so, what report. When it is remembered that the assault took place in broad daylight, in the presence of a number of people, the mildest man will own to a feeling of indignant surprise that no attempt has been made to bring the offenders to justice. Perhaps it was not a case of murder, and the assailants had no intention of doing the unfortunate ekka driver to death. But that is obviously a matter for a court of justice to determine. What we are concerned with are the glaring facts that have transpired. A man engaged in a peaceful and useful occupation is involved in a quarrel with some other men. He is assaulted so severely that he dies of his injuries. There were no marks of external violence, and in any case a post mortem examination should have been held. But the entire incident is allowed to pass as of no unusual consequence. If, as we are led to suppose, the affair has been allowed to pass without notice, there should be no difficulty in fixing the original responsibility. We are aware that the pulse of public opinion beats very feebly in our Provinces; but it appears monstrous that there should pass unnoticed such a grave dereliction of duty in the heart of the first city in the United Provinces, almost within sight of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor himself.

RAJPUT,
14th March, 1906.

Female Education in the United Provinces.

11. The Rájput (Agra), of the 14th March, referring to the letter of the Local Government recently published in reply to that of the Director of Public Instruction, submitting proposals for carrying out the suggestions of the Committee appointed last year to report on the steps to be taken for the advancement of female education, and approving of the Committee's suggestions, expresses a hope that the Government will carry them out (in their entirety) as soon as it finds means to do so. The smaller measures proposed to be carried out at once are not likely to prove popular, the teaching of girls in classes attached to boys' schools and the employment of male teachers for the purpose being open to serious objection. Respectable classes will not be prepared to give education to their girls, until separate zanana schools with suitable parda arrangements are established, and high caste female teachers are engaged.

AL BASHIR,
20th March, 1906.

The memorial submitted by certain residents of Sitapur to the Director of Public Instruction suggesting certain reforms in the curricula for Anglo-Vernacular Schools in the United Provinces.

12. A correspondent of Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 20th March, referring to the memorial which certain residents of Sitapur lately submitted to the Director of Public Instruction, suggesting the need of certain reforms in the curricula prescribed for Anglo-Vernacular Schools in the United Provinces, says that, seeing a considerable portion of the memorial is devoted to pointing out the unsuitability of the Urdu text books, this is a fresh attempt made in a disguised form to injure Urdu. The advocates of Hindi have continuously been doing all in their power to promote the cause of that language. They have already succeeded in driving Persian out of the schools, secured recognition of the Nagri character in the law courts along with the Persian, and their most recent action is to get the Urdu curriculum first reduced in, and then driven out of schools altogether in the end. It is to be greatly regretted that the Musalmans look on all these efforts of the Hindus, on behalf of Hindi, with equanimity and unconcern. What ails the writer, however, most in connection with the memorial is that it should have been signed by a Musalman barrister as well; and he strongly advises the Musalmans to give the matter a serious consideration and take speedy steps to counteract the efforts repeatedly made by the Hindus to undermine Urdu.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,
16th March, 1906.

Alleged dismissal of the late editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette for his advocacy of the Swadeshi movement.

13. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th March, referring to the alleged dismissal of the late editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette for writing an article in support of the Swadeshi movement in that paper, says that this is the first instance of a man suffering for his advocacy of Swadeshism in these Provinces. This at least shows that the people in this part of the country also are prepared to cheerfully endure some loss or inconvenience in the cause of the movement.

SAHIFA,
19th March, 1906.

The Swadeshi agitation of the Bengalis.

14. A correspondent of the Sahífa (Bijnor), of the 19th March, while not disapproving of Swadeshism, urges that it is folly on the part of the Bengalis to assault the principal of a college, stop the carriage of a magistrate, blacken the face of a doctor, or do similar other objectionable things, in their excessive zeal of the advocacy of the Swadeshi movement. For all this is calculated to make the Government distrust the Bengalis, and adopt some stringent measures to put down their agitation carried to absurd limits.

19th March, 1906.

An appeal to Indians to zealously promote the cause of the Swadeshi movement.

15. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 19th March, says now that it is beyond doubt that Government is not only not opposed to the Swadeshi movement, but is also willing to patronize Indian arts and industries so as to be able to purchase all its needed stores in this country itself, Indians ought to show more zeal in the cause of the movement than they have hitherto done.

BHARAT JIWAN,
20th March, 1906.

Swadeshism.

16. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 20th March, referring to the speech made by Mrs. Besant at the anniversary meeting of the Boarders' Union Club of the Central Hindu College, Benares, agrees with her in thinking that the best and easiest means for the Indians to ameliorate their present condition is to exclusively use home-made manufactures.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,
16th March, 1906.

The Awázah-i-Khalq on the renewal of the anti-Partition agitation in Bengal.

17. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th March, referring to the renewal of the anti-Partition agitation in Bengal on account of Mr. Morley's refusal to interfere with the Partition of that province, says that it was unwise on the part of the Bengalis to build any high hopes on the appointment of the Liberal Ministry in England, Liberals and Conservatives being both alike so far as the Indian interests are concerned; and advises them to desist from further useless agitation, and strive to carry out those practical measures which they consider best for improving the condition of their country.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th March, 1906.

Renewal of the anti-Partition agitation in Bengal.

18. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th March, says that the refusal of Mr. Morley to interfere with the Partition of Bengal on the ground of its being an accomplished fact, has given the anti-Partition agitation a fresh lease of life. A crowded meeting was recently held on the College Square at Calcutta, with Mr. Surendranath Banerji in the chair. Both Hindus and Musalmans, who attended the meeting, took fresh pledges not to use foreign articles and to carry on the agitation. A big fire was kindled and a lot of foreign articles were thrown into it and reduced to ashes.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th March, 1906.

The Nizám-ul-Mulk on the attitude of Government towards the anti-Partition agitation in Bengal.

19. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th March, disapproving of the harsh measures adopted by the Government of Bengal (for suppressing the anti-Partition agitation) as disclosed by the Bengal and the Punjab Press, observes that such measures can have the only effect of intensifying the feeling of disaffection among the people towards the Government. Lenient and sympathetic treatment would prove more successful in allaying the popular excitement; and the Government of India, which has hitherto looked upon the affair with singular indifference and unconcern, ought to interfere.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
20th March, 1906.

The anti-Partition meetings recently held at Calcutta, and the Musalmans.

20. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 20th March, referring to the twenty meetings which were recently held simultaneously at Calcutta to protest against Mr. Morley's refusal to interfere with the Partition of Bengal, and to take fresh pledges to carry on the anti-Partition agitation and the Swadeshi movement, says that these meetings no doubt proved unity among the Bengalis, but that it was hardly wise on their part to burn a lot of foreign articles, as they did on the occasion, especially at this time when famine is causing so much distress among the people in other parts of the country. The writer is, however, glad to notice that though the names of some Musalmans appear among the speakers at some of the meetings in question, the Musalmans, as a body, kept aloof, and not a single recognized leader of their community took part in them.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd March, 1906.

Comments on the Pioneer's remarks on Mr. Morley's speech at the debate on the Partition of Bengal in Parliament.

21. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd March, says:—To say that Reuter's telegraphic summary of Mr. Morley's speech on the debate on the Partition of Bengal was misleading would be to give a feeble idea of the shock of surprise with which the full text of his speech has been received in this country. To the people of the country the shock is of a pleasant kind; to others it is the reverse. Mr. John Morley did not offer to re-open the question, but he did not minimise the importance of the agitation either. He said emphatically that the partition "was and remains undoubtedly an administrative operation which went wholly and decisively against the wishes of the people most concerned."

* * * * * * *

The Pioneer twits Mr. Morley with having derived his knowledge of India from the publications of the National Congress, and winds up by saying "any real and substantial grievance would have left a far more permanent impression." The entire paragraph in the Pioneer has a strong flavour of Lord Curzon's manner when he attempted to discredit the agitation while he went on the stump in East Bengal. Was the agitation shallow and artificial when all district officers in Bengal and East Bengal were frankly of opinion that the situation was a grave one and the people were excited beyond measure? Was not the boycott a real thing and did it not fail because it was economically unsound? What sort of permanent impression can any agitation leave unless there is a resort to violence, or to a constitutional upheaval which is not possible in this country? In England such an agitation would have driven the Government out of office; in India no agitation can do so, and there can be no question of violence where the possession of a penknife is an offence against the law of the land. Nevertheless, the agitation, "shallow and artificial" as it was, created such a panic that the Government let loose armed Gurkhas among the population, the police harried public meetings, district authorities enrolled special constables, and boys were arrested for shouting Bande Mataram. As to knowing India the publications of the National Congress afford a better source of knowledge than the columns of the Pioneer, or the rhetorical diatribes of Lord Curzon, and Mr. John Morley is a student whose knowledge and judgment are both reliable.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd March, 1906.

Adverse comments on Sir Bampfylde Fuller's administration of East Bengal.

22. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd March, says:—During the period Sir Bampfylde Fuller has been Lieutenant-Governor of East Bengal he has proved himself to be lacking in almost every quality that an administrator should possess, but in nothing so much as in the sense of dignity. He has been miscalling things and men in a most outrageous fashion, besides openly terrorising the people. If the partition of Bengal has been unfortunate, the choice of the first Lieutenant-Governor of the new province has been still more unfortunate. If he has taken Lord Curzon for an example he is only a sorry imitation. Things have gone very much worse in East Bengal chiefly on account of the Lieutenant-Governor himself. And it seems there is no end to his indiscretion. According to the latest reports he has been taking the Vice-President of the Serajganj Municipality to task for not giving him a fitting reception. It seems an evidence of such a small mind—all that one hears of this wonderful Lieutenant-Governor—that we wonder the Government of India does not put an end at least to the absurdities of which Sir Bampfylde Fuller permits himself to be guilty. The Serajganj Municipality is to be punished by being reduced to the status of a nominated body. The actual offenders, however, cannot be always punished by even the indignant Lieutenant-Governor. For the fault of the individual, however, he is prepared to punish the institution, and it may be well questioned whether a man with such a temperament is fit to be an administrator. While professing to put down the agitation in East Bengal with a high hand, the Lieutenant-Governor is covering himself with ridicule.

SIPAHI,
13th MARCH,
1906.

The Imperial Cadet Corps, and the Government.

23. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 13th March, says that the members of the Imperial Cadet Corps who have all descended from Rajput Royal families should not be employed only as escort of Viceroys or Royalty on grand occasions as they lately have been, but that their services should be utilized to nobler and more useful purposes for which they were originally intended. Again, during his late inspection of the Corps at Calcutta, Lord Minto shook hands with only four of the members of that body, who were tilak dháris (chiefs of states ?) and not with the rest: the impression produced on the minds of the people by the (invidious) distinction made by His Excellency could not have been, the writer is afraid, a good one. Government ought to be very careful in the treatment it accords to the Corps.

RAHBAR,
14th March, 1906.

Respectable classes, and the Arms Act.

24. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th March, says that the rigorous enforcement of the provisions of the Arms Act hardly tends to diminish the number of offences as is imagined by Government. The frequency of crimes like theft, robbery and murder, clearly shows that bad characters have arms in their possession in spite of the Arms Act. It is the well-behaved and respectable classes only who are practically deprived of the use of arms and are consequently unable to protect themselves against ruffians. Only a short time ago a daring dakaiti was perpetrated in muhalla Qánungoyán at Moradabad in which the dakaits used much violence in compelling the females to surrender their jewellery. A respectable resident of the above muhalla lately applied for a license to keep a revolver (or pistol) for self-defence,' but his request was refused.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th March, 1906.

Alleged haughty and unsympathetic attitude of Anglo-Indians in general towards natives.

25. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Barielly), of the 16th March, states that European officers in India endowed with humane qualities and a strong sense of justice are few and far between. This miscroscopic minority commands the respect and willing obedience of the Indian public and is a potent factor in strengthening the foundation of the British Indian Empire. But unfortunately the vast majority of Anglo-Indians are haughty and unsympathetic. They are better adepts in kicking poor native coolies to death than in dealing gently with the people of the country they are sent out to govern. A native witness some time ago was taken to task for omitting, in the course of his examination, in court to use the word "sahib" after the name of the District Superintendent of Police; but on the other hand the two European soldiers who behaved most insolently towards a native Judge sitting in court at Agra were let off quite easily. Matters like these are certainly not calculated to infuse a sense of loyalty and devotion to the British Government in the Indian minds.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th March, 1906.

Alleged lack of patriotism and public spirit among the Indians.

26. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th March, echoing the Hindustáni in deploring the decline of national spirit and patriotism among the natives of India, observes that while persons belonging to a nation wanting in patriotism and self-respect are liable to be insulted and even ill-treated with impunity by men of other nationalities, an individual of any of the advanced nations, whether of the East or of the West, is perfectly safe from any such treatment even in the remotest parts of the globe, because his whole nation is at his back ready and willing to take up his cause in case of need. So long as the Indians do not acquire knowledge and wealth, and possess the noble qualities of liberality, manliness and patriotism, they cannot expect to meet with becoming treatment at the hands of other peoples.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th March, 1906.

The begár system in the United Provinces.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th March, says:—The inconsiderable service that we have been able to render in connection with the begár system in Allahabad is not such as will be taken into account by our many disinterested friends, but we trust the public will bear in mind that the removal of a hardship, no matter how humble the class whom it affects, is only possible through such imperfect medium as a public newspaper affords. When we first took up the cause of the carpenters in Allahabad several influential friends advised us to give it up as agitation would do no good. Begár, they said, had been going on for all time and would be carried on in spite of all protests. They were wrong as the event has proved. Tahsil peons have ceased troubling the carpenters and have even paid them their back wages. The authorities must be thanked for the action they have taken. But we are perfectly aware that the begár system is rife in the mufassil. May we venture to appeal to our readers and the general public to bring all such cases to our notice, with full details? For one hardship that has been removed there are a hundred to which attention has not been directed, and we hope our readers and friends will help us in dealing with them. Our first duty is to our poorer countrymen, the men who toil and suffer and whose mouths are closed. Let every one of us do what we can to help them with voice and sympathy.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th March, 1906.

Gambling in opium speculations at Agra.

28. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 19th March, urging that the gambling in opium speculations has ruined many, and led to a large increase in crime at Agra at present, suggests that the evil practice should be stopped by the District Magistrate.

BHARAT JIWAN,
19th March, 1906.

Comments on Lord Kitchener's Army Redistribution scheme.

29. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 19th March, regrets that 16 crores of rupees are to be spent on Lord Kitchener's scheme for fortifying the North-Western frontier of India against the bugbear of a Russian invasion. It is difficult to conceive that Russia can even now, after her late serious defeat at the hands of the Japanese, be thinking of invading India. It is a great pity that such a large amount of hard-earned money taken from the poor Indians who have been suffering so much from plague, famine and other calamities, should be spent on a scheme founded on a false fear, and not in relieving the distress, and otherwise promoting the well-being of the people. The Indians are certainly an unfortunate people; and it is now quite clear that they can hope for no beneficial measure from Government, but must entirely depend upon their own exertions to improve their condition.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd March, 1906.

Proposed establishment of a British Indian Association in the Province of Agra.

30. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd March, says:—We do not know whether public attention has been drawn to the proposal made by Raja Shivanath Sinha in the Pioneer for the formation of a British Indian Association of Agra on the same lines as the Oudh Association. He further suggests that the Maharaja of Benares and the Hon. Munshi Madho Lal should respectively be elected President and Vice-President of the Association. This suggestion should serve as an eye-opener for the leaders of public opinion in these Provinces. The British Indian Association of Oudh was established on the lines of the public body of that name in Calcutta. As long as the late Raja Dakhina Ranjan Mukerji was living, the Oudh Association did some useful work, but at present its usefulness is chiefly confined to the presentation of addresses to eminent officials. Still, the existence of a public body is always a great advantage, for whenever an energetic leader of thought appears among the Oudh Talukdars he can make use of the British Indian Association to some purpose. Zamíndárs have a community of interest, and it is not difficult to get them to act in concert on emergency, or for a common object. If a Landholders' Association is formed in the Province of Agra the position of the middle classes, with a complete absence of solidarity, will be worse than at present. A serious and earnest effort should be made at this juncture to establish an association representative of the different interests in both Provinces, for there is no popular representation even in Oudh. People complain here of the dulness and flatness of things in general, but what is to blame when there is nothing doing, no organised public opinion, and no interest in public measures and affairs? Great ideas are in the air, and great schemes are on the tapis, but the first essential is associated effort and organised endeavour. The suggestion that has been thrown out in the interest of the landed class should be availed of first by the educated community, for their burden is a heavy one. How long are we to bear the reproach that lies upon us, that in these Provinces of all places in India there is an appalling indifference to the public interest, and an inertia which nothing seems to overcome.

ADVOCATE,
22nd March, 1906.

Adulteration of pure Indian cane sugar with foreign beet and other inferior sugars.

31. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd March, says:—We see and hear so much of Swadeshism from the newspapers and utterings of orators and politicians that I would fain draw the attention of real patriots to the many ways in which the movement designed for the benefit of our country is being used by unscrupulous merchants to enrich themselves.

I am a commercial traveller and sugar broker and travel all over India in the interest of my trade and my opinions are backed up by friends in the same calling. So I can prove my statements word for word.

Indian sugar more than any other Indian product has had for years and is still having a hard struggle for mere existence against bounty-supported and Government-aided foreign sugars made from beet and other deleterious substances refined by bone, charcoal and similar methods.

It is sufficiently disheartening to see 999 halwais out of every 1,000 using these foreign sugars because of their cheap price whereby larger profits can be made out of their ignorant customers. But when this selfsame charcoal-made beet sugar is openly ground up in ordinary stone mills, mixed with about one-tenth portion of its weight of native putri and molasses to make it rather sweeter and less whiter than the original charcoal-refined beet, and this ingenious concoction sold as pure country sugar, surely it is time to think of the consequences.

Is there no means, Sir, of stopping this swindle? for call it by any other name it is nothing else.

Let sugar merchants and dealers sell this foreign rubbish openly if they are to sell it at all, but not under the cloak of pure Indian-made sugar. Otherwise it will only be the question of a few years when our country sugar industry will be finally crushed out and thousands of crores of rupees will be paid every year to foreigners for sugar which used to be made in India.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th March, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

32. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th March, states that from personal experience the editor has found that the licensed porters at the junctions of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway demand higher wages than the very fair remuneration of six pies per bundle fixed by the railway authorities. The Brahmans who supply drinking water to passengers at the Lucknow Junction insist on the payment of one pice by every passenger to whom they supply water. If these men are in the employ of the railway they have no right to demand remuneration from the passengers, but if they are not, they ought not to be allowed to come on the platform. A voluntary tip of one pice to one who supplies water may not be burdensome on passengers, but the insistance on payment is vexatious. Another abuse at the Lucknow station is that every ekka driver who brings his ekka within the precincts of the station has to pay one pice per trip to the Railway jamadar employed to look after the ekkas. If this is a demand authorised by the Railway authorities, it is certainly unjust and ought to be discontinued ; if it is unauthorised, the railway authorities would do well to inquire into the matter and put a stop to it.

RAHBAR,
14th March, 1906.

Objection taken to the proposed erection of a church in memory of the officers and soldiers killed in the Burmese War.

33. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th March, referring to the proposed erection by Government of a church at the cost of Rs. 1,03,000 in memory of the officers and soldiers killed in Burma (during the Burmese War ?) says that the scheme is not in accord with the professed attitude of Government's religious neutrality. Could not a form of memorial tending to benefit all classes of the community alike be more appropriately devised ?

ARYA MITRA,
16th March, 1906.

Complaint against the annual sacrifice of animals made by Hindus in certain public streets at Agra.

34. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th March, says, that while under the existing rules of the British Government sacrifices of animals can take place only in a temple or private house, and not in a public street, the Hindus are allowed to freely sacrifice young buffaloes, in honour of the Kiraoli goddess, in the open streets of Agra from the cross-road at Nái Mandi to Shahganj, and thence to the temple of Prithvi Nath Mahadeo, on the 11th of the dark fortnight of the Hindu month Chait, which falls this year on the 20th March. This practice is very offensive to non-flesh eating Hindus, and being against the rules, the authorities would do well to stop it.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th March, 1906.

The late Muharram at Allahabad.

35. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th March, says :—On the night preceding the last day of the Muharram, known as Katal ki rát, it is the practice everywhere to carry the tázias in procession round the city to the accompaniment of music. Stick and sword play and other displays also accompany the processions, each one of which is kept in order by a number of policemen in charge. On the last day the tázias are immersed in the river, or some other place appointed for the purpose, and the Muharram comes to an end. During the last Muharram at Allahabad, we understand, the music on the Katal ki rát was forbidden by the Collector in Colonelganj and Katra. We do not yet know whether the order was absolute or qualified, whether the processions were forbidden, or whether only certain portions of the city were closed against the processionists. In any case, the upshot was that the Muhammadans residing in Colonelganj and Katra refused to lift or carry their tázias, which are all kept at the places where they were constructed. There has been no disturbance, or demonstration of any kind, but the tázias were not carried to their final resting-place, and consequently the matter cannot be regarded as having been closed. On the fortieth day after the Muharram there is another ceremony, when, if the present deadlock can be smoothed over, the tázias will be carried and thrown at the place appointed. We think it is absolutely necessary for the Local Government to make an enquiry into the whole matter in order to find out whether our Muhammadan fellow-citizens have any cause of complaint or not, and whether their grievance is a just one. It is to their credit that they have shown no disposition to display any violence, or to bring themselves into conflict with the authorities. We think this fact should be taken into consideration in coming to a final decision on the matter. The exact text of the Collector's order must be ascertained. We are given to understand, however, that he gave permission for the music to be played up to 10 P. M., after which it was to be stopped. There are some stories current about the reasons that prompted this order, but we prefer making no reference to them pending further inquiry. What we are assured of is that there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace, no complaint from any section of the Muhammadans or their neighbours, and that no sufficient reason whatever was assigned for stopping the music. As a matter of fact, the processionists had no information of any kind till the Collector came up himself and ordered the music to be stopped at 10 P. M. No proceedings of any kind were instituted, they were not called upon to show cause, or given an opportunity of defending themselves. It was an executive order issued at about the time the tázias were about to be lifted and carried in procession. On the facts that are available up to the present we are persuaded that the right of worship has been interfered with, and without justification. We are as jealous of the right of worship of our Muhammadan fellow-subjects as of Hindus, and the Muhammadans of Allahabad will have our earnest co-operation in resorting to every constitutional means for redressing their grievance.

Disapproval of the Government of India's alleged intention to make it compulsory on Mecca pilgrims to buy return tickets.

SAHIFA,
19th March, 1906.

36. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th March, stating that the Government of India contemplates making it compulsory on all pilgrims bound for Mecca to buy return tickets before they embark from India, says that a number of pious Musalmans go to Mecca with the intention of permanently settling there, and many more die in the pilgrimage. The measure which Government intends to adopt can therefore hardly be said to be justified. Besides, the measure would be regarded by the Muhammadan masses as an interference with the performance of a religious duty.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th March, 1906.

Turkey, and the European Powers.

1. THE Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 28th March, referring to the attitude which the Porte adopted towards the late demands of the European Powers re Macedonian affairs, and that of the Belgium Government regarding the expatriation of a certain (Turkish) offender, says that the Sultan has evidently now changed his policy, and means no longer to yield to the European Powers in every matter. Recently England has asked Turkey to remove her troops from Akaba (in the Sinaitic Peninsula), on the ground of its being a part of the Egyptian dominion; but the Sultan has refused to comply, boldly asserting that Egypt is under his suzerainty, and no foreign Power has right to interfere.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th March, 1906.

A prayer to the Prince of Wales to speak to the King-Emperor on behalf of India.

2. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 26th March, referring to the speech which the Prince of Wales made at Karachi on the eve of his departure from India, says this speech would seem to show that His Royal Highness has learnt something of the true condition of the poor people of this country. If so, the editor would earnestly pray His Royal Highness to induce the King-Emperor, his father, to ask his new ministry to deal with India justly and generously.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th March, 1906.

Regret expressed at no special concession having been made to India in honour of the late visit of the Prince of Wales.

3. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th March, is greatly disappointed to find that no special concession has been made to the Indians in honour of the late visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to this country. The Indians should, however, think themselves fortunate that the Prince of Wales has evidently carried with him a good impression of their loyalty and of the hearty reception they accorded to him everywhere.

CITIZEN,
26th March, 1906.

Contrast between the Royal visit paid to the Muhammadan College at Aligarh and that to the Central Hindu College at Benares.

4. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th March, says:—There has been some heart-burning in certain quarters in the United Provinces by the greater importance given to the Aligarh College compared with the Central Hindu College of Benares in the Royal tour. The Prince paid only a flying visit to the latter and received the address of welcome in the quadrangle without leaving his motor. His Royal Highness could not spare time to look at the new handsome range of buildings, see class work, or inspect any of the special features of the institution. At the Aligarh College, however, His Royal Highness spent no less than four or five hours, and went minutely into everything. Of course, the Prince would have been only too glad to show the same amount of favour, so to say, to the Benares as he had done to the Aligarh institution. But those who had the ordering of the tour were tactless enough to make such an invidious distinction.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th March,
1906.

The Prince of Wales' farewell to India.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th March, says :—We earnestly hope the farewell letter addressed by the Prince of Wales to the Viceroy will be carefully read and pondered over. We think it is one of the most remarkable communications ever penned, and bears a stamp of earnestness and sincerity which there is no mistaking. A few extracts from this impressive letter are worth bearing in mind. Of his tour the Prince says, "the feature which most profoundly impressed us was the spontaneous and affectionate enthusiasm of the thousands and hundreds of thousands who have welcomed us and made us feel at home in our progress through India ...... We are both genuinely sorry that our visit to India has come to an end. We shall never forget the affectionate greetings of India and Burma. Everywhere we found the same loving regard for the late Queen-Empress, the same loyal devotion to my dear father and the same kind and enthusiastic welcome to ourselves. So long as we live we shall remember India with feelings of warm gratitude and sympathy ... We wish for the Indian people immunity from famine and pestilence, steady progress in agriculture and industries and a safe and natural advance in social conditions." This is very gratifying, but will the sympathy of the Prince help the people of India in any way? The people will remain where they are so far as the Government is concerned, though they have the best wishes of the Prince.

ADVOCATE,
25th March, 1906.

Non-representation of the Central Provinces on the Viceroy's Council.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th March, says:—It has become a practice that the suggestions of non-official Members on the Financial Statement are taken into consideration in order to affect the Statement, if at all this is done, fully one year after they are made. But Mr. Gokhale's suggestion about the right of electing the non-official Member of the Supreme Council for the Central Provinces should be acted upon without much delay, if the Government really consults its own good name. We know for certain that the first Member was elected by the people and then nominated. This power of election was curtailed for reasons best known to the Government, and the system of nomination followed for the following terms. The Provincial Conference in its sittings last year at Nagpur seriously complained about this, and the Indian National Congress made reference to it. But the Government instead of giving the right of election to the people has from this term deprived them of what little remained with them, and the Hon'ble Mr. Richards takes away even the right of representation whether by election or nomination. Does it really mean that the Government of India, since Lord Curzon gave the impetus, is about to make a complete change in its attitude towards educated Indians, so as to kill the democratic tendency that is taking shape in their minds?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th March, 1906.

Question of the employment of Indian labour in the Transvaal.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th March, says:—As the employment of Chinese labour in the Rand and in the Transvaal is likely to be soon discontinued it has been proposed to substitute Indian labour for it. Some Indian experts have declared that Indian labour is not likely to be available for employment in South Africa, but independently of that fact we protest in the most emphatic manner against the emigration of Indian coolies to South Africa. The treatment of Indians in South Africa is such that no self-respecting Indian should stay a single day in that colony if he can help it. Merchants and Indian gentlemen are treated as pariahs and loafers in South Africa. Every Indian there is a cooly, nowise distinguishable from the aborigines of Africa. What will then the treatment meted out to real Indian coolies be like? We think the Government of India should resolutely set its face against the employment of Indian coolies in South Africa, and our own public bodies should take steps to acquaint the classes of people, likely to be tempted by such an offer, of the treatment that awaits them in that country. It has also been said that the climate will prove fatal to Indian labourers, and this is a fact to which due importance should be attached by the Government.

Prosecution of Shaikh Ali Husain, father of Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, at Rampur, and a suggestion for Government to appoint European Ministers in the Native States in future.

9. A correspondent of the Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 28th March, attributing all sorts of high-handed practices, dishonesty, favouritism, &c., to Indian Ministers in the Native States, in general, strongly urges upon Government to see that Europeans are appointed Ministers in the States in future, and thereby safeguard the life, liberty, &c. of the people there. As an instance of an egregious act of high-handedness on the part of the Minister of Rampur, the writer refers to the late prosecution of Shaikh Ali Husain, father of the notorious Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq at Rampur (vide articles Nos. 6 and 15, on pages 66 and 138 respectively, of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), and says that as there is no hope of justice being done to the accused even in the Session's Court, to which he has been committed to take his trial, the Government of Sir James Digges LaTouche should interfere, and have the case transferred to the Court of some European Magistrate in British territory.

Suggestion for providing a waiting-room for jurors and assessors in the new buildings to be constructed for the Civil Courts at Benares.

10. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 26th March, expressing satisfaction that the proposal to erect new buildings for the civil courts at Benares, which has been hanging fire for some years past, is soon to be carried out, suggests that the opportunity should be taken to provide accommodation where jurors and assessors may wait.

HINDUSTANI,

Certain suggestions regarding the appointment, &c. of assessors.

11. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 28th March, while approving of the system of appointing assessors to assist the Judges in the trial of sessions cases, says that the present rules re the appointment, &c., of the assessors are open to several objections, and should be amended. Firstly, tahsíldárs enter the names of men in the list of assessors without first satisfying themselves in any way as to whether the men are both physically and intellectually fit for the appointment or not, and without hearing their objections thereto, in case they have any. This is not satisfactory at all. A tahsildar should send for a man whom he proposes to nominate as assessor, and satisfy himself as to his fitness, &c., before he sends up his name for the appointment. Secondly, a person appointed assessor should be free to file his objection against his appointment any time, and not only on one day that may be fixed by the Judge and District Magistrate during the year for the purpose of hearing such objections. Care should also be taken that the latter date is not fixed on a religious festival or a public holiday. Thirdly, the maximum fine of Rs. 100 which can be imposed on an assessor for failing to attend the Sessions Court on the day he is summoned to do so, is too heavy and should be considerably reduced. Fourthly, an assessor who is ill may be allowed to submit a certificate from a local hakim or even from the zamíndár testifying to his illness, and not necessarily from a doctor as he is required to do at present. Fifthly, an assessor should be paid his actual expenses, whenever he is summoned to court, whether he is taken in or not. In conclusion, the writer suggests that it would be well if assessors were selected from among those persons only who know law. They should be paid whenever they are called to attend the court.

ADVOCATE,
29th March, 1906.

Need for improving the prospects of promotion of the clerks employed in the Civil Courts in the United Provinces.

12. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th March, says:—

The time has now arrived for the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court to attend to the inevitable necessity of reform in Civil Courts. The ministerial posts of a Civil Court quite unlike those of other Departments are not at all inviting. No good man would ever like to become a clerk or muharrir in Civil Courts. The simple and sole reason is that like other Departments there are no hard and fast rules protecting the interests and progress of the officials. A strange element can be introduced in any office at sweet will, there being no supervision. Merit is not appreciated, seniority in service is thrown to the winds when there is a protégé to be shown favour to. The field of Civil Court employés is restricted in one district only, i.e., the one in which he is employed, the result being that his progress is likewise restricted to one field only. Still the poor fellows are not sure of their progress in that one field even, because a recommendation may overthrow all the hopes and expectations, which are too limited, of the poor fellows. Compare the fate of Civil Court officials with those of Revenue and Criminal courts. One Commissionership comprises several districts, and the gradation list of all the officials employed in one Commissionership comprising several districts is one and the same. This would show the vastness of their field. Then there are hard and fast rules for the protection of their interest; and the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue have to look after the strict observance of the same. No strange element can be introduced at sweet will, no claims can be overlooked at pleasure and no favouritism can be given effect to. The cardinal principle of administration is to protect the interest of each and all of their dependents. It is therefore time (the Dupernex Scheme being on the tapis) the Hon'ble Judges should take the dispensation of the fate of their dependents into their own hands and order the maintenance of a gradation list of the officials in the regular line of all the districts in the High Court, and thereby let the Civil Court officials understand that they are not forlorn orphans and that somebody is watching over their interests. I doubt not the Hon'ble Judges would take the matter into consideration and make such rules as may seem proper to them and as may be sufficient to protect the interests of the poor Civil Court officials, and as may not allow their claims to be trampled down. The Judicial Commissioner has such control in Oudh.

Bad characters at Cawnpore.

13. The Cawnpore Gazette, (Cawnpore), of the 23rd March, complains that there is a number of bad characters at Cawnpore who possess no ostensible means of subsistence, but live by theft, robbery and other similar criminal means. A few days ago a person was attacked with lathis, and robbed of his necklace; while another man, a servant of a Mahajan, was similarly assaulted and relieved of Rs. 700. The local authorities would do well to take some effective steps to put a stop to the reign of terror which the bad characters have established at Cawnpore.

Rules for the appointment of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

14. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th March, says :—The rules framed by the Government for the Deputy Superintendentship ensure one thing, namely, that the nominees will be well educated gentlemen coming from respectable families, who, as time goes on, will be able to prove good District Superintendents of Police. We hope that the Departmental examination to which the candidates will be subjected will insist on the candidates passing an examination in the Law of Evidence and Criminal Laws. The Naib-Tahsildars and the Tahsildars, along with Inspectors of Police, will offer a wide field for nomination, and the rules when finally approved of will give to Government officers who will be in every way worthy of the new office and who, when justice is done to Indian claims, will afford a good field for the selection of Indian District Superintendents of Police.

Circulation of counterfeit coins in India.

15. The Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 24th March, states that as the new (King's) coins are much simpler in the details and design than the old (Queen's) coins, and can very easily be counterfeited, a large number of false rupees are at present found in circulation throughout India. The unwary public can hardly know a false from a genuine coin; and Government would do well to make the details of the coins more elaborate with a view to render their counterfeiting more difficult.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th March, 1906.

The Financial Statement of the Government of India for 1906-1907.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th March, says :—In the Financial Statement of the Hon'ble Mr. Baker the following sentences referring to the revised estimate for 1905-1906 are worthy of note :—"There was an increase of £272,300 under 'Political' mainly due to payments aggregating £241,200 on account of the subsidy of the Amir of Afghanistan with arrears. At the time the Budget was under preparation the negotiations with the Amir were still proceeding, and it was considered expedient to make no reference to the matter in the estimates." Innocent as these sentences evidently appear, they conceal a little world of mystery. It should be noted, in passing, that the allowance paid to the Amir is officially called a subsidy. The Afghans call it by a more expressive name. Then, there is some uncertainty about the actual amount paid to the Amir as subsidy. The Pioneer says it is 15 lakhs, but we are under the impression that it is 18 lakhs. Originally, the subsidy paid to the late Amir Abdur Rahman Khan was 12 lakhs, at the rate of a lakh a month. After the Durand Mission, which went to Kabul in 1893, the subsidy was raised by 6 lakhs, or Rs. 50,000 a month. According to this calculation the figure mentioned in the Budget, which represents a sum over 36 lakhs of rupees, would be the Amir's subsidy for two years, with arrears, or a small interest. Why did the subsidy get into arrears? What were the negotiations proceeding with the Amir, and what bearing did they have on the subsidy? These questions are calculated to excite curiosity, but there is no means of satisfying it, even if the dread of the Official Secrets Act did not hang over the curious and the enterprising. If previous Financial Statements are consulted, it will be found that no mention is anywhere made of the Amir's subsidy. It is always incorporated under the head of "Political" in the heads of expenditure. In the accounts of 1904-1905 Rs. 1,11,84,070 was the amount spent under this head by the Imperial Government, and Provincial and Local Governments spent Rs. 6,09,611. Details of this particular item of expenditure are neither given nor asked, though they would be more romantic than a sensational novel. Under the heads of revenue again, in the accounts of the same year, there is an item of Rs. 95,07,654 as tributes from Native States. Of this also no details are available, though there is no reason why the mystery that surrounds "political" expenditure should clothe this item of revenue. Will any venturesome Member of Council call for a statement giving the details of tributes from Native States?

The Indian Budget for 1906-07.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th March, in commenting upon the Indian Budget for 1906-07 observes:—For the year about to close it is a fact that the Local Governments have failed to spend in full the considerable sums assigned to them in the Budget. It means two things. The surprise kept in store for the public seems to affect the Local Governments as well who are thus unable to have schemes ready for the use of the grants made. The very fact that allotments are made shows that the need is great, but the Supreme Government takes the fact into consideration only when it is quite sure of its surplus. This is anything but a reasonable way of dealing with important problems, much less with a sympathetic attitude.

Protest against the entire Municipal printing work being done in the Government Press in the United Provinces.

18. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 23rd March, complains that, since the revised Municipal Account Code came into effect, the printing work of the municipalities in these Provinces has come to be done entirely in the Government Press, though it could be done much cheaper in the local presses. Surely the municipalities should be given the option to get their printing work done where they can have it done cheaper, and not necessarily in the Government Press. The Municipal money comes from the pockets of the people, and it should be spent as economically as possible.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th March, 1906.

Comments on a certain time-expired Municipal Commissioner not seeking re-election at the recent Municipal elections at Allahabad.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th March, says:—There was a time when Municipal elections produced some excitement, and the interest would have increased had the principles of Local Self-Government been really encouraged. In Calcutta it has been practically killed by the new Municipal Act, and no one of any distinction seeks a seat in the municipality. Hardly any ward was contested in the last election, which produced no interest. In Allahabad also there were some elections, but the best men usually keep out of the municipality, and a certain unpleasant incident last year ought to keep independent people away from the municipality. It was noticed, however, that at the last election a certain Municipal Commissioner did not offer himself for re-election, as he had incurred the intense displeasure of the rate-payers in connection with some committee work. That is something to record for a municipality like that of Allahabad, where elections are seldom contested. If this particular municipal Commissioner had come forward as a candidate he would have been stoutly opposed, and he prudently held aloof. It is now reported that he is likely to be nominated by the Government. A Municipal Commissioner who has been elected by the rate-payers should seek re-election if he wishes to keep his seat; if he is defeated, or does not seek re-election he should make way for others. If this late Municipal Commissioner is nominated by the Government simply because he succeeded in making himself particularly disagreeable to the rate-payers, the public will form its own opinion about the work of nominated Municipal Commissioners.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th March, 1906.

A case of alleged abuse of authority by the Cantonment Magistrate at Jullundar in the Punjab.

20. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th March, says:—A case of gross, and almost inhuman, abuse of authority is reported from Jullundar in the Punjab. A grandson of Lala Sheokaran Dás, a wealthy and respectable banker residing within Cantonment limits, was suffering from small-pox. An anonymous correspondent informed the Cantonment Magistrate of this fact. Thereupon that officer issued a notice that the child should be removed at once. Lala Sheokaran Dás appealed to the Cantonment Magistrate to give him 24 hours' time, and added that his house was clean and well kept and all possible precautions were being taken to prevent the danger of infection. He further invited the Sanitary Officer to come and inspect his house. The house was inspected and no fault was found with the sanitary arrangements. But the Cantonment Magistrate was obdurate and refused to accord Lala Sheokaran Das a hearing, or any extension of time. At night the police appeared at the house and threatened to remove the child forcibly unless he was taken away at once. The grandfather was thus compelled to remove the child to the house of a relation at night, and the patient died shortly afterwards. The powers within cantonment limits are more summary than within municipal limits, but we have seldom heard of a case in which they have been so inconsiderately and cruelly exercised. Even in cases of plague the order of removal has been done away with, and vaccination is believed to afford a reasonable immunity against small-pox. To remove a patient suffering from the disease is to expose him to almost certain death, and death did take place in this instance. Is there no one to call the Cantonment Magistrate to account for his inhuman severity and abuse of authority?

OUDH PUNCH,

Certain Municipal complaints at Lucknow.

21. A correspondent of the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 29th March, complains that muhalla Bhusa Mandi at Lucknow is generally very dirty, owing to the neglect of their duty by the sweepers concerned. The drain near the house of one Nawab Qaisar Mirza is very dangerous for carts and ekkas which, passing that way, as often as not fall into it, and are broken: the Municipal Board should put up a railing at the drain to prevent such accidents.

(e).—Education.

ADVOCATE,
25th March, 1906.

Need for spread of education in India.

22. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th March, says:—I have just returned to this country of distances, distress and disappointments, after a six months' sojourn in temperate climes, and I find that within even this short period of absence, many changes have taken place. We have the "Swadeshi" and the "bureaucracy" very much in evidence, to say nothing of other movements in different directions, some decidedly backward, and others impulsively forward, without a defined aim or object.

To begin with, the "Swadeshi," which apparently means "made in India," is in principle an excellent move in the right direction; but should be free from any bitter feeling of revenge, such as one would imagine it to be in its inception. What the people in this country of hopeless inertia and idleness require is hard and constant work; and if that is undertaken by themselves, for their own advancement and benefit, they should receive every encouragement and help from their rulers.

By help, let it not be understood substantial money advances, but help in education.

Let there be more schools of a polytechnic character, where simple courses of technical education would be brought within the reach of the rich and poor alike.

Stunting education is likely to do harm of a serious character in the future, therefore to regain lost ground, some such expedient becomes more and more imperative.

Some interesting leaders which recently appeared in the Pioneer refute the idea of the term bureaucratic being applicable to the Indian Government.

They may be right or wrong in a general way of arguing; but it is exceedingly difficult to define the characteristics of the Government as established in India by any other expression but autocratic, and bureaucratic. And though the manner in which these powers are handled may give them a savouring of representative Government, yet the wide and vast distinction in plain English must undoubtedly remain unanswerable. The bureaucratic character of our Government is recognized by all those Englishmen who after years of hard honest work in this dependency under that system, have retired to their well earned rest at home.

If no other form of Government is at present suited to the country, why fight shy of the only term which can be applied to it ?

Representative Government, if introduced after years of a staunch educational policy, will have some chance of being understood.

In the meantime, some relief might be given to the people, and especially to the agricultural classes by saving them from the oppression of their own people.

The Congress leaders are ready to malign the bureaucratic form of Government, but they entirely ignore the fact that it is their own countrymen, who, from the village chaukidár, the village patwari, and upwards, with of course many honourable exceptions, make a point of assuming powers which no Government ever granted to them, and each underling looks upon himself not as a servant of the public but as a little centre of Government. Such being the case brought about through the absolute ignorance of the people, no reform can take deep root until their minds are gradually trained to their true position by education on broad liberal lines. It cannot be denied that good and evil are so commingled that anything humanly conceived cannot be wholly good or wholly evil.

We live in an age when life is all absorbed in a feverish anxiety for material advancement. Arts and sciences have received an impetus which they never had in earlier centuries of civilisation. Contact and communication with the advanced nations of the world are now having, and are bound to have still more, their full effect on the Eastern peoples.

The first great Christian rulers of India foresaw all that is taking place to-day when colleges and universities were opened to educate the people to make them understand their true position among the nations of the world. If with the good some evil has crept in, it was unavoidable. The evil of discontent, for instance, was bound to come and education alone cannot be blamed for it where there is so little of it. It is heart-rending to see the old and the young, even a few miles out of busy centres of education and business in this country, steeped in ignorance and living a life which their forefathers did centuries ago. The same cut of garments, or none at all ; the same miserable shelter of a mud hut with its yard full of dirt and filth, to be an apology for a manure later on. The same solace from a dirty " hookkah " round the reeking fire of cowdung and rubbish when the day's work is done. For food, a coarse cake with " dal " or only salt to nourish the body. A talk on money, corn, or oppression, then to sleep on a heap of straw or tattered " charpoy " devoid of bedding, with very scanty covering, if any. This scene has been enacted year in, year out, with remorseless regularity, for centuries. Hope there is none Charity is still known to an extraordinary extent in their own way. Poor as they are, their little store of grain or corn is ever at the service of a poor brother in need of a meal.

They know that a day of want may come for them also, when their neighbour's help would be sought. So the exchange of help and kindness goes on without ceasing.

Education alone can effect a change for the better, and it should be brought within their reach. Government can do a good deal by giving the impetus, but nothing can be achieved without a whole-hearted co-operation of the people. Happily, signs of awakening of the educated classes to a sense of their responsibilities are faintly appearing on the horizon, and a public spirit has at last taken hold of the people. But the master mind is yet to arise to guide and focus that spirit into the right direction. A master mind again is useless unless it is mastered in its turn by overwhelming sympathies and accord from the ruling power. Most happily, signs of this too are not wanting, and one cannot fail to be touched by the sympathy expressed in His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's Resolution of the 12th January, which forecasts the future policy of Government at least as far as these Provinces are concerned.

That extended primary education will go hand in hand with every day education on broad statesmanlike lines is a desideratum.

General education cannot, however, be attempted unless the natural leaders of the people prepare a scheme for it, and approach Government with the request to give it effect.

Compulsory education should follow when the time is ripe for it. India's great need at the present moment is a whole-hearted loyal sympathy with the country and its people.

CITIZEN,
26th March, 1906.

Appointment of a Civilian as Director of Public Instruction in Bengal.

24. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th March, says :—There is occasion for the following humorous display of the Indian Daily News : "The appointment of Mr. Earle to the head of the Education Department is, we understand, only the commencement of a series of changes under which the versatility of the members of the Civil Service of India will be more thoroughly utilised. It is probable that on the retirement of Bishop Coplestone, which event must come sooner or later, that office will in future be reserved for retired Lieutenant-Governors who may have during their career developed extraordinary aptitude for Church work. The post of Principal of the Medical College will also in future be reserved for those of the Service who have shown an interest in medical research, and who from their detached position are consequently able to take a wider view of medicine than can be obtained by a mere specialist in that profession. India, in fact, must be more self-contained, and it should be possible indeed to provide a Commander-in-Chief, if necessity arises, from the ranks of the Civil Service. Some one said the other day that the Napoleon of the future would probably be a paralytic chessplayer carried to the field on a water-bed, and if that is so, it would no doubt be easy to select some senior member of the Service who would, in case Lord Kitchener was called away, see that our little or big wars were properly handled. Sir Andrew Fraser, it is understood, will put these views shortly before Mr. Morley, personally. It is possible that these changes may cause injustice to the Services, who have hitherto supplied these posts, but 'efficiency' is after all the legacy left to India by Lord Curzon."

Alleged causes of the constant recurrence of famines in India.

26. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th March, referring to the constant recurrence of famines in India, asks why it is that this dire calamity does not visit England—by no means an agricultural country—nor Ireland, nor even Afghanistan, the poorest country in the world. The reason is not far to seek. Let a continued drain of wealth that is carried on from India in various forms from year to year, be similarly carried on from England, say to Germany or America; let all the high and important appointments of the State in England be held, and the mines worked, by foreigners as is the case in India; and above all, let all the English arts and industries be destroyed as the Indian ones have been—let all this be done in England but for, say, 30 years, and then see if famine does not make its home in that country, as it has done in India.

ADVOCATE,
25th March 1906.

Famine relief measures in Bundelkhand.

27. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th March, says :—Some time ago we received complaints from Jalaun to the effect that the names of a number of pardanashin women were struck off the list of the distressed without giving any reason for doing so. Similar complaints have reached us from Konch, from where a correspondent tells us that the names of a number of men have been removed on the ground that they have relations to whom they can look for support. Now this is asking the blind to lead the blind. Are not the relations in distress, and who can force even well-to-do relations to take care of their starving brethren? The next complaint is that yet no arrangement has been made for fodder, and cattle in hundreds are being sold for no price and slaughtered for the sake of their hide. The spectacle is simply heart-rending. But if all the cattle are allowed to be destroyed, one is anxious to know what will happen in August and July? How will the cultivators till the soil? The people are not yet taking their cattle to the forests. We would ask the District Officers to either import fodder from neighbouring districts or take the cattle to the forests. Once the cattle are thus destroyed, no help and no grant can replace them. Something must be done in all seriousness to save the cattle from destruction. [The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 28th March, expresses the same views].

The Bengal Government and the cry of Bande Mataram.

RAHBAR,
21st March, 1906.

28. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st March, says that the measures which the Bengal authorities have been adopting to suppress the cry of Bande Mátaram, are quite improper, and do not become the Government at all. According to the Rais and Raiyat, a Bengali poet, named Bhim Chandra, wrote, during the Viceroyalty of Lord Mayo, a song which caused much more national excitement than Bande Mátaram does; but, instead of punishing the poet, for spreading disaffection among the people, Lord Minto simply called him to his presence, and after praising his song, politely asked him to alter certain objectionable lines therein, and he willingly did it. This incident shows what the difference is between the past and present British rulers of India.

Swadeshism, and its opponents.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th March, 1906.

29. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 27th March, referring to Mr. Chamberlain's strong advocacy of the imposition of an import tariff in England, asks the opponents of the Swadeshi movement to reflect and say why the Indians should not be held justified in seeking to patronize and promote their home manufactures, when the need of a similar measure is felt even in so rich a country as England. Surely those opposed to Swadeshism in India are short-sighted, and cannot see the noble and beneficial movement in its true light.

A suggestion for the Government of India and Provincial Governments to have an Indian Civilian as one of their Secretaries or Under Secretaries.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th March, 1906.

30. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th March, says:—I beg to bring to the notice of the Government of India an important and useful proposal, which, I hope, will receive the serious attention of the Government as well as the Indian press.

To study the wants and grievances of the people it is necessary that the head of the Government, i. e., the Viceroy, should have at least one Indian Secretary, call him Assistant Private Secretary or Under Secretary for Home and Foreign Affairs, who is selected from the Indian members of the Civil Service Commission.

We would further advocate that every Governor and Lieutenant-Governor should also have an Indian gentleman among their Principal Secretaries. Until this is done, the public will never feel that their views are represented to the heads of the Local Government or of the Supreme Government correctly and sympathetically. At present a few minor posts, such as Native A. D. C's., Personal Assistants or Mir Munshiships are held by native gentlemen, but their ranks and attainments are not of sufficient status to command due influence both with the Government and the public. And the failure of many of the measures of the Government can be attributed to its want of touch with the people.

What is wanted is that an Indian gentleman (be he a Muhammadan or a Hindu, be he a Bengali, Punjabi or Madrasi) should always be attached to each Government, whose view should be listened to with at least as much attention as those of the European Secretaries, and who should act as an adviser to the Government in matters affecting the real interests of the people.

If the Viceroy had one of our several young and successful native Civilians on his staff, he could help him in a hundred and one ways.

If a few Indian gentlemen (members of I. C. S. preferred) are sent at this time to Japan and China to study the languages of those countries and glean useful facts, they will come out far more successful in establishing the prestige of Government of India than half a dozen Tibet Missions.

Would the Indian Government come to realize that it has everything to gain and nothing to lose by sympathizing with, and encouraging the aims and ambitions of, young India, and by taking the educated Indians into confidence, make use of the material that has been neglected of late to advance the interests of the Indian Empire.

Let the Indian Government take a leaf out of the book of its friend the Nizam of Hyderabad. The latter has a man of an alien religion as his Prime Minister. Cannot the Viceroy appoint an England-returned Indian as one of his Secretaries, and cannot he ask the Local Governments and Administrators to do likewise? If Indians can come out first in Civil Service lists, and if they can make successful Magistrates and Collectors, surely they could be trusted to do the work of a Secretary and confidential adviser of Government equally satisfactorily.

OUDH AKHBAR,
23rd March, 1906.

Suggestion for constructing an embankment to protect the town of Jarwal, District Bahraich, from the encroachments of the Gogra.

31. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow) of the 23rd March, states that the Gogra, which some 12 years ago flowed at a distance of about 6 miles to the south of the town of Jarwal in the Bahraich district, has fast been changing its course towards the town, so that it now runs only at a distance of three miles on one side and of one mile on another, and it is feared that unless some effective step is taken to check the encroachments of the river, it will, in a few years hence, swallow up this town as well as it did another called Bahrámghát in times past. Government would therefore do well to erect an embankment some three miles in length, and thereby avert the impending calamity from the town.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th March, 1906.

Deplorable condition of the poorer classes in India.

32. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th March, regrets that while great efforts are being made at present to devise relief for the twenty thousand unemployed in England, neither the Government nor well-to-do Indians do anything to ameliorate the condition of the very large proportion of the thirty crores of the people, who have always to pass their lives on insufficient food. The condition of the Indians in general has especially been becoming worse, because the vast majority of them have to depend for their livelihood on agriculture, all indigenous arts and industries having almost been killed. But God helps those who help themselves; so that unless "we bestir ourselves to improve our condition, it is useless to expect others to help us."

AL AZIZ,
28th March, 1906.

Suggestion for the restoration of the tomb of one of the Begams of Akbar in Agra to its former condition

33. Al Azíz (Agra), of the 28th March, referring to the coming visit of Lord Minto to Agra on the 2nd April, tells His Lordship that if he visits Akbar's Mausoleum at Sikandra he will find the tomb of Miriam, one of that Emperor's Begams, lying in a very neglected condition within the compound of a missionary school in the neighbourhood of the said mausoleum, and asks him to have the memorable tomb repaired and restored to its former condition.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th March, 1906.

Sir James Digges LaTouche's administration contrasted with that of Sir Antony MacDonnell.

34. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th March, making a passing reference to the closing administration of Sir James Digges LaTouche, as contrasted with that of his predecessor, Sir Antony MacDonnell, observes:—What is really required for the administration of India is not so much brilliant talents or feverish energy, of which Lord Curzon was about the most dangerous example, but sober industry, broad sympathy and an unfaltering sense of justice. Even Sir Antony MacDonnell was disliked by the members of his own service, because of his masterfulness and stern exaction of obedience. On the other hand, there is the danger of the head of the administration being led entirely by his advisers and secretaries, unless he is sufficiently strong and industrious.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th March, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the Rampur Station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

35. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th March, complains that though Rampur is a large town, and there is a sufficient staff of railway officials at the station, passengers cease to be booked after the arrival of a train there, which causes them much inconvenience. The native station-master too does not behave well towards his fellow-countrymen.

ADVOCATE,
25th March, 1906.

Certain complaints against the East Indian Railway management.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th March, says:—We think the time has come when the Railway Board of the Government of India should interfere in order to set right the spirit of rivalry which vitiates the management of the East Indian Railway to the utter disregard of the convenience of the passengers, to which they are unnecessarily subjected.

We do not know how the complaint of the Oudh and Rohilkhad Railway has been disposed of, namely, that during the Magh mela the East Indian Railway staff of the Allenganj railway station attempted to divert the Oudh and Rohilkhand traffic to its lines. Passengers intending to come to Lucknow and stations beyond Lucknow were in a manner compelled to take the longer route. We understand the Allenganj staff denied the charge, but we think numerous complaints had reached the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway management on this subject. The Railway Board should not accept denials but make a thorough enquiry. There is no doubt that passengers leaving for Lucknow from Allahabad station are very much uncared for. The arrangement is simply scandalous. There is not enough of lighting, often not a man is seen on the siding to help the ignorant in getting into the proper carriages or to give information about the reserved carriages. It is true when the Allahabad-Fyzabad line was opened it was laid down that on the Allahabad side of the Ganges the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway would have no station of its own, that the Allenganj station would belong to the East Indian Railway and would be managed by its staff. But surely the Government could not suspect then that railway rivalry would go to the length of making the administration of one system utterly unmindful of the convenience of the passengers. The Railway Board must take this question into their consideration.

Then the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway had of late been put to extreme inconvenience owing to the East Indian Railway's refusal to bring coal on its wagons. In fact, at one time the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway was threatened that its train service would be stopped for want of coal. The Railway had to send its empty wagons to coal fields to get the supply of coal. The result of the diversion of the wagons was that traffic was much interfered with and the dealers in jaggery were put to much inconvenience, as it could not be exported in time to save it from being spoilt by the last rains. We hope that the opening of the Gya-Mughal Sarai line will give the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway direct access to the coal fields, and that in future it shall not have to depend on the courtesy of the East Indian Railway administration.

But the complaint is not confined to one administration against another: the travelling public too is put to considerable inconvenience. The other day some influential and representative citizens of Allahabad submitted a petition to the Traffic Superintendent asking him to introduce platform tickets to save respectable passengers from indignity at the hands of the staff which does not allow people free access to the platform. The application has met with a cold refusal. The East Indian Railway administration thus leaves it in the hands of the Eurasian lads who do not know anybody in the town to insult any Indian, however respectable he may be, by telling him not to enter the railway platform. The complaint is not confined to the Allahabad station alone, but felt by residents of all important towns on the East Indian Railway. It is high time that the Local Government should direct the attention of the Railway Board to these questions and prevent loss of revenue to the State by want of regard for its passenger traffic by the East Indian Railway staff. [The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 28th March, expresses the same views].

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th March, 1906.

Misbehaviour of a ticket collector at the Railway Station, Bareilly.

37. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th March, states that on the evening of the 2nd ultimo, a ticket collector, at the Bareilly station of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, forced four respectable passengers to vacate the compartment of an intermediate class carriage of a train to accommodate a friend of his who was to travel by that train. Not only this, but he also ordered some railway porters to throw out the luggage of the passengers in question on the platform, which caused them a loss of some Rs. 60, serveral bottles containing atar being smashed.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th March, 1906.

Need for the establishment of a railway booking office in the city of Benares.

38. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 26th March, approving of the proposal of the authorities of the East Indian and Oudh and Rohilkhand railways to open a booking office in the town at Benares, says that the sooner the proposal is carried out the better, passengers being exposed to much inconvenience in having to book themselves at the Kashi station where accommodation is very insufficient.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th March, 1906.

Suggestion for establishing a bazaar at the Sikraul junction in Benares.

39. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 26th March, complaining that the articles of cooked food sold at the Sikraul junction in Benares are generally rotten and unwholesome, suggests that the railway authorities had better establish a bazaar at the station, so that passengers may be able to obtain good food there. There is also a great need for a bathing-place, which should be provided.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

AL AZIZ,
28th March, 1906.

Suggestion for raising the pay of postal runners.

40. A correspondent of Al Azíz (Agra), of the 28th March, says that considering the most laborious and risky duties postal runners have to perform, they receive the very small salary of Rs. 5 a month, while the pay of peons in all other Government Departments is now Rs 6 per mensem. The postal authorities would do well to consider the advisability of raising the pay of postal runners.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

AL BASHIR,
27th March, 1906.

Complaint against a procession paraded at Ghazipur in celebration of the late Holi festival.

41. One Shah Muhammad Hafíz Álam, writing to Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 27th March, observes that the Holi orgies are perhaps held nowhere else so indecently and uproariously as they are at Ghazipur. On the occasion of the last Holi, the Hindus paraded, in the public streets of that town, a procession accompanied with flags, in which the processionists beat their breasts with their hands, and shouted a very indecent word, in imitation, as the writer thought, of the Muhammadans who beat their breasts uttering the name of their "martyred" Imam on the occasion of the Muharram. This was very annoying to the writer, especially as the parading of the procession, so far as he remembered, was an innovation, and intended probably to make fun of the Muhammadan solemn celebration of the Muharram. The Hindus were probably emboldened to start such a procession on account of a Hindu being the District Magistrate in Ghazipur at present. The writer also complains that a child of his happened to be severely hurt in connection with the hubbub of the procession, and the latter is now under the treatment of the Civil Surgeon.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th March, 1906.

The Indian People's appeal to the people to help it with information on public matters.

42. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th March, says:—While we are duly thankful for the appreciation and criticism with which we are favoured, from time to time, we would beg respectfully to point out that co-operation and help are more necessary to the success of a newspaper. Every reader is in a position to help us, if he will only choose to do so. We shall welcome and try to adopt all suggestions that may be made to enable us to serve the interests of our Provinces more effectively. Every local grievance and every local need, every instance of an abuse of authority or official high-handedness should be brought to our notice, so that we may make due inquiry and ventilate them. It is by such help that newspapers become successful. If the truth were to be frankly told, it is the confirmed indifference of the public which stands in the way of a newspaper becoming serviceable. A newspaper office can only become a centre of information and activity by the help of the public. If there are defects let them be pointed out and improvements suggested; if there is lack of local information such information should be supplied by the local public. There are a thousand and one matters relating to the United Provinces standing in need of ventilation and discussion, and we earnestly appeal to the public to help us in discharging that duty. Mere destructive criticism may kill a newspaper, and Allahabad has the unenviable distinction of being the grave of more than one newspaper, but it can never tend to promote the permanence of a newspaper. If you have a permanent newspaper you can do everything to improve it. Without an organ of public opinion no public cause and no public movement can be subserved. Let us, therefore, have helpful co-operation and constructive criticism to help the development of healthy public opinion and a truer conception of public duty.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
1st April, 1906.

England's right of permanent stay in Egypt and the Soudan questioned.

1. THE Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st April, referring briefly to the circumstances that led to the conquest of the Soudan by British troops, asks whether that country now rightly belongs to Turkey or England. The British were allowed to occupy Egypt to restore order and establish peace there, and reconquer such provinces of the Khedive as had revolted from him. Now when an estate is placed under the Court of Wards for rescuing it from mismanagement, the latter does not become its owner, but simply its manager. Similarly England can in no sense be said to have become the rightful mistress of Egypt and her reconquered dependency, the Soudan, for the services she has done her, but she is merely her protectress. And as Egypt is still legally a vassal of Turkey, the latter might raise the question of the evacuation of the former by England at any time. However if she ever raises this question, she is sure to cause much political strife in Europe.

HINDOSTHAN,
30th March, 1906.

A Russian's views on India.

2. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 30th March, referring to a portion of the lecture which Lieutenant-Colonel Synesareff delivered at St. Petersburg before a Military Society on the 25th January last, observes:—The lecturer, unacquainted with the feelings of the Indians, says that the natives find that India was better off during the Moghal reign than it is now. Forsooth! It was better off indeed, because Mahmúd knocked down our temples, robbed all Hindu places of worship in India, treated Hindus with contempt and persecuted them. Akbar, of course, was kind to Hindus, but the Moghal reign cannot be compared with the English which gives us the right of free speech, the privilege of the Press, and security of life and property. Why is the wealth of the country exported abroad? Because the monopoly of trade is in the hands of alien merchants. But the lecturer must remember that all the alien merchants are not English, therefore the English Government is not entirely to be blamed; because the fault rests with the policy of free trade. As to the expression that "no wonder that such a Government as this evokes the hatred of the population," we treat the assertion with the contempt it deserves; because the warm and loyal reception which was accorded to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales throughout their tour in India, belies all the vituperative and disloyal sentiments of the Russian writer. As to the insinuation of the writer about the rule of India which he says was at first governed by the East India Company and therefore it was strictly a matter of trade, we do not deny it: but he should look at the English Power which rules over the dominions so wide and broad that the sun does not set on the British territories. We must not speak of what one was but consider what one is.

HINDOSTHAN,
2nd April, 1906.

A Russian's views on India.

3. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 2nd April, continuing to quote from the speech of Lieutenant-Colonel Synesareff, says:—The next paragraph runs as follows:—

"The English Government in India is a piratical concern, for its object is to get as much money as it can, and it does not trouble itself about future generations."

Good God! who can dare pay such a bad compliment to our benign English Government, whose merciful reign far outweighs the preceding Muhammadan and Hindu rule. The present Government even pretends to make over the rule of India to the natives of the country when they are fit to govern it. It is unjust to say that the English Government in India is a piratical concern; nay, rather, it has stopped and abolished piracy from the country. It is possible only for a Russian to utter such nonsense about the rule of our English Government.

HINDOSTHAN,
4th April, 1906.

A Russian's views on India.

4. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar) of the 4th April, in continuation of its preceding article, writes that the lecturer further said:—"Another instance of robber-Government is the tax on salt, and still another is the enormous expense of the administration, which consists of Englishmen. In India monstrously high taxes are paid by a half starved population."

The tax on salt really was very much felt by Indians, and especially by the poor people indeed; but thank God, it has been reduced. Nevertheless we do not see any justification on the part of our Russian writer to apply the epithet of "robber-Government" to our good, benign English Government. The question of expensive administration is a hackneyed one indeed, and the writer has learnt it from the anti-Government party whose whole and sole object is to blame Government rightly or wrongly.

The next paragraph runs as follows:—

"Besides this, individual Englishmen remain in India just as long as it pleases them. Meanwhile their hearts are always in England, and to England they begin to send their savings from the first day their feet touch the Indian shore. When their term of military service or mercantile engagement comes to an end they carry out of the country with them all their capital. In this way the floating capital is always being carried systematically out of the country. Officially this is called excess of exports over imports. This policy has produced results from which India is suffering to-day."

This quotation is correct and undoubtedly India suffers very much by the exodus of Europeans to that country, either in the capacity of Civilians or merchants and traders; but it is beyond the power of the Government to stop it. Colonisation is the only way to put a stop to this drainage from India. But the fact is, that India is not so attractive or healthy as are England and other European countries; therefore we have not been able, we mean our Government, to colonise any part of India with Europeans; though it is most desirable that some sort of steps should be taken to found a colony with Europeans in India.

ADVOCATE,
5th April, 1906.

Natal affairs, and the Liberal Ministry.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th April, says:—The (recent) intervention of the Imperial Government in Natal affairs has raised the question of the relation between England and her Colonies. The retreat has simply revealed the weakness of the Liberal Ministry. The Natal Ministers imposed a poll-tax of £1 per head on the people of the Colony. The whites and Indians submitted to the imposition, but the Kaffirs, poor as they are and unused to any direct taxation, refused to pay. Coercive measures followed. In putting them to practice some policemen were killed. This was represented as a native rising in Natal to put down which Imperial troops were asked for. The murderous Kaffirs were then tried and condemned to suffer capital punishment. Then came the Under-Secretary for the Colonies into the field asking for the postponement of the executions until the Imperial Government could review the circumstances. The Natal Ministry refused to obey the orders; but the Governor did by virtue of the letters patent. The Ministry in Natal thereupon resigned. Then came the retreat of the Imperial Government and withdrawal of the resignation. This last action has been the exhibition of a weakness that bodes ill to a strong Government like the Liberals in power.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
1st April, 1906.

Alleged creation of ill feeling between the Hindus and Musalmans by the Indian National Congress.

6. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur) of the 1st April, endeavours to show that while, before the inauguration of the Indian National Congress, the Hindus and Muhammadans generally lived in peace and harmony with one another, relations have become much strained between the two communities since the formation of that body. The so called educated classes, of Hindus in particular, have come to consider themselves to be the only party really desirous of, and capable of doing good to their country, and they regard others who are not imbued with Western ideas, as persons of no account and do not care to take them into their confidence or to act in concert with them in any measure for improving the condition of their fellow-countrymen. What is worse still is that the Congress has led to a split in the Muhammadan community itself.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st April, 1906.

A suggestion for utilizing the balance at the disposal of the Queen Victoria Memorial Fund Committee, Agra branch, in erecting a public library at Agra.

7. A correspondent of the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 1st April, referring to the suggestion made by Sir George Edward Knox, President of the Queen Victoria Memorial Fund Committee, Agra Branch, that the balance of Rs. 48,000 at the disposal of the Committee, may be given to the female branch of the proposed medical college at Lucknow, says that, as sufficient funds have already been provided for the college the balance had better be spent on some other useful object. The people of Agra are comparatively backward in education, so that a great boon would be conferred on them if a public library were founded there with the money in question. The open piece of ground near the fountain erected in memory of the late Dr. Mukand Lal in Sabzi Mandi will admirably suit the purpose; a clock tower might be added to the library if the funds permitted. The residents of Agra would do well to take up the question at once and memorialize the Local Government in the matter. The editor concurs with the views of his correspondent.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st April, 1906.

A complaint against European judicial officers.

8. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st April, complains that while native judicial officers are generally deterred from dealing leniently, even if they be inclined to do so, with their friends, or other fellow-countrymen, in cases coming before them for trial, lest they should be accused of partiality, some of their European confreres have lately been found to make not the least scruple in sparing their countrymen and others towards whom they are favourably disposed. This conduct of European officers is very reprehensible, and it makes them sinful in the eyes of men and God alike.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st April, 1906.

Judicial work at Muzaffarnagar.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st April, says:—Full one year has passed since Muzaffarnagar was taken away from the Saharanpur Judgeship and placed under that of Meerut.

There had been in times gone by, long before the separation was ordered, many complaints of the congestion of work on the civil appellate side at Saharanpur. The reason then assigned was that the Muzaffarnagar sessions was always heavy, and that every year there was an increase of civil appeals, and hence it was desirable to appoint an Assistant Sessions Judge with the powers of an additional District Judge. The arrears used to accumulate owing to the idiosyncrasies of the then incumbent of the office. If a Judge came who was experienced and fond of his work, the arrears were cleared off. It all depended upon the temperament and the capacity of the Judge who presided for the time being.

Sometimes the Government used to send an additional Judge to clear the file. As a rule he used to come at a time when the work was nearly cleared. Of course this is no wonder, for the State machinery is slow to move, and the remedy came when it was not much needed.

Then it was considered advisable for the Government to appoint a permanent Assistant Sessions Judge for Saharanpur with, frequently, powers of an additional District Judge. This helped the District Judge very much, but then the Government did not like to make a fixture of this Assistant Judge, and so turned him into a sort of itinerant Judge, relieving the permanent Judge of any district who happened to be in need of relief.

This continuous shifting of the Assistant Judge again caused an accumulation of arrears in civil appeals and, very probably, a reference was made by the District Judge with a view that the Assistant Judge might remain permanently at Saharanpur. But the Government thought out a different scheme altogether. They were informed that Meerut stood in need of a third Judge, and they hit upon the device of separating Muzaffarnagar from Saharanpur and attaching it to Meerut where a third Judge was to be appointed, who, it was expected, after finishing the whole of Muzaffarnagar work would be able to spare some time for doing Meerut work. Thus the separation came into effect.

By the bye, we may here suggest that the Subordinate Judge's court very seldom stood in need of an additional officer with the exception of those periods when some big civil suit like that of the Rani of Landhaura was to be decided. Of course on such occasions there was a need and that need was supplied by the High Court. But we must say that as a rule one intelligent Subordinte Judge was quite fit to cope with the work of both the districts.

Now let us examine how this change has worked within the last twelve months. We are informed that the third Judge appointed to do Muzaffarnagar work has not been able even to touch Meerut work, his whole time having been occupied by Muzaffarnagar work. The Subordinate Judge of Meerut who had, under this new arrangement, to do Muzaffarnagar original work also, has been so assiduous as to finish nearly all the work of both the districts. Let us next turn to the Saharanpur Civil Courts. Any one who has attended these courts before the separation, must be struck by the deserted condition in which they now stand. Instead of hundreds of suitors, you may see a dozen or so of clients or an equal number, perhaps more, of the clerks of pleaders sitting on their carpets spread under a tree yawning and looking as if disgusted with themselves and all around them.

The institution in the Subordinate Judge's Court has decreased by half, if not more. Of course there has been an addition in one kind of cases only, and that is in restitution of conjugal rights cases. Formerly these suits were, as a rule, filed in Munsif's Courts, but since it has been ruled, or at any rate, believed to have been ruled by the Calcutta High Court that they should be tried by Subordinate Judges, they are filed in the court of the Subordinate Judge.

No doubt nearly three months were taken up by two adoption cases, but this was due to the unbusinesslike way in which the attendance of witnesses was secured; otherwise half the time was quite sufficient to dispose of both the cases. It is no secret that very often there were only two or three witnesses examined, and plenty of time was left without the court's knowing how to occupy it. There appears to be only one similar case left on the file which probably will take some time, and we hope that in this the attendance of witnesses will be arranged for more systematically.

However, let us see what work is likely to be left with the Subordinate Judge after this case is over. Already we find that nearly up to noon the Subordinate Judge does ministerial work, when he takes up some Small Cause Court cases; then he may have to try a regular suit, or as it often happens, he has simply to settle issues.

Thus we find that the intended good has not been done. On the contrary it has exasperated the feelings of the Muzaffarnagar people. They are of course not so loud in their protest as other people, but certainly they never make a secret of this grievance. They say they were not given a chance to express their opinions. They complain that the surroundings of the Meerut courts are quite new to them; that the pleaders do not shew the same sympathy with them that pleaders at Saharanpur used to do; that the living there is more costly than it was at a small station like Saharanpur; that being quite new to the place they fall into the hands of touts (and there is a host of them there) who for their own gain take them to men who do not satisfy them; that they are robbed right and left for any little thing that they want.

These are the feelings of the people. What their leader Rai Bahadur Nihal Chand wanted was a separate Judgeship for Muzaffarnagar, but certainly in default of it they never expected this evil inflicted on them. The attention of the Government and the High Court is invited to the existing state of affairs with a view that they may be pleased to see the expediency of sending Muzaffarnagar work back to Saharanpur, and locate the same additional Judge to do the work at Saharanpur. This will certainly expedite the work and allay the feelings of the Muzaffarnagar people. The Subordinate Judge of Meerut, then being relieved of the original work of Muzaffarnagar district, will be able to find time to decide Munsif's appeals of his own district.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st April, 1906.

Complaint regarding the appointment of illiterate assessors.

10. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st April, says that, as the majority of the assessors appointed to assist the Judges in the trial of sessions cases are men of little or no education worth the name, they generally give their opinions off-hand without at all understanding the merits of the case before them. This is very unsatisfactory indeed, and Government would do well to make necessary modifications in the rules regarding the appointment of assessors.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th April, 1906.

Deputy Magistrates alleged to be too much influenced in their decisions of cases by District Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th April, says :—Somewhere in these provinces a Deputy Magistrate had before him a case sent up by the police. When evidence and arguments had been heard on both sides, the Magistrate found there was no evidence to support a conviction. Before, however, he could make up his mind to acquit the accused, he had to satisfy himself whether the Barra Saheb of the police would approve such an order. Accordingly, he went and saw the District Superintendent of police in connection with the case and it was not till then that he passed an order of acquittal. The police are powerful everywhere, but there is no other province where the magistracy is so utterly police-ridden.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th April, 1906.

Comments on the decision given by a Deputy Magistrate at Allahabad in a case under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th April, says :—We draw attention to a judgment of the District Magistrate of Allahabad in a case which came on before him in appeal from an order of a Deputy Magistrate exercising first class powers. Two men were bound down under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, with the alternative of a year's rigorous imprisonment. The District Magistrate cancelled this order. In his judgment he says :—"The (Deputy) Magistrate's order is a muddled and curious production. He seems to have thought that the proper thing for him to do was to decide whether the evidence for the prosecution is the least open to criticism and to base his finding on probabilities founded on the supposed superiority of the evidence for the prosecution, the weak points of which he does not appear to have considered worth mentioning. This, however, is not the proper light in which to regard a case of this kind ; and instead of beginning his order by criticising the evidence for the defence, the Magistrate would have done well to have first seriously and intelligently examined the case for the Crown." Again, referring to the evidence of some of the witnesses produced by the police, the District Magistrate says :— "No intelligent court could possibly attach any value to it." It is not the High Court, it must be borne in mind, that has made these severe remarks, but the District Magistrate, and section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an instrument of purely executive authority. What we infer from the order of the District Magistrate is that the Deputy Magistrate in question was not merely guilty of an error of judgment, for every one is liable to it—but that he is by temperament incapable of weighing evidence. He is not aware of the ruling of the Chief Justice quoted by the District Magistrate, and he is unfit to deal with evidence. Still he exercises first class powers and disposes of cases under those particular sections, which are a terrible engine of oppression in the hands of the police. Practically, the police have everything their own way before such Magistrates, but it serves to make the administration of the law still more terrible. It is quite evident that this Deputy Magistrate who does not understand the elementary principles of examining evidence, should have nothing to do with cases of this nature, but we are afraid he represents a class rather than an exception, and his treatment of such cases will not stand in the way of his advancement.

ADVOCATE,
1st April, 1906.

Question of the extension of the Land Alienation Act to the United Provinces.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st April, says :—For such of the zamindárs of the United Provinces who can think for themselves and form their own opinions, no question is occupying a larger place in their minds than the problem whether the measure, which was enacted three years ago for Bundelkhand on the lines of the Punjab measure, should be extended to the rest of the United Provinces. Many taluqdars and zamindars are assembled in Lucknow and Agra in connection with Lord Minto's visit. We are told that the Local Government is desirous of eliciting the opinion of the taluqdars and other landholders on the above question. We hope the taluqdars and zamindars will not lack courage in telling the Government what they feel about the measure and to give out not only their own feelings but also the feelings of their countrymen. They need not be deterred by the feeling of despondency which has unfortunately come over the public mind, namely, that the Government is not guided by public opinion in these matters, and that if it once makes up its mind to pass a measure, nothing can prevent it from doing so, however distasteful it may be to the people at large. But when the Government takes the people into its confidence and shows its anxiety to learn popular feeling, it is only fair to say that the zamindars and the people should give out their opinions without waiting for one moment to consider whether these are heeded or not.

We know the measure is distasteful to every intelligent zamindar, because it is likely to reduce the value of his property. This view has been echoed by the people also. The measure was passed in the Panjab in the interest of the small landed proprietors who furnish soldiers to the British Army. The tenantry of these Provinces is not the recruiting ground for soldiers, and there is no political danger whatsoever in these provinces in the transfer of land from one hand to another. Even in the Panjab the measure has not improved the tenant's condition. Nor has the measure bettered the condition of the tenantry of Bundelkhand. Famines and scarcities, of course, the measure could not prevent by bringing more rain, but its working for the last three years has not better prepared the tenantry to fight the rigours of the present famine. The measure has not brought with it all the benefits which the officials in charge of the measure had assured us it would. We say that the measure has not been sufficiently tried to warrant its extension to other parts of the country.

The atmosphere of these Provinces is calm and quiet at the present moment. The feeling roused by the Tenancy Act is subsiding. The measure which was passed in the teeth of the strongest opposition has failed. At least the officers of the Government in charge of its working have declared this to be the case. We ask, is it a wise and statesmanlike policy to rouse feelings of discontent and anger by introducing measures the utility of which is doubtful and which are not wanted by the majority of the people for whom they are meant? The one result of the introduction of the measure will be that for the sake of the good which is not guaranteed it will create an amount of unrest, increase the discontent of the people and still more alienate the feeling of the middle classes, the majority of whom are non-agricultural people, from the Government. The measure will be a signal for the institution of civil suits and unsettle the relations between the zamindar and the banker. The task of separating the agricultural tribes from the non-agricultural, of preventing a number of castes which are agricultural from purchasing land, will create an amount of discontent and unrest which will be much more deeper than the discontent, if any, which has been brought about by the transfer of land from hereditary zamindars to non-agricultural castes. Our advice to the Government is to let the people alone and not to disturb their peace by any legislative fireworks and bombshells in the shape of another Land Alienation Act. [The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 4th April, expresses the same views].

Complaint against an objectionable practice of the Doms in relation to pariah dogs at Benares.

14. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 2nd April, complains that when a Dom seizes a pariah dog at Benares he ties a rope round its neck, and then, (instead of at once taking it to an out-of the-way place to kill it) he most cruelly drags it from lane to lane, especially on the Hindu sacred days, with a view that some pious Hindu may be induced to take pity on the poor animal and have it set free by paying him something for doing so. This is a very objectionable practice on the part of the Doms, and measures should be taken to stop it.

HINDUSTANI,
4th April, 1906.

Complaint regarding the late Municipal elections at Shahabad, district Hardoi.

15. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 4th April, referring to the Municipal elections held at Shahabad, district Hardoi, on 11th March last, complains that the voters, instead of being allowed to bring their voting papers duly filled up from their houses, as they did in previous years, and deposit them in the ballot-box, were required this year to fill them up in the presence of Mr. G. G. Sim, I.C.S. (who, by the way, went to the house of a Municipal member last year to abuse him) and of other persons, some of them being asked, at the same time, to make their tenants and friends vote for particular persons. All this was very reprehensible indeed, and the residents of Shahabad, who have filed a protest against this procedure before the Deputy Commissioner, wanted to bring the matter to the notice of the Local Government as well, but they were dissuaded from doing so by intimidation.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
31st March, 1906.

Protest against the proposed establishment of a Medical College at Lucknow for preparing students for the M.B. and M.D. degrees only.

16. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 31st March, says that, as, according to the proposal of the Local Government, students are to be prepared only for the M.B. and M.D. degrees in the proposed Medical College at Lucknow, it is difficult to conceive why several lakhs of rupees should be spent in erecting buildings, &c., for the new college to achieve this small object, while two classes for the purpose could easily be added to the existing Medical School at Agra, with a slight addition to the staff. Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and the Panjab already turn out so many Assistant Surgeons and other diplomaed medical men that they cannot all be provided for in public hospitals and dispensaries, and hence there is no justification whatever for establishing a new medical college for producing M.B.'s and M.D.'s. It would be far better if instead of establishing a Medical College at Lucknow, which is not wanted, efforts were made to found in that town a technical college, which is a great desideratum in the United Provinces. The scheme for the medical college at Lucknow has perhaps advanced too far to be reversed; but still the writer would ask the Allahabad University to seriously consider his suggestion for adding the two degree classes to the Medical School at Agra, at a very little additional cost, instead of opening them at Lucknow at a heavy expense.

ARYA MITRA,

Suggestion for adding an Ayurvedic class to the Medical School at Agra.

17. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st April, says that, with a view to preserving the (valuable) Indian system of medicine, the Local Government would do well to add an Ayurvedic class to the existing Medical School at Agra, for giving instruction in that system.

ADVOCATE,
1st April, 1906.

Appointment of a Civilian as Director of Public Instruction in Bengal.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st April, says:—All agitation, both in India and England, has for the present gone for nothing. Mr. E. C. Earle, C.S., has been appointed Director of Public Instruction in Bengal in place of Sir Alexander Pedlar who retired yesterday. The decision was made when Lord Curzon was at the head of the Indian administration and his resignation did not mean departure from the policy decided upon. Not only this. The Bengal Government did not take a very straightforward attitude in justifying the appointment. When questioned in Parliament as to what experience of educational problems Mr. Earle had got, Mr. Morley was made to say that he had been for some time the Education Secretary of the Bengal Government. There is no such office under any Government in India, Local or Imperial. And then, the Secretary who deals with educational topics has under him a number of other Departments for each and every one of which he hardly possesses any personal knowledge. The absurdity of the Government attitude is plain from the fact that while Mr. Kuchler, a life-long worker in the field of education, was required to learn "the art of administration" by becoming an Inspector of Schools, Mr. Earle did not stand in need of any such training. Verily a C.S. is a central star from which radiates all knowledge.

RAHBAR,
28th March, 1906.

An appeal to the Indians to exert themselves in improving the condition of their country, instead of depending solely on Government for it.

19. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th March, observes that though Lord Minto, since he has been in India, has, to the outside public, been so far spending the greater part of his time in sports and amusements, yet it would be unfair to infer from this so soon that His Excellency was not likely to do any good to India; for though he does not talk much like Lord Curzon he might silently be maturing some beneficial measure for the people. But a Briton is after all a Briton, and it would be Utopian to expect him to sacrifice the interests of his own country in any way for the sake of India. The Indians should, therefore instead of depending solely on the British rulers for the improvement of their condition, put their own shoulders to the wheel in right earnest with a view to promoting their well-being.

Let the people clearly understand this, and not blindly join the movement, which, considering its determining force, cannot but lead them to ruin and disgrace in the long run.

Need for promoting industries in India.

23. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st April, referring to the high position which India had attained in learning, wealth, arts and science in former times, laments that she has now lost her greatness in all those respects, owing to the spirit of disunion and to the selfishness of her children. It is high time that the Indians realized their present fallen condition, and took to adopting measures for supplying their wants in their own country. It is a matter for great sorrow indeed that India, abounding as she does in all sorts of raw material, should have to look to other countries for meeting the daily wants of her children. The Native chiefs can surely do much in the way of promoting industries in this country, if they establish factories in their States, and send energetic youths to foreign countries to learn modern industries there.

AL BASHIR,
3rd April, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement and the Musalmans.

24. A correspondent of Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 3rd April, referring to the various blessings of peace, religious liberty, education, &c., which the British Government has conferred on India, says that it is downright disloyalty and hostility to Government on the part of the Musalmans that they should be misled by the selfish Bengali race, and induced to join the Congress platform, attend Swadeshi meetings and the like. Have the Musalmans forgotten the dreadful days of the mutiny? It was the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad who helped thousands of Musalmans to escape the gallows in connection with that dire event. It is to be hoped that the Musalmans will abstain from so misbehaving themselves, and will devote their energies to such useful objects as raising subscriptions for the Hedjaz railway scheme, or in aid of Muhammadan schools and colleges, &c.

AL BASHIR,
3rd April, 1906.

Anti-Bengal Partitionists and their alleged attempts at creating disaffection against Government among the Musalmans in East Bengal.

25. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 3rd April, states that out of the seventy-six vacancies in the posts of Sub-Inspectors of Police that lately occurred in East Bengal, 64 were given to Musalmans, and the remaining 12 to others. This has made the opponents of the Partition of Bengal still more restless, and they have now taken to deputing some Musalmans from Calcutta and other places to East Bengal to spread disaffection against Government, among their co-religionists there, there being no lack of men among the Muhammadans, who are ready to sacrifice the most vital interests of their community for the sake of their own temporary individual gain. It is a pity that the Musalmans in East Bengal are neither educated men nor possess any newspapers of their own to expose this affair. Would that there were some power in East Bengal to apprise the Musalmans of that Province of the tricks played by the anti-Bengal partitionists against them.

ADVOCATE,
1st April, 1906.

A visit paid by Sir J. D. LaTouche to Pandit Bishambhar Nath, Vakil, at Allahabad.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st April, says:—It has given us sincere pleasure to hear that some days ago His Hononr Sir James Digges LaTouche paid a visit to Pandit Bishambhar Nath Sahib at his house in Muthiganj (Allahabad). Pandit Bishambhar Nath, though now leading a retired life, is the one public man in these Provinces in whom the different classes of our people have full confidence, and this act of courtesy on the part of the ruler of the United Provinces will be very much appreciated by the admirers and friends of our respected leader. We wish that the example of Sir James may be followed by others, not so exalted as he; for politicial differences apart, these little nameless, though not unremembered, acts of kindness may do much to soften that bitterness which at present characterizes the social relations of the two races, and which forms one of the ugliest features of British rule in India. Civility costs nothing: it buys everything.

AL BASHIR,
3rd April, 1906.

Suggestion to the Muhammadan party at Aligarh to establish a memorial to Sir James Digges LaTouche in recognition of the obligations their community owe to him.

27. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 3rd April, while approving of the suggestion made by a correspondent that an address should be presented, on behalf of the entire Muhammadan community of India, to Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, thanking him for the most important and arduous services he has rendered to the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, says that the presentation of a bare address will be too poor a recognition of his great services in the cause of Muhammadan education, and that therefore a suitable building may be erected or some scholarship or medals be founded in his name to fittingly remind the coming generations of what he has done for his co-religionists. But the Musalmans owe a still greater debt of gratitude to Sir James Digges LaTouche, who though a foreigner, and follower of another religion, has placed the Muhammadan community under so many obligations that they cannot possibly forget them, and must soon take necessary steps to raise a memorial to him. It would certainly be very shameful for theMuhammadans that while there exists a Boarding House attached to the Aligarh College as a memorial of such an oppressor and enemy of Muhammadans as Sir Antony MacDonnell, no memorial to preserve the memory of so great a benefactor as Sir James Digges LaTouche should be established. If the Musalmans fail to perpetuate the name of Sir James in a suitable manner in their midst, they could not but be known to posterity as the most ungrateful people on the face of the earth.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st April, 1906.

Supply of provisions to marching troops.

28. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st April, referring to the question put by the Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram Bahadur, C.I.E., in the last meeting of the United Provinces Legislative Council, as to the objection of some zamindars to supply such articles as fowls, eggs, &c. on religious grounds, to troops, says that it is a matter for surprise that Government should have, in reply, denied knowledge of any such objection on the part of any zamindars. Surely Hindu zamindars must feel it a great hardship to have to supply, for troops, animal food which they themselves do not eat. There is another grievance from which the zamindars require redress. The tahsildars compel them to supply articles in much larger quantities than they are actually needed for the troops; but no one knows what becomes of the surplus provision.

Ill-treatment of Indians by Europeans.

HINDOSTHAN,
4th April, 1906.

29. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 4th April, says :—With regard to the frequent complaints of rough treatment of Natives by Europeans in this country, there is one test question which disposes of the whole matter. When a European has hastily struck, kicked, or otherwise ill-treated a native, ask him whether he would have done so to a sturdy native of the British Isles, and if not why not?

The shiftiness of the reply will show the nature of the brute.

The late Muharram and Holi celebrations at Ghazipur.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th March, 1906.

30. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th March, publishes an article headed "The Ashra Muharram and Holi" from "A Hindu" as follows :—The Muharram passed off quietly. Since the relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans have, of late, been not cordial, the District Magistrate had very wisely to adopt some precautionary measures to keep order and peace. Some minor incidents, as usual with such a big demonstration, not worth the name, occurred, but were nipped in the bud. The District Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police did what was required on the occasion, keeping in view the respect of the feelings of the general public, which gave entire satisfaction to the parties concerned. Among the non-officials who worked hard, the most prominent was Pandit Sada Nand Pande, the leader of the Ghazipur public, and next to him were Babu Gobind Narain Sinha and Maulana Abulkhair. These Honorary Magistrates gave timely help to the District Magistrate, and the result was that the Muhammadans were much pleased and satisfied with the arrangement.

After the mourning ceremony of the Muhammadans was over, the eating, drinking and merry-making festival of the Hindus, "Holi", came with great pomp and ostentation. There was entertainment and amusement all over the city. The Hindus also paraded their donkey and other processions, just an imitation of the Tázia procession, with music and flags, &c., on the main road, which were well enjoyed by the general public. The most prominent feature was the order and law everywhere. The Police arrangements all through were commendable.

The late Muharram and Holi celebrations at Ghazipur.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st April, 1906.

31. Another correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st April, says :—The letter headed "The Ashra Muharram and Holi" written by "A Hindu" in your issue of the 18th instant, must have been read with great satisfaction by all, especially those to glorify whom it has been written. But, let us see if the letter contains genuine information. The writer "A Hindu" must be a very strange Hindu to forget so soon the treatment meted out to the Hindus of Ghazipur during the last Muharram, and to go so far as to eulogize the very arrangements that will not be easily forgotten by the Ghazipur public, coming as they did from a Magistrate who "is no youngster;" or he must be one of those who are "sorry to be Hindus."

According to "A Hindu" the authorities while making arrangements kept "in view the respect of the feelings of the general public" and these arrangements gave "entire satisfaction to the parties concerned." Let us see how far the "parties concerned" were satisfied. Orders were issued strictly prohibiting Hindus to indulge in any form of festivity on the public road during Muharram. This was in black and white, but the implication was that no music or any festivity was to be allowed even within the four walls of a man's house. It is rumoured that a Hindu wanted permission to have Raslíla performed in his house, but he was not allowed to do so.

The remarks of "A Hindu" about the hard work done by the non-officials also deserve attention. We learn that Pandit Sadánanda Pandey, "the leader of the Ghazipur public," was the most "prominent" among the workers. Just so. But, what work did he do? This and similar other questions would be difficult to answer.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st April, 1906.

The late Muharram and Holi celebrations at Ghazipur.

32. A third correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st April, says:—Allow me to say a few words regarding the letter of "A Hindu" published in your widely read paper of the 18th instant. I read that letter with some concern and interest. As to the wise procedure and foresight of the District Magistrate, commendable police arrangements and the assistance rendered by the Honorary Magistrate, I think nobody can gainsay them. But I write to clear the latter portion of the letter which to my mind is quite contrary to the actual facts that took place. It seems that "A Hindu" did not see the procession with his own eyes, and his statement is a creation of his own imagination. There was nothing in imitation of Tázia. There was no tábút, no mourning but jubilation and merry-making. The Hindus, according to an old custom, took out their processions in a body in which some Muhammadans also took part, singing songs, from one quarter of the city to the other. Had there been anything disgusting, the Muhammadans would have never enjoyed it so freely.

AKHBAR-I-IMAMIA,
20th March, 1906.

Protest against Mecca pilgrims being put in quarantine at Bombay before being allowed to embark.

33. The Akhbár-i-Imámia (Lucknow), of the 20th March, states that, according to the reply given to a question recently put in the Bombay Legislative Council, about forty-seven thousand Mecca pilgrims were put in quarantine at Bombay during the last three years, among whom only one plague case occurred, though it is not stated whether even that one case proved fatal or was merely a suspected one. It is really very hard that so many thousands of persons should be kept in strict custody for a week, on the ground of the unfounded fear of an outbreak of the plague among them. The Bombay Government ought to bring the above facts to the notice of the Turkish authorities and have the unnecessary and vexatious rules regarding the putting of the pilgrims in quarantine at Bombay before they are allowed to embark for Mecca done away with.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
1st April, 1906.

Protest against the Government of India's proposal to make it compulsory on Mecca pilgrims to buy return tickets, and against the quarantine regulations relating to them, at Bombay.

34. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st April, says that the Government of India's proposal to make it compulsory on all pilgrims bound for Mecca to buy return tickets before they embark from India, is both unfair and unnecessary. Many persons die in the pilgrimage, so that it would not be easy for their heirs living in remote parts of India to get the price of the return tickets refunded to them. Besides, the Muhammadan masses would regard the measure as an interference with the performance of one of their most important religious duties, and not as an act of sympathy and good-will on the part of the Government. The pilgrim quarantine regulations at Bombay are also very vexatious, and Government would do well to either do away with the Bombay quarantine altogether, or at least relax the regulations relating thereto, and then persuade the Turkish authorities at Kamran to do the same, and thereby earn the gratitude of the entire Muhammadan community.

ZAMANAH,
February, 1906.

Criticism of an Urdu Drama, entitled "The Russo-Japanese war."

35. The Zamanah (Cawnpore), for February, in reviewing an Urdu drama, called "The Russo-Japanese War," written by Maulvi Zafar Ali Khan, B.A., editor of the Deccan Review, says that while the author has given a graphic picture of the firmness of the Mikado's mind on one hand, and that of the weak-mindedness and irresolution of the Czar on the other, throughout the whole compaign, it is difficult to make out who is the hero or heroine of the play. The language employed is rather vulgar here and there. Mr. Roosevelt is represented as conversing with his wife in a language quite unbecoming his position, and such as one could never expect such a high-placed personage of so enlightened a country as America to indulge in. Again, a counsellor of the Amir of Kabul is made to say in his Darbar that "European Christians, whether they be Englishmen or Russians, mind only kicks and not bare words: they become friends with one who puts on a bold front but are ready to throttle one who shows the least sign of yielding."

OUDH AKHBAR,
7th April, 1906.

Protest against the Indian Musalmans praying for the Sultan of Turkey in their public services.

1. THE Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 7th April, states that it has received a copy of a second pamphlet which Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ahmad Husain, talukdar of Paryawan, district Partabgarh, has just brought out, in continuation of the one he issued some years ago, in which he quoted authorities to show that the Sultan of Turkey cannot possibly be regarded as either the Khalifa or Commander of the "faithful." In the new pamphlet, the Shaikh, reiterating his previous contention, condemns the conduct of those Musalmans who are accustomed to pray for the Sultan in the Khutbas of their Friday and Id services as being a new departure and unsupported by any religious authority. An Indian Muhammadan is free to pray for the Sultan as being a good ruler, just as he might do for even a non-Muhammadan ruler of any country, or for any other person as a matter of good will; but he is not justified in associating his name in the Khutba in which prayer for only the reigning sovereign of the country in which one lives is permissible according to the established practice in Muhammadan countries. And such being the case, the Indian Musalmans should take care not to abuse the religious liberty they enjoy under British rule to such an extent as to call the Sultan the Commander of the "faithful" and pray for him in their Whutbás.

AL BASHIR,
10th April, 1906.

England and Turkey.

2. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 10th April, agrees with Mr. Blunt, author of the "Future of Islam," in thinking that the sooner the British Government ceases to interfere with Turkish affairs, and seeks to become friends again with the Porte, the better it will be for the interests of England. It is the earnest desire of the Indian Musalmans that Turkey and England should be on the best of terms, and help each other in time of need. But the editor can hardly expect the Liberal party that is in power in England at present to make any friendly advances towards Turkey, knowing, as he does, that it was Mr. Gladstone, their late leader, who, bearing special enmity against the Musalman world in general, originally led to the estrangement of feelings between England and Turkey. The present Liberal Ministry would, however, do well to take the fact into consideration that the policy of religious prejudice which Mr. Gladstone pursued against Turkey, far from bringing any good to the British people, caused them considerable loss in trade, and enabled Germany to increase her influence in Turkey, which cannot but have been detrimental to British interests.

AGRA MAGAZINE,
March, 1906.

The Royal visit to India.

3. The Agra Magazine for March says:—The grand and hearty reception which Their Royal Highnesses have met everywhere, and to which they have themselves testified by published letters, falsifies the uncalled for assertions of disloyalty which are directed at us by modern Anglo-Indians. The so-called disloyal section—namely educated India—united with the masses and the aristocracy to give them a loyal reception.

* * * * * * *

The Royal visit has been beneficial to India in many ways. It has inspired the subjects with a renewed feeling of attachment to the British Throne, it has given them a unique opportunity for expressing their gratitude for the innumerable blessings of the British Raj, it has stimulated among them the popular sentiment of founding institutions for the good of the country, and lastly it has helped them to realize that their interests are as dear to the heart of the Royal family as those of any other country in the Empire. The universal expression of welcome with which Their Royal Highnesses were received has not failed to impress them with the genuineness of their loyalty of which Indians are justly proud. The public institutions which have been raised in their honour will continue to remind us of the auspicious visit.

* * * * * * *

The mere idea of having seen the Heir to the Throne, their future King and Ruler, will satisfy the popular imagination for a long time to come, and the festivities connected with the visit will make an indelible impression upon the young minds of the children.

But what we, Indians, hope is that Their Highnesses too will carry with them a love of the country, a sympathy with the aspirations and feelings of the Indian people, a desire to promote their interests even amidst conflicting forces. Whether we have succeeded in kindling such enthusiasm in Their Royal Highnesses, is yet to be seen. But we have grounds for this hope seeing that what little has fallen from Their lips during this memorable tour has given an impression that their feelings are with us, and that our interests are safe in their hands.

CITIZEN,
9th April, 1906.

Hon'ble Rai Nihal Chand Bahadur's suggestion for utilizing the balance at the disposal of the Queen Victoria Memorial Fund Committee, Agra Branch.

4. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th April, publishes the following letter from the Hon'ble Rai Nihal Chand Bahadur, replying to Sir G. E. Knox, with reference to the disposal of the surplus of the Victoria Memorial Fund:—As Your Lordship knows, the Indian public were originally of the opinion that all the money collected for the Memorial should be devoted to some such useful institution as the education of females; but unfortunately Sir Antony MacDonnell's Government took a different view and preferred to erect statues, which has been done at enormous cost.

It is now suggested that the above-mentioned balance should be devoted to the foundation of Medical scholarships. In my humble opinion it is too late now to think of such noble ideas, and the suggestion will not commend itself to the general public at this stage.

The object of erecting such monuments as statues is twofold, first to preserve the memory of certain persons or events, and second to maintain specimens of the art and manufacture of a certain period. If the statues of our beloved Queen were built by Indian artisans the latter object would have been attained, but it is to be regretted that the statues were built by artisans of a foreign country, and the money taken from the pockets of Indians was thrown into the pockets of foreigners without any direct gain to the country. I take the liberty to suggest that even now this balance may be spent in erecting one or two statues of the Queen made by Indians. It will stimulate art, and will show how far the Indians can compete with foreigners in this respect and will serve as a lasting memory of Indian art of the present day.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th April, 1906.

Complaint regarding the Deputy Magistrates in the United Provinces being too much influenced by the District Superintendents of Police in their decisions of cases.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th April, says:—While a Deputy Magistrate at a certain station was about to take up a case in which the police were prosecuting, the District Superintendent of Police came into court and went up to the bench. The Magistrate got up and bowed down to the ground saying "Huzur ap ne keon taklif kiya?" After the Police Superintendent had taken his seat the Magistrate sat down. In the course of the conversation that followed the Police Superintendent said, "If there is a conviction in this case there should be a sentence of imprisonment." The Magistrate who had not gone into the case, or examined any of the witnesses, replied, "There will certainly be a conviction in this case." This took place in open court, with parties and pleaders hearing what was going on. And the incident was so common, so usual, that no application was put in on behalf of the accused persons for the transfer of the case. If arrangements could be made to report what goes on day after day in the courts of subordinate Magistrates in these provinces no comments would be necessary on the existing order of things. These matters very seldom come to the notice of the High Court or the Government, for they are so common that people have almost forgotten to complain against them.

HINDOSTHAN,
9th April, 1906.

Flogging as criminal punishment in India.

6. The English Hindosthán (Kalákánkár), of the 9th April, says:—We learn from our contemporary the Pioneer of the 6th April that Mr. Morley has invited the Government of India to an early consideration of the flogging of Indians as a punishment under the criminal law.

Flogging even in its best aspect is a terrible and brutal punishment, while the disgusting marks which accompany its victims even to their graves render it still more abominable. They ever trouble the poor victim, if he be of a sensitive nature, by bringing vividly before his mind's eye the terrible sufferings he endured some years before. Indeed, we will go so far as to call it inhuman. We earnestly hope, therefore, that our benign Government will find some other means of punishing prisoners.

OUDH AKHBAR,
11th March, 1906.

Protest against the infliction of whipping as a judicial punishment in India.

7. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 11th March, referring to the infliction of whipping as a judicial punishment in India, says that it is a very cruel and revolting form of punishment, and that educated Indians ought to take up the question and memorialize Government to abolish it.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th April, 1906.

Flogging as criminal punishment in India.

8. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th April, referring to the question of the abolition of flogging as criminal punishment in India, says that this is really a savage form of punishment, and the sooner it is done away with the better. Sometimes vindictive officers inflict this punishment even on respectable persons, and, as it is carried out at once, the accused can have no reparation supposing he be declared not guilty on appeal.

AL BASHIR,
10th April, 1906.

The Hindu Distric Magistrate in Etah accused of dealing unfairly with the Musalmans.

9. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 10th April, publishes a long article, accusing Mr. Surendranath Banerji, on the authority of a correspondent, of being only a lip advocate of Swadeshism, because he still continues to use many foreign articles, and adding that so-called educated Hindus generally say one thing and do another, and bear religious prejudice towards the Musalmans; noting in particular that Musalmans in Etah pray to God every morning that a European may be appointed Magistrate of that district in place of the present Hindu incumbent because justice is not generally done to them under his regime.

HINDUSTANI,
11th April, 1906.

Certain suggestions regarding the appointment of assessors.

10. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 11th April, supporting the views expressed by another correspondent of the paper in its issue of the 28th March last, regarding the appointment of assessors (vide article No. 11, page 169 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), further complains that assessors have sometimes to attend court for two or three days consecutively before the case for the trial of which they are summoned comes up for hearing. This causes much hardship to business men. The writer also suggests that assessors should be appointed for a limited period, so that they may not grow weary of the duty.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th April, 1906.

Procedure of making enquiry into badmashi cases in the United Provinces.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th April, in making adverse criticisms on the procedure generally adopted by Magistrates in making enquiry into badmashi cases sent up to them under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the United Provinces, says:—It is time that we should have an authoritative judicial expression of opinion on the admissibility, relevancy and evidential value of the list of cases in which the accused has been previously suspected which figures so frequently in badmashi cases and carries so much weight with judicial officers when binding down people to be of good behaviour.

RAHBAR,
5th April, 1906.

Comments on the administration of justice in mixed cases in India.

12. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 5th April, says that while from five to ten Indians have been killed every year by British soldiers since the establishment of British rule in India, and none of the offenders have ever been duly punished, Indians have been readily hanged on even bare suspicion of having caused the death of a European. As a rule, British soldiers are recruited from the lowest ranks of society in England, belonging generally to the labouring or similar classes, as the descriptive rolls of British deserters lately published in the press show. And as even most respectable Indians do not obtain justice against such men in Indian Law Courts, the idea is gaining ground among the people that it is sheer waste of time and money for them to go to law for seeking redress against European offenders, and that the only alternative left to them is to take the law into their own hands, in defence of their life, property or honour, regardless of the severity of punishment that may be inflicted on them for doing so. According to the Lahore Anglo-Indian paper (the Civil and Military Gazette) the villagers in the Panjab have of late taken to molest British soldiers. The Indian villagers are so meek and law-abiding, that they would not resist an ordinary peon of Government, so that, if what this paper says be true—and if simple villagers too despair of bringing European offenders to justice, and have begun protecting themselves against Europeans, things have come to a very bad pass indeed. For if this spirit spreads, Government could not possibly hang or imprison the whole country. The Indians are no doubt a conquered people; but they are the creatures of God and subjects of King Edward VII. If they have not hitherto resisted Europeans who assaulted them, it was not due to their cowardice or physcial or moral weakness, but because they were law-abiding and had faith in British justice; and if they have now lost this faith it is indeed a very bad omen.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th April, 1906.

The late Saharanpur mixed case.

13. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th April, referring to the late mixed case in which the accused clerk, Babu Amrit Lal, who was reported to have received severe injuries at the hands of the complainant Mr. Leake, Superintendent of the Botanical gardens at Saharanpur, was punished with three months' imprisonment by the Magistrate, says that partiality to one's own countrymen such as shown in that case, far from being a defect, is rather a noble trait in the Englishman's character, and Indian officials, who are ever ready to cut the throats of their countrymen, ought to take a lesson in this matter from their European brother officers.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th April, 1906.

A recent fatal affray between certain villagers and three British soldiers in the Bulandshahr district.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th April, says:—Affrays between soldiers out shooting and villagers have fortunately become less frequent since the repeated orders of the Commander-in-Chief that soldiers should not go shooting near villages. But a recent case that has occurred in this Province throws a startlingly new light on this matter. On the 19th February last three British soldiers went shooting near a village called Bisahra in thana Dadri in the Bulandshahr district. There was a scuffle with the villagers, in which one of the latter was killed after both barrels of one of the guns belonging to the soldiers had gone off. No charge whatever was entered against the soldiers in the police enquiry that was made, but five of the villagers were sent up on a charge of rioting, and they were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, ranging from six months to two years. This was turning the tables with a vengeance. Although one of the villagers was killed outright by a shot from a gun in the hands of a soldier, not only were the soldiers allowed to go scot-free, but they became witnesses for the prosecution against the villagers, five of whom have been severely punished.

The prosecution rested entirely upon the evidence of the three soldiers. A constable of thana Dadri was called, but his evidence was immaterial. The District Superintendent of Police merely testified to the inquiry he had held and the medical officer to the nature of the wound on the person of the deceased. Thus the persons who might have been charged with homicide, or causing death by a rash and negligent act became the witnesses for the prosecution, and it is upon their evidence alone that the villagers were convicted. The evidence of the soldiers should have been received with caution, considering their peculiar position, but the District Magistrate of Bulandshahr, who tried the case, had no hesitation in relying fully on their statements. The opportunity for testing the credibility of the soldiers is slight, but it should be fully availed of. After the occurrence they went to the thana accompanied by a constable, and though not desired to do so, made a report. The following is an exact copy of the report on the record :—"When we were going by a village we asked a native if we could shoot some ducks and he said yes, and when we fired they ran after us and tried to take the guns off us, and began to throw khurpas at us ; they threw about seven. About fifty natives came after us, and in a struggle between me, Private Pope, and a native the gun went off ; the first shot went off in the air and when the gun was twisted round again the second barrel went off when the muzzle was close to the native's body."

Bearing in mind the likelihood that the soldiers might have been charged with a serious offence and that there was no call upon them to make any report, there would have been no need to examine it with any care had not the Magistrate wholly accepted their evidence afterwards. Since however the soldiers volunteered a report they ought to have made a full statement. The report says nothing as to what happened when the second barrel went off, though the soldiers knew perfectly well that the man was dead. What is still more surprising is that in their report the soldiers made no mention of having been tied up by the villagers and struck with lathis—a statement that they subsequently added in their deposition before the District Magistrate, and which that officer fully believed. Had the soldiers really been assaulted severely by the villagers and tied up with ropes and turbans would they have failed to mention the matter in their report ? That would have given them a cause of complaint, but they did not say a word about it in their report. Therefore, it is right to conclude that the report made by the soldiers at the thana was not a report of the whole truth.

The District Magistrate, in his judgment, says it was cowardly of the villagers to beat the soldiers, after one of them had given himself up. But who were the witnesses of this cowardly act ? Only the soldiers themselves. In court the soldiers said their hands were tied and they were made to follow the dead body. While they were being taken in this manner they met a chaukidar, who took their part and appeased the villagers. The chaukidar must therefore have seen them with their hands tied, but he was not called as a witness. The only other witness for the prosecution was policeman Bhup Singh, who came up while the soldiers were surrounded by the villagers. One of the soldiers says that they were unbound before the policeman came up : but the latter, in his evidence does not even say that the soldiers made such a complaint against the villagers. He merely says, "I found two soldiers surrounded by a large number of villagers, about 100 in number." One of the soldiers complained of having been robbed, but neither of them complained of having been assaulted or bound. There is very little doubt that the story about the assault and the tying with ropes had not been made when the soldiers met the chaukidar and the policeman, and afterwards went to the thana and made their report.

The Magistrate in another part of his judgment says :—"The shooting rules prohibit a soldier from shooting a peacock, and also forbid him to shoot within 500 yards of a village. This accounts for the villagers' story of the peacock and the soldiers' story of the ducks coming over their heads 600 yards from the pond." This means that the Magistrate doubts the statement of the villagers that there were peacocks in the trees near the village as well as the statement of the soldiers,' that ducks passed over their heads 600 yards from the pond. As regards the villagers we doubt if they are aware of the regulation that the shooting of peacocks is forbidden to soldiers, though of course they know that the bird in question is a sacred bird. Next, with reference to the allegation of the soldiers, the District Superintendent of Police, when he held an inquiry, could have very easily ascertained whether the place where the ducks were shot was at a distance of 500 or 600 yards from the village, but he apparently made no inquiry on this point and no question was put to him on this subject, though he was examined after the soldiers. The Magistrate makes the point clearer towards the end of his judgment :—"I do not compensate the soldiers for I believe that they disobeyed departmental orders in shooting near the village site." All this is sufficient to show that the statements of the soldiers should have been received with caution.

The part that the Magistrate himself took in bringing the villagers to trial is evident from the first portion of the judgment :—"At night on February 19th I received a telegram from Dadri police station informing me that an affray had taken place between some British soldiers and the villagers of Bisahra in the course of which a villager had been killed. On the morning of 20th February I directed the District Superintendent of Police to investigate. The District Superintendent of Police proceeded to the spot on the 21st February and investigated on the 22nd and 23rd. His investigation disclosed the facts that the death of the villager was accidental and that the villagers had wantonly attacked the British soldiers. The District Superintendent of Police accordingly collected 57 or 58 villagers and asked the soldiers whether they could identify any of them. The soldiers identified the five accused only. After reading the record of the investigation I ordered the arrest of the five villagers who had been identified under section 147, Indian Penal Code." The attitude of the Magistrate is also clear from another part of the judgment :—"The ducks were not the property of the villagers, and if there was any trespass on the part of the soldiers it was a civil trespass. There is no suggestion that the soldiers intimidated, insulted or annoyed any one or committed any offence. They were a peaceful shooting party and the villagers had no right to take away their weapons, much less to beat them and bind them and keep them in their own custody." On all these points there is no independent evidence besides the statements of the soldiers themselves.

Seeing how matters stood after the police inquiry the villagers made no attempt to incriminate the soldiers, or prefer a charge of homicide against them. They were anxious to save themselves. But the Magistrate says that according to the police officer at Dadri "the villagers had banded together to defend themselves and that no other witnesses but the soldiers would give evidence. That is to say, that in spite of the fact that one of their own men had been killed by the discharge of a gun belonging to one of the soldiers, the villagers should have come forward to say that a number of men had beaten and bound the soldiers and robbed them. Of the three soldiers did anybody expect two would give evidence against the third? According to the Magistrate the soldiers gave straightforward and convincing evidence, while the villagers were incoherent. Consequently, four of the villagers were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years, while one got off with six months.

Want of accommodation for witnesses, jurors, &c. to wait in the civil courts at Allahabad.

15. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th April, says :—I do not know whether you have ever had occasion to visit the civil courts at Allahabad as a suitor, witness or juror. If you ever had an occasion to do so you would have realised to your cost the hardship that people have to bear in the hot weather and the rains. There is no shed, no shelter where people can get temporary relief from the hot wind that has already begun to blow. People visiting the courts have to shift for themselves and take shelter under the shade of trees, which are not abundant in the civil courts compound. Under-trial prisoners for the sessions court and their guards have similarly to stay for hours together under the trees exposed to the sun and the hot winds now, and to the rains during the rainy season.

There is no room where respectable witnesses, jurors, assessors and litigants can stay during the time that they are not required or not allowed to remain inside the court-rooms. There is no place where they can retire for lunch, &c. The civil courts' varandahs used to be crowded by such people previously and still is to some extent, but that causes a deal of noise which disturbs some of the sensitive presiding officers of the courts and people are driven out to roast themselves in the sun. This has continued for the last twenty years or so and there is no attempt to do anything to remedy this state of affairs. Recently some money has been spent in making lawns in the courts compounds, a good idea no doubt; but nothing has been done nor attempted to alleviate the suffering of the people who have to visit the courts either willingly or unwillingly.

There is always a large surplus for the Government from its income derived from law and justice. Is it not fair that a portion of the said surplus should be utilised for the benefit of those who help to contribute it? Even on principles of business, on which at least in this country the administration of justice is based, the persons contributing the largest amount of profits should be given a little comfort. Even for the sake of the under-trial prisoners, and witnesses visiting the sessions courts under summonses which they cannot ignore, some shelter ought to be provided, some place where they can save themselves from the sun, wind and rain.

Punkahs, tatties and thermantidotes are provided for the officers of law, but not even a temporary shed is allotted for the unfortunate people who help to maintain those very officers. This is possible only in India, where everything is left to chance. I hope you will take up this subject and ventilate it with a view to its remedy.

Rules for the appointment of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

16. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 10th April, referring to the rules which have recently been issued by the Local Government for the appointment of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces, according to which one-half of the nominations will be made from non-official graduates, and the other half from deputy collectors, tahsildars, naib tahsildars and inspectors of police, says that, seeing that in the case of deputy collectors the proportion of non-officials nominated as compared with men promoted from among those already in Government service is small, the number of non-officials to be appointed as Deputy Superintendents of Police should not also be more than one-fourth of the total appointments made in a year. Again, it is not fair to the Police Department that men in the Revenue line should be promoted to Deputy Superintendentships of Police, as those men have sufficient scope for promotion in their own service. The writer also does not understand why naib tahsildars should be held eligible for promotion to Deputy Superintendents of Police, and not Sub-Inspectors of Police also who have experience of police work, and therefore greater claim for promotion to the posts. It is to be hoped that Government will make such alterations in the rules it has framed for recruitment of Deputy Superintendents of Police as will provide for at least two-thirds of the men appointed to the posts being members of the Police service,

The Indian People on Mr. Gokhale's speech on the last Budget in the Vice-regal Legislative Council.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th April, says:—To say that Mr. Gokhale's speech on the Budget was the best heard during the debate would be hardly paying it a compliment, for no other speech can be compared to it. It helped to lift the debate to a level which it could not otherwise have reached. In breadth of statesmanship and closeness of argument it is easily the first speech of the debate, and we do not think another such speech could have been made by any other member of the Council. Its strenuous purpose, its patriotism, its power of criticism and the sustained note of a lofty public spirit make every other speech by its side look tame and commonplace. We can well understand why the supporters and apologists of the Government are disconcerted by such a speech, for it is not mere declamation or denunciation which can be put aside as of no consequence. It is not Mr. Gokhale's abilities alone, great as they undoubtedly are, that give such immense weight to his utterances, but his character and his selfless and single-minded devotion to the highest interests of his country. If he and those who think with him are distrustful of the ways of the Government they have reason for it, and to rebuke them is no answer. Either confidence and trustfulness must replace the present lip-trust and actual distrust in the administration, or the chasm must go on widening. Mr. Gokhale's most eloquent and powerful appeal for the creation of a citizen army is met by the argument that he and other leaders are full of ill-will and distrust towards the Government. What about the cadets of the Imperial Service Corps who have been debarred from regimental appointments? What about Indians in the Civil Service who have been persistently excluded from political and Secretariat appointments? No, it is no use trying to obscure the issue, for we can see and judge things for ourselves, and must not be put off by false issues, or unfounded countercharges.

Mr. Apcar on the continuance of the income-tax at the last Budget debate in the Viceregal Legislative Council.

HINDOSTHAN,
9th April, 1906.

18. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 9th April, says:—Regarding the continued imposition of the income-tax we opine few educated men in India will deny that Mr. Apcar's assertion, at the last Budget debate was other than well timed and effectively made. He said:—"That the continuance of the tax is suspiciously like a breach of faith."

The Financial Minister said that since the tax was imposed the Government has never given any sort of pledge or promise direct or indirect to repeal the tax. The promise made by Lord Dufferin is an historical fact, with a foundation that no one can easily shake. Had Lord Dufferin remained long enough in India, from what the writer knew of him, he does not hesitate to say that Lord Dufferin would have kept his promise to the letter.

Protest against the increasing military expenditure in India.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th April, 1906.

19. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 8th April, referring to the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's speech, at the late Budget debate in the Viceregal Legislative Council, regarding the increasing military expenditure, &c, admits the need of keeping a sufficient military force in India to protect her against a Russian invasion, but asks Lord Kitchener to say if he honestly considers India capable of bearing this heavy expenditure, and whether she alone, and not England also, must provide for her means of defence. Surely England who is far richer than India, and free from the visitation of famine, with which the latter is afflicted again and again, ought to contribute to the charges of the military defence of the fertile dependency she values so much.

Suggestion for appointment of all municipal members by nomination.

ITTIHAD,
1st March, 1906.

20. The Ittihád (Lucknow), of the 1st March, observing that the system of appointment of a certain number of members to the municipal boards by election is calculated to prevent union among the various communities, suggests that Government had better abolish the election system altogether, and have all municipal members appointed by nomination.

A complaint regarding the late Municipal Elections at Shahabad, district Hardoi.

ADVOCATE,
8th April, 1906.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th April, says:—At Shahabad there had been many irregularities in the late election of Municipal members, so that an application has been made to set aside the elections. Is it a fact that the Municipal employés and Tahsil officials interfered in the election? or is it a fact that certain occupants of municipal shops have been served with a notice to vacate the latter as they had the courage to vote for men whom the municipal executive wanted them not to vote for?

A complaint against the ekkawalles at Cawnpore.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st April, 1906.

22. The Cawnpore Gazette, of the 1st April, complains that ekka drivers drive their ekkas most recklessly on the public streets at Cawnpore during the night to the great danger of pedestrians. The police ought to stop this dangerous practice.

Question of compulsory education in India.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th April, 1906.

23. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th April, referring to Mr. Gokhale's suggestion, at the late Budget debate in the Viceregal Legislative Council, that education should be made compulsory in India, says that it is a pity that Government should have demurred to the Hon'ble member's suggestion on the ground of its entailing yearly an additional educational expenditure of a crore of rupees on the public exchequer. The educational expenditure in India is far less than that in other countries, and it is her misfortune that her children should be debarred from making progress like other nations by their backwardness in education.

KASHMIR DARPAN,
March, 1906.

Comments on Mr. Morley's decision regarding the partition of Bengal.

24. The Kashmír Darpan (Allahabad), for March, is not surprised so much at Mr. Morley's refusal to interfere with the partition of Bengal, as at the grounds on which he has based his decision, namely (1) that the measure was now already an accomplished fact, and (2) that the agitation against it was dying out. His argument, queer as it is, establishes two very dangerous principles. In the first place, the higher authorities should not, according to him, interfere with a measure, however faulty and mischievous, when it has once been carried out because of its being a fait accompli. But if he is consistent with and true to his newly enunciated dictum, why does he desire to give Home Rule to Ireland; the Union of the latter with England having long been an accomplished fact? Again, did not Mr. Gladstone's Ministry get the Vernacular Press Act in India cancelled by Lord Ripon? The second principle, underlying Mr. Morley's decision regarding the partition of Bengal, is still more dangerous, inasmuch as it teaches Indians that so long as they do not harass, and disturb the peace of Englishmen with their agitation so much as the Irish do, they cannot expect England to do justice to them.

ADVOCATE,
8th April, 1906.

Expression of need by certain Muhammadan leaders in the United Provinces and Bengal for their co-religionists cultivating friendly feelings towards the Hindus.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th April, says:—On 23rd March meetings were held in several towns of the Panjab and the United Provinces to celebrate the death anniversary of Sir Saiyid Ahmed; speeches were delivered on Sir Saiyid's work. At Aligarh a very interesting speech was made by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, who spoke at length on the relations of the Hindus and Muhammadans, and condemned the press which was exciting the feelings of one against the other. He said Sir Saiyid in his later days by his opposition to the National Congress was misunderstood. The difference on one point should not, he argued, lead to differences on all points and condemned the tactics of men who tried to set the two communities by the ears. He advised the under-graduates of his College to cultivate friendly feelings towards their neighbours, and not to allow the belief to be strengthened that Aligarh College products were unfriendly towards Hindus. Sound advice this, and let us hope it will be followed.

This expression of good will, by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk whose personal relations with Hindus have always been most cordial, is very valuable, followed as it is by a general desire for establishing a better understanding. We were uneasy to learn that taking their cue from Sir B. Fuller's speeches some Maulvis went about from village to village in Eastern Bengal districts preaching the gospel of discord. But these have not succeeded. It is surely a sign of the times that one of the objects of the Anjuman Islamia formed at Calcutta with Nawab Ghulam Muhammad of the Mysore family as President and Messrs. Abdur Rahim and Saiyid Zahuruddin, barristers-at-law, as Secretaries, is to promote better feelings with Hindus. The object of the Anjuman is to express the feeling of the Muhammadan community at large. But this will not be done by cutting off relations with Hindus. The office bearers of the Anjuman say that the cardinal principle which shall rule the conduct of the Anjuman is that the true interest of the Muhammadans of India does not lie in pursuing a policy of aloofness, but rather in encouraging the growth of harmony of feeling and action between them and the other communities, Indian and Anglo-Indian, and in their co-operating with them in all schemes calculated to effect a general improvement in the condition of the people. This spirit is to be welcomed and bids fair to do good to India.

CITIZEN,
9th April, 1906.

The Citizen's advice to anti-Bengal partitionists to continue their agitation.

26. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th April, says:—We have carefully perused the utterances of Mr. Morley in connection with that all-absorbing topic not only in Bengal, but throughout India, the Partition of Bengal. We must observe we find nothing in them which could be a damper on any rational hopes and expectations of our Bengali countrymen. On the contrary, while Mr. Morley has expressed himself rather reluctant to re-open the partition question, he has evinced a lively sympathy and interest on behalf of the aggrieved party, which ought to infuse fresh hope in their hearts, and galvanize them into various activities according to strictly constitutional methods which they have so seriously undertaken. While we deeply deplore that the Partition remains unrepealed or unmodified, for the present at least (because we cannot altogether abandon hope of its being so done in the near future), we think Mr. Morley could not have given any other reply to the amendment to the speech from the throne moved by one of his own party. To undo the Partition with as much precipitancy, as it has been sinisterly done, especially, immediately after the accession of the Liberals to power, would perhaps argue a spirit of vindictiveness towards the fallen party and unsound statesmanship. And this is a course which Mr. Morley, of all others, would be the last to resort to. All the same, he has not been at pains to conceal his real feelings towards the head of the late Indian Government. Although Mr. Morley does not commit himself to any particular opinion of the administration of Lord Curzon, yet the very mention of the opinions of opposite sides before the House of Commons, with evident gusto and thinly veiled sarcasm, unmistakeably indicates to which side he leans. He also openly deprecates, in no unmeasured terms, the characterisation of the agitation in Bengal, by Lord Curzon as "machine-made," and the condemnatory language applied by the latter to the people of Bengal. Mr. Morley has driven the last nails into the coffin of Lord Curzon's fame, as an administrator, fed by self-love and time-serving toad-eaters and tuft-hunters whose name is legion. It reminds one of the remark "from what height to what depth fallen!"

If Mr. Morley could not see his way to consider the question of the partition, he has given us a definite pronouncement of the line of policy which he is determined to pursue in India so long as he will be at its head. Light taxation and Self-Government would be the key-note to his administration of India. This indeed breathes unalloyed liberalism, and we earnestly hope that our new Secretary of State may not fall a victim to the faulty system which has smothered the noble and generous impulses of many a statesman. We have full confidence that he will rise superior to these trammels and reform the mode of Government in India with due consideration for the feelings and aspirations of the governed.

We must express here the deep debt of gratitude which the whole of India owes to our esteemed friend, Sir Henry Cotton. If Bengal has lost a Lieutenant-Governor in Sir Henry through the machinations of Lord Curzon, every Indian citizen has got in him his staunchest supporter and friend in England. Indeed those who have minutely watched the course of events must have been impressed with the fact that since Sir Henry Cotton's retirement from India and commencement of political activities in England, the attention of the English people has been increasingly drawn towards India. The reason of it is not far to seek. No one has so thoroughly identified himself with the cause of India, as Sir Henry; and he has neither spared money nor labour to get a hearing for the much despised Indians. It is through his questions, no less of course through those of that indefatigable friend of ours, Sir William Wedderburn, that the revival of the Indian Parliamentary Committee has been possible. We cannot sufficiently acknowledge our indebtedness to these gentlemen. We venture to throw out the suggestion that we should raise an All-India Memorial for them both.

We would conclude by exhorting our Bengali brethren to muster courage to carry on the agitation as vigorously and in as concentrated a manner as they have been doing splendidly so long. They have by their united action attracted attention not merely of India, but of the whole civilized world. The psychological moment has arrived when they should be ready to extend their sphere of activities to England. We are really surprised to find that delegates from Bengal are not yet forthcoming to proceed to England, while the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale and Mr. Lajpat Rai have shown their eagerness to take up the work. What a pity it is that the Bengalis are still fighting shy; we also wonder what has become of the proposal to send Mr. Bishen Narain Dar to England, which was duly seconded and supported and was on the point of being carried into effect last year. Surely this is not the way in which a concerted plan of action is to be attended with success.

We once again earnestly appeal to our patriotic and able countrymen to allow no grass to grow under their feet, but undertake the mission to preach India's deplorable condition before an English audience as early as practicable.

Swadeshism at Benares.

27. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 9th April, approving of the Swadeshi bazar that has already been established at Benares, to induce and afford facilities to the people to use India-made articles as much as possible, calls upon the residents of that town to do all in their power to promote Swadeshism by establishing Swadeshi associations, workshops, &c. as the Bengalis, Madrasis and Marathas have been doing in their respective provinces.

ADVOCATE,

Alleged casualties at the late Ram Naumi fair at Fyzabad.

28. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th April, says:—At the late Ram Naumi fair which took place only yesterday about 14 or 15 persons are said to have been crushed on the Hanumangadi steps. Out of these three or four are said to have died on the spot and several have been badly wounded and bruised. This state of affairs is very regrettable and reflects great discredit upon the officer on duty at that place. The mela though large was not of an abnormal and unwieldy character and the unfortunate accident would never have occurred if the arrangements had been looked after with due care and caution. Who is responsible for all this? I think an enquiry should be instituted for further and precise details and the officer at fault should be severely dealt with.

HINDUSTANI,

Thefts and a terrible fire in the plague huts at Gorakhpur.

29. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 11th April, giving a number of specific instances in which thefts were lately committed in certain plague huts at Gorakhpur, says that a terrible fire occurred at dusk on the 28th March last in a big plague camp, consisting of more than 2,000 huts in a village near the civil courts, reducing all the huts to ashes in a very short time. The poor dwellers lost all the clothes and property they had in the huts, and are now in great distress.

Suggestion for the extension of the provisions of certain Acts to all those parts of the United Provinces where they are not respectively in force.

30. The Zamíndár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for March, approving of the intention of the Indian Government to extend the provisions of the Panjab Land Alienation Act to other parts of the country, expresses a hope that the benign government of Sir James Digges LaTouche will signalize the close of its administration by extending the provisions of the Panjab Land Alienation Act, the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act, and the Oudh Settled Estates Act, to those parts of the United Provinces, respectively, where they are not already in force, and thereby save the estates of many zamíndárs from ruin before it is too late.

ZUL QARNAIN,
7th April, 1906.

Question of the extension of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act to other parts of the United Provinces.

31. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th April, observing that the Local Government contemplates extending the provisions of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act to other parts of the United Provinces, says that as it is not just to debar other than money-lending classes from acquiring land even for the purpose of building houses or erecting factories outside the towns, it would give rise to a general complaint if the Act in question were extended to other parts of these Provinces, without some necessary modifications being made therein.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th April, 1906.

Question of the extension of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act to the rest of the United Provinces.

32. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 8th April, entirely disapproves of the proposal of the Local Government to extend the provisions of the (Bundelkhand) Land Alienation Act to the rest of the United Provinces, for it fears it will do no good to the landholders.

VI.—RAILWAY.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th April, 1906.

Complaint regarding the supply of water to passengers to drink at the small railway stations in India.

33. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 7th April, says that native passengers are not generally readily supplied with water to drink at the small stations of the various systems of railways in India, during all seasons of the year, the water-carriers at the stations not turning up even after repeated calls for water by the former on the arrival of the train there. This is a source of very great discomfort indeed to the passengers; and the railway authorities would do well to take special steps for water being readily and adequately supplied to passengers at every station, whether large or small, specially during the hot weather.

ADVOCATE,

Need for the supply of Intermediate Class carriages on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway.

34. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th April, says:—The question raised by the Pioneer for the supply of Intermediate class carriages on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway is one with which every one will agree. For eight months the third class carriages on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway prove to be ovens. The poorer class of Europeans and middle class Indians who cannot travel 3rd class on account of its crowdedness, and who have not the means to pay the very heavy second class fare, find extreme inconvenience in travelling on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and would be immensely pleased if the Railway Board were to remove this source of inconvenience.

HINDOSTHAN,
9th April, 1906.

Shortage of wagons on the East Indian Railway line.

35. The English Hindosthán (Kalákánkar), of the 9th April, says:—Complaints of the shortage of wagons on the principal railway lines are still being made, and shippers of coal, cotton and grain are being put to serious loss. The busy season is now fast approaching, as the crops are being harvested, and the demand for wagons, especially in the Panjab, is sure to be far in excess of the supply. The East Indian Railway have splendid workshops at Jamalpur, where they ought to be able to turn out a large amount of wagons.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th April, 1906.

Mr. Gokhale's question in the Viceregal Legislative Council regarding the boycott of the Sylhet Chronicle by the Eastern Bengal Government.

36. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 8th April, says that the question which Mr. Gokhale lately put in the Viceregal Legislative Council regarding the action taken by the Eastern Bengal Government against the Sylhet Chronicle for giving out that a Gurkha sepoy had made an assault on a sweeper woman at Barisal, was simply intended to harass the Government. It is a pity that a wise man like Mr. Gokhale should have allowed himself to play into the hands of the Bengali agitators in this way.

Question of the legitimacy of the title of Khalifa being applied to the Sultan of Turkey.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th, 16th, 17th and 18th April, 1906.

1. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), in its issues of the 13th, 16th, 17th, and 18th April, publishes by instalments an abstract of a long article it has received from one Maulvi Habib-ur-Rahman, of Saharanpur, in which he endeavours to show that the Sultan of Turkey is the acknowledged and rightful spiritual head of all the Muhammadans on the face of the earth. When Sultan Salím conquered Egypt in 1517 A. D., he obtained along with it the sacred duty of the guardianship of Mecca and Medina. A prince of the Bagdad Khalifas, who on the downfall of his dynasty, had taken refuge in Egypt and lived there in great honour and respect, was called Khalifa of the Musalmans. A descendant of this prince, who was also called the Khalifa, gladly transferred his title of Khalifa to Sultan Salim when the conquest of Egypt was made by the latter, making over to him at the same time a flag, a sword and a cloak, the relics of the prophet. The present Sultan of Turkey has thus inherited the title of Khalifa from his ancestor Salim. Besides, the whole Musalman world has deep sympathy and love for the Sultan, which the late events in Europe have placed beyond doubt. Whenever the Sultan was in trouble or difficulty, Muhammadan sympathy poured in upon him from all parts of the world. As regards the objection that the Sultan cannot be called the Khalifa because he is not a descendant of the prophet, it cannot be maintained, inasmuch as the first three Khalifas after Muhammad were not his descendants. The writer then quotes a long pedigree to show that a remote ancestor of the founder of the Ottoman Empire came from the Quraish tribe to which the prophet belonged; and thinks that all the abovementioned facts should leave no doubt in the mind of anybody that the Sultan is entitled, and is actually regarded to be the Khalifa of the Muhammadan world.

Fear of a foreign invasion of India.

HINDOSTHAN,
16th April, 1906.

2. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 16th April, says:—Once more the invasion bogie is to the front, this time by a Bombay daily's caustic answer to Mr. Haldane's remarks on this subject; the article is misleading, to use no harsher term. The Times of India is responsible for what appeared lately in the London Daily News, in a vain attempt to restore the idle fancies as to the possibility of Russia, or any other Power, invading the Indian Empire from its land frontier. We have heard so much for years of this invasion bogie that the only effective manner of dealing with this silly controversy, which had a knack of cropping up annually, is to meet it with an absolute contradiction, established by superior knowledge to that in possession of the Bombay writer.

Much may happen before the completion of the Orenburg Railway, and it is very questionable whether such a railway can ever be worked in the Oxus region.

An immense number of men of all ranks, commissariat and armaments, are required for such an invasion. The writer, an old soldier, who has considerable personal acquaintance with the conditions of the frontier as now existing, holds that—always provided the Amír of Kabul remains true to his treaty engagements, and Great Britain keeps good faith with the independent Princes and Chiefs of India—neither Russia nor any other Power can or will succeed in getting within striking distance of the North-West frontier of India without coming to grief. If there is ever a struggle for India, it will be fought out far beyond the Indian frontier; and if the Government of India and the men on the spot are allowed a free hand quite unhampered by blundering orders from home, India can afford to enjoy the occasional cropping up of this invasion bogie, so long as it comes from no more warlike source than the editorial chair of the Times of India.

The Prince of Wales' visit to India.

ZUL QARNAIN,
14th April, 1906.

3. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 14th April, publishes a communication purporting to be a farewell address given by India to the Prince of Wales. India telling His Royal Highness that he conferred a great honour on her by visiting her, says that her children in general, notwithstanding their extreme poverty, spared no pains and money, even though the latter might have been obtained by loan, to give His Royal Highness a fitting and royal reception. Her Chiefs too left no stone unturned to show His Highness the utmost hospitality, making as valuable and rare presents to him as could possibly be expected, and receiving titles in return. But it was much to be regretted that His Highness did not in his turn confer any royal boon on Indians who have to lead a very miserable life, of which His Highness has learnt nothing, he having always been surrounded with splendour, and not allowed to see the real condition of terrible misery and indigence in which they pass their days. In conclusion, India, bidding a hearty farewell to His Royal Highness, prays him not to forget her, loyal and faithful as she always has been to the British crown, when he ascends the throne.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th April, 1906.

Issue of a new English leaflet by Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, complaining against the Minister of Rampur filling a number of the State posts by outsiders.

4. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th April, states that it has received a printed pamphlet (leaflet) in English, issued under the signature of the notorious Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, in which the names of forty persons are given who, according to the writer, are relatives of, or otherwise known to Maulvi Abdul Ghafur, Minister of Rampur, and with whom the latter has filled important posts in that State. There are men in the State itself who are quite competent to hold important responsible posts there, and it is not fair that the claims of these men for employment in their own native place should be overlooked in favour of outsiders.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th April, 1906.

Suggestion for a public inquiry into the allegations made by Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq in his new leaflet against the Minister of Rampur.

5. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th April, referring to the new leaflet, which Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq has brought out in English, blaming the Minister of Rampur for having filled a large number of the posts in that state with his own relatives, acquaintances, &c., says that the Nawab or the British Government should have a public inquiry made into the allegations made by the Shaikh, in deference to general public opinion. The writer also suggests that as complaints have again and again been made against the Minister, his post, on the expiry of the term of his office, had better be abolished, and a council appointed to carry on the administration of the State instead.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
11th April, 1906.

Question of the extension of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act to the rest of the United Provinces.

6. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th April, approving of the intention of the Local Government to extend the provisions of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act to other parts of the United Provinces, hopes that the zamindars, whose opinions Government has invited in the matter, will be in favour of the proposed extension, some such measure having become absolutely necessary for preserving estates in the families of hereditary landholders. [The Rájpút (Agra), of the 15th April, expresses the same views].

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
12th April, 1906.

Whipping as a criminal punishment in India.

7. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th April, says that as under the present law a magistrate can have the sentence of whipping he has passed on an accused person, carried out at once, the latter can possibly have no amends when he is declared innocent on appeal. This is indeed very hard upon the Indians, and the Government of India would earn their gratitude if it abolished this form of punishment altogether, or at least made some suitable modifications in the law relating to it.

TAFRIH,
14th April, 1906.

Whipping as judicial punishment in India.

8. The Tafríh (Lucknow), of the 14th April, observing that whipping, which is a barbarous form of punishment, when inflicted on a convict, far from having a deterrent effect on him, makes him simply callous and shameless in the future, and thus defeats the object for which it was devised. Besides, this punishment leaves its mark on the body of the accused for ever, so that if he is proved innocent on appeal, he can have no possible reparation for it. Hence whipping as judicial punishment should be done away with, the sooner the better. (Several other papers similarly recommend the omission of the punishment of whipping from the Penal Code).

UNION GAZETTE,
14th April, 1906.

Assessors.

9. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th April, says that as most of the assessors appointed are illiterate, and in the majority of cases their opinions are overruled by the Judges, the present system of trial of cases with the assistance of assessors had better be abolished as being of no practical value, or, if it is considered expedient to maintain the system, then only such persons as are acquainted with law and are willing to serve as assessors, should be appointed as such, and their verdict should be upheld by the Judge.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th April, 1906.

Alleged need for the appointment of two Indian Judges to the Allahabad High Court.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th April, referring to the question of the appointment of two Indian Judges to the Allahabad High Court raised at the debate on the last Provincial budget of the United Provinces, says:—As regarded the question that there should be two native (Ed.—We wish the word used had been Indian) Puisne Judges of the High Court, His Honor did not think that it should ever have been raised. Why not? Where is the impropriety in raising such a question? We think the question was very properly raised. Every High Court in India has either two or more Indian Judges. Even the Chief Court of Lahore has two Indian Judges. It is more than time that the question was raised in Allahabad. The High Court here would gain in every respect if instead of only one, it had two Indian Judges. What does the Lieutenant-Governor mean by saying that the question should not be raised at all?

AL BASHIR,
17th April, 1906.

A suggestion to Government for sending out fewer officers to the interior of a district during winter who should only do inspection and no judicial work during their tour.

11. A correspondent of Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 17th April, says that though the inconvenience and trouble to which the villagers are put in being required to supply provisions to the camps of officers on tour are not very considerable, there can be no denying the fact that litigants endure much discomfort and expense in having to attend the camps of touring officers for the hearing of their cases. Besides, the officers having a deal of judicial work to do while they are on tour, cannot possibly make a good inspection of fields and other such work. All this is very unsatisfactory, and the writer would suggest that only a few officers be sent out in future who should have only to make inspections, all judicial work being done by those staying at headquarters. In case of the occurrence of a severe calamity such as hail, frost, &c. in a district, when it may be necessary to obtain information of the affected areas within a short time, all pargana officers may, of course, be simultaneously sent out for inspection, say for two or three weeks, all judicial work being, so far as possible, stopped during their absence.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
18th April, 1906.

A suggestion for reverting to the old practice of administering oath to witnesses and others by the Ganges water or the Quran in the Indian Law courts.

12. A correspondent of the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th April, says that the manner in which oath is at present administered to witnesses and others in Indian courts of justice, does not at all serve the end in view, because people think that they do not actually take any oath but simply repeat a formula recited to them. Government had therefore better revert to the pre-Mutiny practice of administering oath to Hindus and Musalmans by the Ganges water and the Quran respectively. If this were done, the writer believes that much of the lying practised at present in courts would disappear.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
18th April, 1906.

A suggestion for providing private rooms on the premises of the Collector's courts in the United Provinces, where native Magistrates may retire for refreshment, &c.

13. The Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 18th April, says that as no private rooms are provided for the use of Indian Deputy Magistrates, on the premises of the Collectors' courts in the United Provinces, the former either do their smoking, &c., in their court rooms, or have to forego all such relaxations during the court hours. This is a very unsatisfactory state of things and the Government would do well to provide at least two private rooms on the premises of every Collector's court, if not one attached to every court-room, where Hindu and Muhammadan officers could retire for refreshment, or for the performance of their religious duties. In these private rooms the native officials could also write their judgments free from disturbance.

AGRA AKHBAR,
14th April, 1906.

Alleged abduction of two Hindu ladies from Hathras by a missionary lady.

14. The Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 14th April, states that a case is pending at present in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Agra, in which two Hindus of Hathras have charged a missionary lady, named Miss Lewis, with kidnapping their wives, whom she taught at their homes, and with hiding them in the Girls' Mission School at Agra; and pray for their restoration to them. After the preliminaries were gone through, the Subordinate Judge issued warrants for the arrest of the Indian ladies in question, but the mission people did not allow the Court Názir to enter the mission buildings and serve the warrants, telling him that the ladies were not there. Rev. McLean, however, took the warrants from the Názir and returned them to the court unserved on the next day, telling the Subordinate Judge that though he would try to have the ladies produced before the court, he could not positively promise to do so because they had attained their majority. Both the ladies belong to respectable families, one of them, Musammát Dulári, being a grand-daughter of a Deputy Collector. The case has created a great sensation at Agra and its result is being anxiously watched. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th April, noticing the event, regrets that Hindus should be so careless as to give missionary ladies opportunities to abduct their girls. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhít), of the 12th April, also referring to the affair, and blaming Hindu parents for giving missionary ladies free access into their houses, calls upon the Indians to seriously consider the question of adopting some reform to better the miserable life which myriads of Hindu widows lead in India, or many of them will easily fall victims to the seduction of other religionists in the hope of ameliorating their condition.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th April, 1906.

Badmashi cases at Benares.

15. A practising lawyer writing from Benares to the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th April, says:—As a legal practitioner I find that the evil of chaláning groups of men under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and of prosecuting them for certain offences specified in the section, is assuming formidable proportions in this part of the country. Whenever a person, or set of persons, incurs the displeasure of a police officer or powerful neighbour, he becomes the unhappy victim of a badmashi case. He is secretly, and of course without his knowledge, entered in register X, and then the fun begins. Entry follows entry and as soon as a suitable opportunity offers there is a chalán under the section. It is not at all difficult for a police officer to get a certain number of witnesses to say in court that the accused is a burglar, a thief, a receiver of stolen property, an extortioner, or a notorious badmash. Hearsay evidence is admitted in such cases and the witnesses incur no liability of prosecution for giving false evidence. Neither the police nor the witnesses are in any danger. The accused person vainly seeks to press for a local inquiry, or the weighing of the evidence. The Magistrate either binds him over in a certain sum of money to be of good behaviour, or, in default, orders him to undergo imprisonment for a certain period. From that day forth he is a ruined man. He remains under the surveillance of the police for the rest of his life. If A, a landlord, happens to win a case against B, and if B happens to have some influence with the police, A becomes a marked man, and entries are made against him in the secret registers of the police. As regards the subordinate magistracy we know the stuff of which they are usually made, and they do not do anything likely to displease the District Superintendent of Police. Can you arrange for a representative to come here and see things for himself? During the last month I have been noticing that accused persons in hawalat, or under-trial prisoners, are brought to court in long leg-chains intended only for dangerous convicts. Will the District Magistrate inquire into this matter ?

ADVOCATE,
12th April, 1906.

Protest against the grant of a license for opening a new Abkari shop at sadar bazar, Lucknow.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th April, says:—License for a new Abkari shop at sadar bazar, Lucknow, has been given out for Rs. 2,500 a month. The people of sadar bazar are opposed to the opening of the shop, the members of the Cantonment Committee are opposed to it, but they have all been overruled by the Officer Commanding the Division. Now, we want to know who desired that this shop should be opened. It may be impertinent to suggest that considerations of revenue guided the action of the local civil authorities in opening this new shop. But when the people are opposed, why should this new shop have been thrust on them? On personal grounds, people in the city may not object to this shop as the khansama fraternity and the sais who come all the way from Cantonment to Aminabad and Nayagaon and cause an amount of nuisance will no more crowd our streets but bless the Sirkar for providing drink for them near their homes. But the danger of illicit supply to the soldiers will be great, and this consideration ought to have weighed with the authorities.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
31st March, 1906.

A complaint regarding the inadequate supply of pipe water in certain parts of the town at Almora.

17. A correspondent of the Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 31st March, received on the 15th April, says:—Nearly a year has elapsed since the new water works were opened, and we are faring no better than we used to do when the water supply of Almora nearly failed. Since the supply was increased by the Sail water-works, we have been looking forward to the time when the members of the Municipal Board would take up the question of a fair and just distribution of water over the whole area under the control of the Board. But they have not only not troubled themselves with the question, but have shelved it for ever to the utter discomfiture and disappointment of a large portion of the people residing within the municipality.

The members of the wards on the Tailiphat side have not been quite alive to their duties. They do not care to look after the comforts of tax-payers under their care. Let me ask them whether they ever took the trouble of visiting their wards. They do not probably know how much the people in their wards are suffering for want of a good water supply. Water pumps on the Tailiphat side are few and far between. They are only four in number, the reservoir near the tahsil being practically closed; and their total supply is quite inadequate to meet the daily requirements of nearly 3,000 tax-payers. Even a casual observer would not fail to notice the inconvenience felt by the people on the Eastern slope of the town.

I do not, of course, grudge the good fortune of the Sailiphat people; but let me ask whether the people on this side of the ridge are not as much under the care of the municipal Board as they?

The plea that the Sail water could not be carried to Tailiphat cannot for a moment be supported. What has become of the Baldhoti water works which used to supply the whole town with water in the halcyon days of Sir Henry Ramsay. Can it not be conserved for the tax-payers of this side?

Will the municipal Board then leave about 3,000 tax-payers to their fate in the coming hot weather to make what shifts they can, or will it face the difficulty and exert itself to give them a fair share of water?

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th April, 1906.

A complaint regarding the inadequate supply of pipe water to the public at Agra.

18. A correspondent of the Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 15th April, complains that, though hot weather has only just set in, the pumps at Agra have ceased to supply water to the public in sufficient quantities. It is said that the supply of pipe water has been curtailed in order to effect a saving in the consumption of coal, and that the Municipal Secretary is to receive a reward for this economy. Let the reason of the curtailment of water supply be what it may, it cannot be denied that the reduction in the supply must cause very great discomfort to the people; and the authorities should certainly see to the matter. In another place the editor, corroborating the above complaint, says that the Municipal Board had better arrange to supply water sufficiently to the townspeople instead of selling it to the railway. [The Pocket Akhbár (Agra), of the 15th April, repeating the same views, adds that the pumps should continue to supply water till 7 P.M., and not stop an hour before sunset as they do at present].

ADVOCATE,
15th April, 1906.

The pilgraims' tax at Ajodhya.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th April, says :—The pilgrims' tax at Ajodhia yields so little that it is disgraceful for the Fyzabad municipality to maintain this harassing, annoying and extremely unpopular impost. If the tax has to be maintained, it should be levied only on persons who travel by railway. In Hardwar, the poorer people travelling by road are exempted from the harassment. The same should be done at Ajodhya, and a petition to this effect should go to the Government of India.

HINDUSTANI,
18th April, 1906.

The late Municipal elections at Shahabad, district Hardoi.

20. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 18th April, says that the complaint made by the residents regarding the late Municipal elections at Shahabad, district Hardoi (vide article No. 15, on page 192 of the 'Selections' for 1906) came before the Deputy Commissioner for hearing on the 9th idem. Seven or eight witnesses in support of the complaint were examined, and their evidence was to the effect that the voters were asked by the Tahsildar and the Municipal Secretary to vote for a certain person; that the voting papers of illiterate persons were filled up by the patwári and several Municipal officials, who put in the names of what persons they liked; that one Nawab Abdul Karim Khan, who was not a municipal member, and the Tahsildar sat with the returning official; and that the Secretary of the Municipal Board opened and saw every voting paper before it was deposited in the ballot-box. Several other irregularities were also mentioned, and the case was then made over for enquiry to Mr. Allen, Assistant Commissioner.

EXPRESS,
12th April, 1906.

Approval of Rai Salig Ram Bahadur's proposal to establish night schools for the benefit of wage-earning classes at Allahabad.

21. The Express (Lucknow), of the 12th April, says :— To Rai Salig Ram Bahadur of Allahabad belongs the enviable honour of taking the first practical step towards mass education in India. From a prospectus before us it appears that he is going to establish night schools to train artisans, labourers, domestic servants and other menials of the town in the three R.'s and in the elementary principles of sanitation. The wage-earning classes will be admitted without any distinction of race or creed, and the medium of instruction will be Hindi. The men are to be taught for two hours every day for a period of six months ordinarily, but in exceptional cases they may continue at a school for a further term of three months. An appeal is made to educated gentlemen to render assistance in the spread of this "unpretentious but potential movement" by devoting an hour or two of their time every evening to this noble cause as honorary teachers. The Citizen of Allahabad, however, does not know of a single vakil or an engineer or a physician or any professional man other than a teacher who will offer his services gratis in the name of either humanity or patriotism; and since it is not possible to expect any such favour from the professional men, it considers it the height of injustice to ask a poorly paid schoolmaster to place his services at public disposal free of all charge. With due deference to our contemporary, we find it hard to believe that there is not a single vakil or engineer or physician or any professional man other than a teacher, in Allahabad to respond to the call of humanity or patriotism. It will, indeed, be a disgrace to the capital of the United Provinces if the noble scheme in contemplation fails through lack of a little patriotic self-sacrifice like an hour or two of honorary work on the part of its educated citizens. Fully confident of the public spirit of Allahabad, we congratulate Rai Bahadur Saligram on his setting an example in practical patriotism, and hope to see it followed with eagerness in every centre of any importance in India.

The Advocate on Sir A. Fraser's defence of his appointment of a civilian as Director of Public Instruction in Bengal, &c.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th April, says :—For the first time during the three years the question has been under controversy, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal submitted his defence on the appointment recently made of a Civilian as a Director of Public Instruction. We confess the defence is anything but convincing. The reservation of the right to appoint any person to any post on the part of the Government is, to say the least, a most dangerous principle ; is a right that cannot be conceded to any being or institution, human and, as such, limited by all the frailties flesh is heir to. The arguments adduced in favour of the Carlyle Circular and Pedlar Circular have been most jejune and exhibit the weakness of a person who has done something on the spur of the moment and then seeks heaven and earth for reasons to support it.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,

A suggestion to the United Provinces Government for making a concession in the matter of schooling fees in favour of men having more than one boy attending a school.

23. The Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 18th April, stating that the Punjab Government has recently ruled that when more than one boy of a person reads in a school, the eldest alone should be charged the full tuition fee and the rest only half the amount each, says that this is a step in the right direction ; and expresses a hope that the Government of these provinces too would see the advisability of issuing a similar order on the subject, with a view to affording facilities to poor people in giving education to their children.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
31st March, 1906.

A complaint regarding the closing of the forests with iron railing in Almora.

24. The Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 31st March, says that, as the forests round about the villages in the Almora district have lately been fenced with spiked iron railing, the villagers can no longer obtain (free) either firewood for their domestic use, or grass for feeding their cattle, and are consequently greatly inconvenienced and distressed. The district and forest authorities concerned ought to do some thing to help the peasantry in the matter.

Attention of the members of the United Provinces Legislative Council drawn to the number and quality of interpellations put in the Provincial Councils of Bengal and Madras.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th April, says:—The papers of the week report the proceedings of the Madras and the Bengal Legislative Councils containing speeches made and answers given to questions put by the honourable members. We are not concerned here with the speeches made in the course of the Budget discussion, though we must praise the Bengal members for their candour and frankness with which they attacked Sir Andrew Fraser's policy of allowing the division of their beautiful province, and also the system which makes the head of the Government patiently hear all that the people have to say face to face to him in condemnation of his policy.

* * * * * * *

We simply want to-day to draw the attention of the honourable members of our Provincial Legislative Council to the number and quality of interpellations put in the provincial councils of advanced provinces in the hope that they may take concerted action in order that they may better use the opportunities accorded to them for serving their countrymen.

RAHBAR,
14th April, 1906.

Questions regarding the supply of provisions to troops on march put in the Legislative Council of the United Provinces.

26. A correspondent of the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th April, says that the reply given by the Local Government to the questions put by the Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram Bahadur, regarding the supply of provisions to troops on march, at the late meeting of the United Provinces Legislative Council, were quite evasive and extremely disappointing. It is difficult to understand why the Commissariat Department, which is quite able to supply provisions to troops in a campaign, with its attendant manifold difficulties, should fail to do so when they are marching in peace times through the country. Again, the price paid for the articles supplied to the troops, though paid for, hardly reaches the hands of the poor peasantry who supply them. Moreover, the tahsil peons collect the provisions in much larger quantities than those actually required by the troops ; and appropriate the surplus to their own use. Similarly, though the Government pleaded ignorance of any objection on the part of any zamindar to supply fowls, eggs, &c. for troops, it is an undeniable fact that certain classes of non-flesh eating zamindars never willingly supply such articles, for they consider it a sin to do so,

TAFRIH,

A protest against the strict enforcement of the provisions of the Indian Arms Act.

27. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th April, regrets that while thousands of human beings fall a prey to wild animals every year in India, and while the leaders of Indian society have repeatedly drawn the attention of the authorities to it, Government does not yet think fit to direct its officers not to be too strict in enforcing the provisions of the Indian Arms Act. The Indians desire to possess arms simply with the object of protecting themselves against wild animals, but Government continues to distrust them!

ZUL QARNAIN,
14th April, 1906.

Suggestion for putting up an abstract of important Registration rules in vernacular on the notice board outside Registration offices

28. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 14th April, says that some registering officers, taking advantage of the ignorance of the public in general, regarding the rules laid down by Government for the registration of documents, put unwarranted obstacles in the way of persons desiring to get documents registered. A Sub-Registrar, for instance, would require a person, however respectable he may be, who has a document to be registered, to produce identifying witnesses who are personally known to him, in the face of the provisions of rule 198 of the new registration rules, which permits of identification of the executants of a document by "persons of apparent respectability" though not known personally to the registering officer. Similarly in some registering offices an applicant for a copy of a registered document is asked to state in his application, among other things, the serial number of the document in question, although rule 217 requires that the "names of claiming and executing parties, the nature and date of the document and the date of registration" only should be given. Again, some Sub-Registrars insist on first seeing at their office a document for the registration of which they are required to attend at a private residence, a procedure not warranted by the rules. To prevent these and similar malpractices, the editor suggests that an abstract of all such registation rules as concern the public and are liable to be broken in registration offices, may be printed in vernacular and exhibited on the notice boards of the registration offices, in the same way as the table of registration fees. An annual inquiry should also be made to ascertain whether the rules framed by Government for the convenience of the public are duly observed by the officials of the Registration department or no.

An appeal to respectable and educated classes in the United Provinces to support the cause of Swadeshism at all costs.

29. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th April, referring to the persecutions which the Dutch and other nations suffered in the past in obtaining their political liberty, appeals to the respectable and educated classes of the United Provinces to note what the Bengalis are cheerfully enduring for the cause of Swadeshism they have taken in hand, and to learn from them the virtue of self-sacrifice for the good of one's country.

Swadeshism at Moradabad.

30. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 16th April, writes:—On the 10th instant a meeting was convened to discuss what steps should be taken to advance the sale of Swadeshi goods. Moradabad is famous for its local cloths which are cheaper, better and more durable than foreign ones. It is a shame that the pleaders, who, as a rule, trumpet their Swadeshi spirit, were conspicious by their absence. It is even said that when invited they refused to attend the meeting, on the ground that some were Honorary Magistrates, some members of the Municipal or District Boards and that, should the fact of their presence in the meeting be known to the Collector, he would certainly bring them to book. Considering the size of the town, very few people attended it. However the cause of Swadeshi goods was very ably advocated by a few speakers, and the audience promised to use only country-made goods.

Swadeshism and alleged repressive measures adopted by the Government of Eastern Bengal.

31. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 16th April, says:—The state of things in Eastern Bengal, under its new Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Bampfylde Fuller, continues to be as unsettled and unsatisfactory as ever. It is something that is quite without a precedent in India under British rule. We proceed to describe some of its most disgraceful features.

The British Government in India had never before stooped to openly and defiantly set class against class in order to serve any of its own selfish purposes. But it has now done so in Eastern Bengal. Sir Bampfylde Fuller is doing all he can to encourage the Muhammadans to accept the Partition, and not join the Hindus in their opposition to that measure. Queen Victoria's promise to the Indian people was that race or caste would never be the criterion of the attitude of the Government. But that promise is being most wantonly trampled upon in Eastern Bengal. The Muhammadans there are now being shown every favour by the Government, while the Hindus are treated with indifference, hatred and animosity. The Lieutenant-Governor felt no hesitation and no shame in declaring the other day that the Muhammadans and the Hindus were like his two wives, and that the former was the wife most dear to his soul. If all this is not setting one class against another we do not know what else is.

It has been ever deemed to be one of the blessings of civilized Government that the public service under it is filled by men who are qualified by their merits to discharge the onerous duties of that service. In Eastern Bengal, the people have been deprived of this blessing. It is now a standing rule there to fill the vacancies in the public service by Muhammadans, even when they are incalculably less qualified than the Hindu candidates. We must have as many Muhammadans in the service of the Government as possible, is the cry of the new Lieutenant-Governor of the new Province. Not merit but race is made the test. And if you, accursed Hindus, are to get into the public service, you must support the Partition, renounce Swadeshism in all its forms, and burn incense at my altar, demands Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

In fact, during the time His Honour has been on the masnad in Eastern Bengal, the only Hindus who have been admitted into Government service are those who have fulfilled the conditions mentioned above. Thus is brought about the demoralization of public service in the new Province, and there is no knowing when and by whom it will be stopped. A shop-keeper, everywhere, even in the most uncivilized country, enjoys full freedom to sell any articles he pleases; but in Eastern Bengal, which is, if we are not very much mistaken, within the limits of civilized British India, the shop-keepers are denied this simple freedom. This is no exaggeration, for there, when the ruler of a district or sub-division visits a village or town, he goes about the bazaar, visits the shops, and takes to task the owners of such shops as keep only Swadeshi articles for sale. The presence of the white-skinned Huzur sahib in an humble Swadeshi shop and the reprimand from him are more than sufficient in many cases to overawe the humble shop-keeper and to damp the fire of Swadeshism that was kindled in him. Such official interference with individual freedem is possible only in autocratic Russia, and it is a proceeding which can only deepen the impression that to Indians between Russian and British methods of Government there can henceforth be no difference.

The espousal by the Government official in Eastern Bengal of the cause of unrestricted sale of British goods and the severe punishment meted out to those who are accused of having simply asked or requested anybody not to sell or buy British goods, have had the effect of stopping the growth of the Swadeshi movement, and the promotion of indigenous arts and industries, of which the British Government in India professes itself to be an ardent friend. The open and even demonstrative manner in which the Government of Eastern Bengal acts as the foe of the Swadeshi movement is making it more and more impossible every day for that movement to make distinct progress, although the Viceroy has declared that the Government of India is a friend of Swadeshism. The inconsistency between profession and practice in regard to Swadeshism in Eastern Bengal is having an effect deterimental to the welfare of the people as well as of the Government.

Enforcement of loyalty or of exhibition of loyalty—for loyalty, to be sincere, must be a spontaneous feeling and cannot be called forth into being by official mandate—is a feature of the administration in Eastern Bengal. Wherever the Lieutenant-Governor goes on tour, the officials issue orders to respectable members of the local communities to do all in their power to accord a warm and cordial reception to His Honor. It is true that these orders are in many cases not obeyed, but it is also true that many are, against their will, led to comply with the official commands. This is despotism and coercion, which is not practised in other parts of the Empire.

What is there in the exclamation of bande mataram that it should be suppressed with a high hand? Any one uttering the phrase either in public or in private is in Eastern Bengal dealt with as a rebel. The name of such an individual is at once put on the black lists of the police; every official looks on him as a foe of the British Government; and, as he cannot be legally punished for the act, every underhand means is adopted to harass, oppress and jeopardize him. Such a proceeding has never been considered to be in any way consistent with the British policy in India, and it is absolutely against the spirit of the high professions and liberal promises made by the highest British functionaries connected with India over and over again.

The village of Banaripara in the district of Faridpur was put under oppressive punitive police force. A boy belonging to the village was said to have thrown stones at a boat occupied by the District Magistrate. Instead of being looked upon as a boyish prank, this act of the Banaripara urchin was construed into a dark deed of rebellion of the whole village. So, by way of teaching the villagers loyalty and obedience, punitive police force was imposed on them. And it was no ordinary imposition, which entails only the payment of the cost of such an imposition by the offenders concerned. The Banaripara punitive police practised all sorts of oppressive illegalities on the villagers with perfect impunity. No complaint against them was entertained by any of the official authorities; and they were in a way permitted to do just what they pleased.

A feeling of almost open enmity reigns between the Local Government and the people, with the exception of a few Muhammadans. Such a state of things has been unknown in India ever since her occupation by the British. Nothing could be more regrettable from the point of view of both the Government and the people. The Bengalis are at heart not at all disloyal, although they resent what they consider to be unjust and inhuman. They therefore are really sorry that they should be obliged to array themselves in opposition to the Government. And the Government too cannot possibly be blind to the fact that the people's feeling of enmity towards it may gradually grow into implacable hatred.

Lord Minto has hitherto followed the policy of non-intervention as regards Eastern Bengal, except in one instance, that of the Gurkha oppression, the removal of which from Barisal is attributed to His Excellency. His Excellency, in the first place is a Conservative; secondly, he is, there is no harm in being outspoken—devoid of a rudimentary knowledge of India, and therefore afraid of doing anything on his own initiative; and, thirdly, he is conscious of the present indifference of the Liberals towards India. Under such circumstances, it is idle to expect any check being exercised by the Government of Lord Minto over that of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. Sir Bampfylde too is sure of his position which is that of an autocrat pure and simple with none to question his conduct. So he does not care a pin's head for Bengali public opinion, and is proceeding with measures which he considers fit for the most efficient administration of the new province, but which, in reality, are sufficiently un-British to be regarded as quite Russian in their aim.

The high-handedness, the injustice and the despotism that are so clearly discernible in the proceedings of the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam should have led the Viceroy to act promptly, boldly and decisively in the matter. Lord Minto has been relying absolutely on official information, official advice and official interpretation of affairs. Herein His Excellency has made an initial mistake. He ought to know and should realize that non-official representations made either in the native press, or through petitions and memorials, or by word of mouth, have at least a modicum of truth, and that, wherever the official and the non-official views are not in agreement, it is the plain duty of the head of the Government to accept neither, without an independent and impartial investigation. The picture that we have drawn above of the state of affairs in Eastern Bengal is true to life, and, that being so, it behoves the Supreme Government for the sake of its own reputation and for the sake of the fair fame of British rule and its permanence in India, to take steps for a thorough overhauling of the present administration in that province. The best way to achieve the object is, in our opinion, the appointment of an independent Commission of Inquiry, which should consist of official and non-official members in equal proportion. The evidence that would be brought forward through the instrumentality of such a Commission about the present misrule will convince the Viceroy and the Secretary of State that Eastern Bengal is governed according to Russian methods, the introduction of which into a British dominion is perhaps the severest condemnation of the British authorities concerned. The conclusions of the Commission we have proposed will amply justify the removal of the present ruler of Eastern Bengal.

Arrest of a boy at Midnapur, found distributing copies of a seditious circular.

32. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 16th April, says:—Bengal "has fairly won the title of being regarded as the land of sensations." There have been prosecutions and trials in any number, there have been boy-martyrs and boy-convicts, but the cry is still they come. The latest piece of sensation comes from Midnapur, where a student of 15 is reported to have been arrested for the offence of sedition and publishing seditious rumours, the charge against the boy being that he was distributing a document headed "Are these our kings?" which the Pioneer had brought into publicity. It is said that a head constable arrested him in the compound of the Midnapur Exhibition, but he succeeded in freeing himself after giving a blow to the constable. He was refused bail by the police, but the District Magistrate released him on bail. There is said to be a great sensation, especially as it is rumoured there that the boy is not the only one who will be implicated; that others also will be proceeded against. The defence of the boy is that the circulars in his hands were handed him by somebody, and before he could see their contents, a group of boys rushed to have them and snatched them from his hands. It was only when he reached home that he found what the two that remained in his hands contained.

HINDUSTANI,
18th April, 1906.

Arrest of Babu Surendra Nath at Barisal in Eastern Bengal

33. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 18th April, referring to the meeting of the Bengal Provincial Conference which was held at Barisal on the 14th idem, says that before the meeting came off, the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller left nothing undone to prevent its being a success. Orders were issued prohibiting the students of Government schools and colleges from attending the Conference on pain of expulsion from those institutions, and a large body of extra police was told off on the occasion. But all these efforts proving futile, the last recourse taken by the authorities was to arrest Babu Surendra Nath Banerji for taking part in the procession that was proceeding to the Conference Pandal, with the processionists shouting Bande Mataram. The news of this incident has created a great sensation in the country: the people are taken aback, seriously considering if they are now to be ruled in the despotic form of Russian Government. The arrest of Babu Sarendra Nath will not, however, bring any disgrace on him; it will rather tend to enhance his honour and respect among the people. Why are Sir Bampfylde and his subordinates upset at the cry of the national song of Bande Mataram as if it were a bullet? The repressive measures adopted by Sir Bampfylde in Eastern Bengal to break the growing national unity among the people cannot but lead to deep discontent and unrest among them, which is good neither for the Government nor for the country.

Correspondence regarding the alleged ill-treatment of two Muhammadan zamindars by a European officer on tour in the Chhapra district (Bengal).

34. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 16th April, says:—A correspondent has sent us the following letters for publication:—

From—Mr. Izhar Husain (sic) on behalf of Mr. Mazhar Abbas of Husainganj.

To—A. H. Ley, Esq., Sub-Divisional Officer of Sewan, dated Chhapra, the 29th March 1906.

Sir,—That on the 7th March 1906 at 8 P.M. a notice addressed to the maliks, patwaris, and Gumashtas of Mauza Husainganj in general without specifying anybody in particular was brought by two peons, which was to the effect that you, while on your tour, would reach Husainganj on Thursday, the 8th instant at 7-30 A.M., and would encamp there till the next day, and that rasad should be provided. No arrangement could be made on 7th March after nightfall, but Mr. Yusuf Muhammad, M. Nazir Husain and my client directed their servants to procure rasad and send them on to the camping ground early next morning.

2. That the maliks of Husainganj are Shia Muhammadans and they were mostly occupied in performing their Muharram religious ceremonies from the 25th February till 8th March, the last day being the Tija day on which the important period of mourning was to end.

3. That on this last Tija day the above mentioned gentlemen had attended a majlis in accordance with the precepts of their religion and time-honoured practice, from 8 till 12 A.M.

4. While they with their brethren of the village and of the neighbourhood were assembled in the Imambara and occupied with their majlis some peons were observed in the compound of the Imambara, who stood there for a moment and then went away.

5. That when the majlis was over at 2 A.M., they enquired into the cause of the peons coming to the Imambara and were told that you were angry with them on account of non-receipt of rasad; and that you, for that reason, wanted four of them, namely Maulvi M. Wazir Husain, Yusuf Muhammad, Mr. Nazir Husain and my client to appear before you by 2 P.M. They on enquiring from their servants came to know that the articles of rasad had been supplied by such instalments as could be procured and that the last instalment had been handed over to your men not later than 12 A.M. The reason for supplying by instalments was that the whole quantity of each article of rasad not being required at once, the servants exercised their discretion in supplying what would be wanted for immediate consumption and the rest a little later.

6. They were further informed that the notice calling them which was brought by the peons was in English and was taken back by them as was also the previous notice which was in Hindi.

7. That out of the four persons required by you, Maulvi Nazir Husain and my client appeared before you in camp at 2 P.M. when you were engaged in deciding cases. You asked them why rasad had not been supplied, to which they replied that the delay in sending the whole rasad to your camp was due to the shortness of the notice and begged to be excused, on which you said that no rasad had been supplied and that you would punish them. You ordered Maulvi Nazir Husain and my client to kneel down on the ground under the sun with both their hands clasped together. They begged you again to forgive them and submitted that you might rather fine them to any amount than put them to such disgrace, and that the fine would be paid at once. You did not pay heed to their entreaty. They thought that you did not understand them because they were talking in Urdu, and so they asked their nephew, Muhammad Jafar, to interpret their meaning to you in English, who offered to do so, but was silenced by you in an angry tone. Then you rose from your chair and caught Maulvi Nazir Husain by the hands and took him to a distance asking my client Maulvi Mazhar Abbas to follow, and made my client kneel down on the ground in the sun with folded hands in the midst of a very large crowd of about 500 persons most of whom were their ryots, servants, dependents and relatives. While they thus kept kneeling down, Maulvi Yusuf Muhammad came there. He was also asked why rasad had not been supplied. He said he had supplied rasad. The peon standing there corroborated his statement, upon which he was allowed to go away. After this four peons were stationed to mount guard on my client and Maulvi Nazir Husain and to see that they kept that kneeling position which you yourself had directed them to assume. They remained in that posture for about one hour and you went on deciding cases. At one time you said to your peshkar: 'It is a good tamasha for spectators.' Later on you took your tea with some refreshments in their presence and then ordered your peons to allow them to depart.

8. That this act of yours which was wholly illegal and unjustifiable caused my client and Maulvi Nazir Husain such mental pain and mortification and brought such disgrace and humiliation on them in the eyes of the large number of people assembled at the place and all those who heard of this occurrence, that it is difficult to describe their feeling in words.

9. That my client and Maulvi Nazir Husain are gentlemen of education, position and influence, whose houses have been honoured by members of the Civil Service as guests, and who have never been known to behave in any ungentlemanly way towards the authorities. They belong to one of the most respectble Muhammadan families in the district of Saran, hold landed properties in this district and in the district of Banda in the United Provinces, and yield to none in the district in point of traditional respectability, self-respect and moral culture.

10. That they on getting the information of your expected encamping at Husainganj did their best under the circumstances to supply rasad for your convenience and comfort as a guest.

11. That any delay, real or imaginary, in the supply ought to have been attributed to the shortness of the notice, specially at a juncture when they were entirely occupied with their religious functions.

12. That in the first place the demand for rasad from zamindars was not warranted by any law.

13. That even if it were justified by law you had no power to humiliate and disgrace these gentlemen in the manner you did: your conduct in this respect amounted to illegal restraint and wrongful confinement.

14. That seeing your temper and the irritation of the people at the treatment meted out by you to them and fearing a serious breach of the peace which was sure to follow in resisting your unjustifiable and humiliating order, they submitted to them quietly in order to avoid any unpleasant consequences that might arise.

As my client has been deeply injured, disgraced and humiliated in the eyes of the public by your conduct, I have to demand of you payment to me, their duly empowered pleader at Chhapra in the Bar Library, the sum of Rs 10,000 (ten thousand) on account of damages within two weeks from the receipt of this, failing which a civil suit will be instituted against you in the Civil Court, and you will then be liable for damages, as well as for costs of the suit. In conclusion, I may add that at present my client seeks a partial pecuniary compensation as an immediate consolation for the humiliation suffered at your hands, but reserves all and any other relief which he may be entitled to seek in any court of justice.

From—A. H. Ley, Esq., I. C. S., Sub-Divisional Officer, Siwan,
To—Maulvi Abdul Majid, Pleader, Chhapra.

Dated Siwan, 29th March 1906.

Sir—I am in receipt of your letter, dated the 28th instant. I regret you appear to have been misinformed on several important points touched upon by you, and that your letter takes no account of the criminal offences committed by your client; with regard to which I shall of course not hesitate to put the law in motion against him whenever it seems to me good. Before doing so, however, I shall be glad to discuss the matter at any time in Siwan either with your client or with yourself, and I shall be glad if you will inform your client accordingly.

Yours faithfully,
(Sd.) A. H. LEY.

The Muhammadan zamindars ill-treated by Mr. Ley, the Sub-divisional officer, in connection with the supply of provisions to his camp in the Chhapra district (Bengal).

CITIZEN,
16th April, 1906.

35. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 16th April, commenting on the preceding article, says:—Two respectable Muhammadan zamindars of Siwan in the district of Chhapra were humiliated and disgraced by Mr. A. H. Ley, the Sub-divisional officer. When we find that for the mere offence, imaginary or real, that the supply of rasad was not made in due time or in proper quantity, the Sub-Divisional officer caused the "zamindars to kneel down on the ground under the sun with both their hands clasped together," and turned a deaf ear to all their protestations, lamentations and tears, we cannot forbear observing that it is a case of unmitigated zulm. The Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government and the Divisional Commissioner were both apprised by telegraphic messages of the conduct of Mr. Ley; but, as no reply was forthcoming, the unfortunate victims had no alternative other than to serve the offending party with a notice threatening a civil action. We see no reason why criminal proceedings should not simultaneously be instituted. The reply that Mr. Ley has given to the complainant's vakil, purports, we think, to intimidate them into silence.

Ill-treatment of two respectable zamindars by a Sub-Divisional Officer in the Chhapra district (Bengal) in connection with the supply of provisions to his camp.

ADVOCATE,
15th April, 1906.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th April, says:—Mr. Ley, the Sub-Divisional Officer of Siwan in the district of Chhapra, has suddenly come to the front. His latest feat has earned him undying reputation. It is alleged that he made two respectable Muhammadan zamindars to kneel on the ground under the sun with both hands clasped together in the presence of an assembly of 500 persons. The zamindars prayed to be let off with a fine, but his prayer was rejected and Ley's orders were carried out. The zamindars sent telegrams to the Chief Secretary, Divisional Commissioner, and others, complaining of the ignominy to which they had been subjected. But having failed to obtain any redress, they have served the Sub-Divisional Officer with notices claiming damages to the extent of Rs. 10,000 each. It appears that the reason why the zamindars were insulted and punished in the manner alleged was that they were alleged to have been guilty of remissness in supplying rasad to the Sub-Divisional Officer on tour: but perhaps the most curious part of the whole affair is that when the Sub-Divisional Officer got notices claiming damages, he in reply made no mention of the rasad, but stated that the two zamindars had been guilty of a criminal offence, the nature of which he did not however disclose and in respect of which he does not appear to have taken any action whatever up to the moment of his writing his reply. It is not clear why the Sub-Divisional Officer had made no mention of the alleged criminal offence until he was served with notices.

Alleged discontent among the native Assistant Surgeons in the United Provinces.

37. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th April, says:—The Medical Department is the one department of State where discontent should not find place. If the Department which has to look after the health of the people and is in charge of their physical welfare becomes discontented, if unrest prevails there and if the employés begin to feel that their transfers and promotions are not guided by any fixed principles or by any definite rules, if they come to believe that they are apt to be condemned unheard, it is quite natural that instead of contentment discontent will prevail; and this is detrimental to the progress of a Department on the success of which depends not a little advancement of the people.

That amongst the employés of the Medical Department a great deal of discontent prevails goes without saying. What greater proof can there be of deep dissatisfaction than the fact that four resignations of Assistant Surgeons took place in the course of the last six years, not to speak of the several threatened resignations. Have so many as four, nay even two, members resigned in any other department? Have four tahsildars or deputy collectors left Government service within the last six years? Does the Public Works Department show so many resignations? Why of all Departments should the Medical Department have so many resignations and threats of many more? Is there anything in the administration of the Department which leads people to make up their minds to throw up their appointments, their prospects and advantages? Is there anything which leads them to allow their claims of pensions to be sacrificed? The man who leaves Government service having obtained a footing in the Provincial Service does it with the sense of utter helplessness. Because, let what may be the hardships and rigours of Government service, it still attracts the cream of the youth of the country, and no man, especially a person who has served for some years, has worked up from the lowest ladder to the highest, will be willing to throw up the service in spite of all its prospects. Has the Government then enquired into the causes of this discontent? If it has not, it has failed to extend protection to a large body of its deserving officers.

These reflections come to one's mind when one reflects on the resignation of Dr. Rup Kishore Tandan, M. B., M.C., Assistant Surgeon in charge of the Balrampur Hospital at Lucknow. We may say at the outset that we personally do not regret this resignation, because we consider that though Dr. Tandan may be a loser in the beginning, he will in the long run find it, from a purely business point of view, to be more paying. Personal loss and gain apart, Lucknow badly needed one more capable private medical practitioner. Dr. Tandan possesses all those qualifications which go to make a sucessful man. He is intelligent, keeps himself informed up-to-date, is studious and hard-working, and all these qualifications ought to go to make him a very successful medical practitioner. So we think it is in the interest of the poor middle classes in Lucknow that a man of his capacity should be free from hospital duties and be available at all hours of the day for the public.

Apart from the personal side of the question, Dr. Tandan's resignation deserves public attention. Lucknow was threatened with wholesale transfers: Dr. Abdul Rahim, Khan Bahadur, was about to be sent to Ballia as Civil Surgeon, Dr. Gopal Das from Hazratganj was to be sent to Jaunpur to replace

Dr. Kishori Lal and Dr. Tandan to Mainpuri. Dr. Abdur Rahim had influential friends who managed to save him from promotion which meant to him a serious loss of money. Dr. Kishori Lal had only a few months ago been posted to Jaunpur, and he was able to successfully convince the Inspector General of Civil Hospitals' Head Assistant that there was no reason why he should be sent to Mirzapur. So the transfer of the Hazratganj doctor was stopped. No intervention was possible in Dr. Tandan's case, and he had to choose between the ignominy of a transfer from a first class dispensary like the Balrampur to a third class dispensary at Mainpuri and resignation. We are glad that he manfully stood up against an unfair treatment. He threw up his appointment rather than allow himself to be humiliated for no fault of his. Now Dr. Tandan's transfer could not be considered an ordinary transfer which comes in the ordinary course of events. In the Balrampur Hospital besides the pay which he used to get there were certain allowances almost equal to his pay. To deprive him of these meant his punishment for faults of which he was not informed. If he had incurred the displeasure of his superiors—we are assured Colonel Anderson had no hand in his transfer,—he ought to have been informed of the causes thereof; if there were some charges against him, he ought to have been asked for an explanation. But nothing of the sort was done. He was condemned unheard, as has often been done in the Department. In his case the service of a constituted Government has proved no better than that of a badly managed Taluqdar's estate. Neither the Inspector-General of Hospitals nor the Local Government in finally accepting the resignation made any inquiry into the causes which led a man after some years' meritorious service to throw up a Government appointment.

We do not take any notice of the rumours which connect his transfer from Lucknow with two causes which are most fantastic and need not be mentioned. But the rumours, if they are based on a grain of truth, show a state of things which is not highly creditable to the Medical Department, and one which deserves the serious attention of the Local Government to save service in a useful Department from falling into discredit. [The Hindustáni (Lucknow) of the 18th April, repeats the same views.]

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th April, 1906.

A complaint against some emigration agents at Bareilly, inducing people to emigrate to Demerara by holding out false hopes of prospects to them.

38. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th April, has received a complaint from some people to the effect that emigration agents at Bareilly induce people to leave their houses for Demerara by holding them out false hopes of all sorts of prospects, in order to earn their commission. This is surely a kind of cheating, and the authorities should see to the matter.

AL BASHIR,
17th April, 1906.

A suggestion to the Muhammadans to bring out a biography of Sir James Digges LaTouche, giving in detail the various favours he has done to their community, and distribute its copies among their boys in schools to preserve his memory among them.

39. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 17th April, publishes a communication from a Muhammadan zamindar who, observing that Sir James Digges LaTouche has done many more acts of favour to the Musalmans, both in his official and personal capacity, than any of his predecessors in office ever did, specially in connection with the Aligarh College, has no doubt that the Musalmans, being a grateful people, will like to raise a memorial to His Honour at Aligarh. But any such local memorial will come under the notice of only those persons who may visit the locality and not others. The writer would therefore suggest that, in place of any such memorial, a short biography giving in detail everything which His Honor has done for the benefit of the Musalman community, should be nicely printed, with a portrait of His Honor on its frontispiece, and freely supplied to all Muhammadan associations and schools as well as to Government schools for distribution as a prize to Musalman boys, so that the name of the great benefactor of their community may be indelibly impressed on their tender minds.

HINDUSTANI,
18th April, 1906.

Contradiction of the report of several deaths having occurred at Ajodhya at the late Ram Naumi fair.

40. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 18th April, says that the report that several deaths occurred at Ajodhya on the occasion of the late Ram Naumi fair (vide article No. 28 on page 208 of the "Selections" for 1906) was altogether unfounded, the fact being that owing to great crush, two or three persons fell down at Hanumangadi, but none of them received any serious injury. The police arrangements were perfectly satisfactory, but as there was a gathering of three or four lakhs of people at the fair, such slight accidents were simply unavoidable.

ADVOCATE,

Suggestion for the abolition of the toll levied from the public for the use of the railway bridges over the rivers at Cawnpore, Benares and Moradabad.

41. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th April, says:—No provision in the Budget will appeal more to the public mind than that of a lakh of rupees to be given to the East Indian Railway for the bridge over the Jumna; (at Agra) so that henceforth people passing over it will not be liable to pay any toll. A similar concession—one which was much appreciated at the last Magh Mela—exists for the residents of Allahabad who have to pay no toll on the Ganges bridge. We wish the same privilege might be extended to the residents of Cawnpore, Benares, and Moradabad where the bridges belong to the State.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
8th April, 1906.

A complaint regarding a procession which Hindus paraded in the streets at Ghazipur during the late Holi festival.

42. A correspondent of the Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 8th April, complains that during the late Holi festival at Ghazipur, the Hindus paraded a paper frame, made in the shape of a mausoleum, accompanied with some flags, in the public streets of that town, in imitation of the Tázias and Alams processions which Muhammadans bring out during the Muharram, and that they at the same time beat their breasts with their hands and shouted a very indecent word, in the same manner as the Musalmans do while shouting the name of Husain in their Muharram processions. This, the writer thinks, was deliberately done to annoy the Musalmans, who though they felt the insult very keenly, took no step to interfere with the procession. The local authorities who, though Hindus, are not actuated by any religious prejudice, have the matter under their consideration, and the result of their deliberations is anxiously awaited.

EXPRESS,
26th April, 1906.

Establishment of a Muhammadan association in Persia to defend Islám against the attacks of Christian missionaries preaching in that country.

1. The Express (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says:—The Persians have organised regular missions for the spread of Islam. Christian missionaries have not been very successful in the realisation of their desires. As is the case with every other Muslim country, their attempts have proved a failure there too. But they have had one beneficial effect. They have roused the spiritual fervour of a large number of the maulvis of the land, who have banded themselves together and formed an association for the defence of Islam. The aim and object of this body is to remove the religious doubts that sometimes oppress the people owing to the misrepresentations of the Christian missionaries, to hold religious discussions with these gentlemen, and to save the people from their snares. During the short time that the association has been established, its endeavours have been attended with a large measure of success. Their success has been such that they have felt emboldened to extend the scope of the association and to send Muhammadan missionaries to non-Muslim countries. The progress of the association has been keenly watched by many leading personages in Persia. They have now become convinced of the utility of the movement and are giving it cordial and financial support. One result of the efforts of the association was the conversion of a Christian Bishop named Paul.

AGRA AKHBAR,
21st April, 1906.

The Prince of Wales' late visit to India, and the alleged extravagance of the Native Chiefs in giving him receptions.

2. The Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 21st April, publishes an article from one Maulana Ashhari, who while referring to the parsimony of the Prince of Wales in making presents to public institutions or individuals during his visit to India, as well as to that of the Indian Government in giving entertainments to His Highness, protests against the extravagance which the Native Princes practised in giving most showy receptions to him, and asks the National Congress to induce them to learn the lesson of thrift from His Royal Highness.

HINDOSTHAN,
20th April, 1906.

A recent revision of the Darbar List of the Taluqdars of Oudh.

3. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 20th April, says:—On account of the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the list of the Taluqdars has been revised. The principle observed in this revision is this that the Rajas and Maharajas have been put on the top of the list, and the Taluqdars have been given preference according to their status and the size of their estates, but this is not sufficient. There should also be some distinction made between the hereditary Rajas and Maharajas and those who have received the rank as a personal distinction, because a Raja who has received his title only for his life cannot be considered equal to those who are hereditary Rajas and Maharajas and who, as heirs and descendants, received their titles after the demise of their fathers without any interference of the Government. We hope that the Government will take up this question.

HINDOSTHAN,
23rd April, 1906.

A recent revision of the Darbar List of the Taluqdars of Oudh.

4. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 23rd April, says:—In this list we see the names of four newly made Rajas:—

(1) Raja Raghuraj Singh, No. 32,
(2) Raja Shaban Ali Khan, No. 43,
(3) Raja Sukhmangal Singh, No. 46 and
(4) Rani Hans Raj Kuar, No. 50.

The lady is the last, and therefore no objection can be raised to her number, but out of the three Rajas above-mentioned, viz.:—

Raghuraj Singh, Shaban Ali Khan and Sukhmangal Singh,
(1) is above eighteen Rajas, three life Rajas and fifteen hereditary ones;
(2) is above seven Rajas, two life Rajas and five hereditary ones;
(3) is above four Rajas, one life Raja and three hereditary ones.

The number of these Rajas formerly was as follows : —

Raja Raghuraj Singh's number, according to the authority of the newly prepared list, was between 51 and 52, that of Raja Shaban Ali Khan was 78, and the number of Raja Sukhmangul Singh was 75.

Now the question arises, why these newly made Rajas are put over and above the names of hereditary Rajas, and we, as a member of the fourth estate, most respectfully represent this anomaly to the notice of the Local Government and seek redress.

Of course, those hereditary Rajas who have been passed over, feel it keenly to think that these juniors have been set over and above them. We have been privately inspired by some aggrieved Taluqdars, hence we take up the cudgel to defend them.

AGRA AKHBAR,
21st April, 1906.

The Muhammadans and politics.

5. The Agra Akhbar (Agra), of the 21st April, publishes an article communicated by one Saiyid Manzar Ali of Lahore, in which the writer observes that wide diversity of opinion prevails among the Muhammadans as to their attitude towards politics. One party is of opinion that Muhammadans ought to leave politics alone and must confine their attention to their educational advancement ; another party, while recognising the need for political agitation, would prefer to have a separate Muhammadan political association for the purpose ; while a third party, which though numerically insignificant, numbers in its ranks persons of very liberal ideas, thinks that Muhammadans cannot succeed except by acting in concert with other communities. It is to be regretted that owing to their policy of abject compliance with the wishes of the authorities and their fear of incurring official displeasure the Muhammadans are fast losing ground in political as well as in other matters. The writer considers it a hopeful sign however that many are now beginning to feel the incongruity of their position. He advises them to lose no time in establishing local political associations throughout the country working under the direction of a central association.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

ADVOCATE,
26th April, 1906.

Afghanistan and India.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says :—The late war between Japan and Russia has, it is now evident, operated most beneficially on the North-West frontier of India. That shrewd statesman, the Amir, was the first to recognise the immensity of the political change in India consequent on the decadence of the great aggressive Power's fighting prestige. Like the Western world, he had got to imagine that the White Czar would prove irresistible sooner or later, and this conviction naturally influenced his mind towards rapprochement of a tentative character, but not subversive of his treaty engagements with Great Britain. That disposition has, a frontier correspondent informs us, completely died out at Kabul ; not only the Amir, but all the great tribal chiefs are now convinced that England, not Russia, is the rising sun in Asia. He and they alike have abandoned the employment of mullahs to stir up strife in the borderland. It is further rumoured that he now desires to arrange for a personal interview with the Viceroy at Peshawar or Rawalpindi, to talk over the whole question of strengthening the resisting power of Afghanistan to Northern aggression. There is even a possibility that he may be induced to sanction the extension of the Indus railway system from Chaman, the present railhead, to Kandahar and the river Helmund, a project to which he has hitherto been vehemently opposed.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st April, 1906.

Protest against the acquittal of certain British soldiers accused of causing the death of a native at Lahore.

7. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st April, referring to the death of a native recently caused by certain British soldiers at Lahore, (vide article No. 15, on page 119 of the United Provinces " Selections " for 1906) regrets to learn that the offenders have been acquitted. In a vast majority of such cases the death is either attributed to the enlarged spleen, or no proof of wilful murder is found to be forthcoming. This is the reason why some Europeans do not value the life of a native at anything more than that of a game animal. The result in the case would have been quite different if a native had been accused of murdering a European.

CITIZEN,
23rd April, 1906.

Trial of a British soldier named James Poole before the Allahabad High Court for shooting a native boy.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd April, says: - On Tuesday last, James Poole, a private in the King's Liverpool Regiment, was on his trial before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Aikman and a mixed jury on a charge of attempting to murder, on the 25th January last, one Sunnu Kinji by shooting him with a Lee-Metford rifle. The scene lay at Nasirabad within the sacred precincts of the barracks. The defence was the time-honoured Anglo-Indian plea of insanity. The boy was shot right through his right lung, and it was a miracle that he lived. It is very difficult to say what the actual circumstances were under which the boy Sunnu came to be shot. Sunnu was a servant in the barracks, and as he has to earn his bread he is still in the same service. The only other native concerned is another boy named Maharam, who, like Sunnu, is another servant of the barracks. The rest of the witnesses for the prosecution are the comrades in arms of Private Poole, and presumably his friends. If their statements are to be believed, the conduct of the accused in firing at Sunnu could be accounted for on the ground of either insanity or accident. There was not the slightest motive for the strange act of the accused. Poole having asked Sunnu to get him a cake, while the latter was taking his meals, Sunnu asked the other boy Maharam to go for the cake. The next thing that happened was that Sunnu was shot from behind. There was no quarrel and no exchange of angry words. There was, indeed, nothing to show that the accused having asked Sunnu to go for the cake, the latter's deputing Maharam for the purpose had in any way offended Poole, nor do we consider that even on that hypothesis there would be sufficient provocation for Poole's attempting to murder Sunnu. We had it in evidence that Poole was one of the most efficient men in his company. . . . . As to any premonitory symptoms of insanity, all that was said by the other witnesses for the prosecution was that in Port Blair on several occasions he walked about in the sun with nothing over the head, and that he took violent exercise by running about the island and finished up by jumping into the sea, but after stripping himself. Another exploit of much the same colour and complexion as the above was fathered on him when they had been to the Viper Island in a rowing boat. On the day of the occurrence he appeared more quiet than usual, complained of a toothache and asked silly questions such as "Where is he?" "What is he laughing at?"—he being some creature of his imagination. After that the shot was fired, it is said, that he was not conscious of what he had done, and upon being asked what the matter was, he replied "What's to do? What are they all running round me for?" It is strange that though every one in the camp used to remark that Poole was not all right and that every one put him down as Págal, notwithstanding this opinion of the company he was continued in service and subjected to no restraint. It may be permissive to us to draw the inference that his Commanding Officer had never even received any complaints as to his freaks of insanity. Anyhow this final act of shooting at a black native in no way chimes with his previous freaks of running in the sun or plunging into the sea. Captain Odlam, in charge of the station hospital at Nasirabad, gave his opinion that the accused was of unsound mind. Upon such evidence as was tendered the jury were prefectly justified in returning the verdict that Poole had shot the man Sunnu whilst in a state of unsound mind. But we cannot help observing that it was a strange phase of insanity under which the accused fired at Sunnu of all the men in the barracks. The accused must have deliberately loaded his gun. His mind was not completely blank at the time, for he knew what it was to have a cake and how to get it and who the proper person was to fetch it. He did not, in fact, mistake Private Fulcher or Private Bradshaw or Private Maclean for Sunnu; so far his mind was perfectly unclouded; but in the matter of firing the gun, suddenly a thick fog settles on his mind and in a place crowded with European soldiers the chance shot fired by him passes right through the lung of a native boy!

ADVOCATE,
22nd April, 1906.

Protest against the appointment of two Inspectors of Police in Burma for conducting prosecutions and a suggestion to appoint a public counsel for defence of poor accused persons.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd April, says:—Burma has been sanctioned two Inspectors of police whose sole duty will be to conduct prosecutions on behalf of the police before criminal courts. The step has been considered necessary in order to relieve the public prosecutor from the worry of attending as many as five courts before which cases prosecuted by the police go up for hearing. It will also make the attendance of the other police officers in court unnecessary, giving them time to go on with criminal investigation, their main duty. The appointment of public prosecutors is justified on the plea that the first duty of Government is to bring offenders to book. But is it not also the duty of Government to see that innocent persons may not be put to trouble by anybody in the world, more by the preservers of the public peace, who not unoften disturb the peace of many a hearth and home guided by zid, ill-will or even a false idea of prestige? We feel the time is come when a public counsel for defence in cases where the accused person cannot secure the necessary legal help should be appointed. The ways of the police are too well known to need the statement of arguments in favour of the proposal. It is also well known that many innocent persons have been saved from the gallows by the kind offices of many a private legal practitioner taking up their cause in appellate courts.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
22nd April, 1906.

Suggested abolition of the punishment of whipping and solitary confinement.

10. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 22nd April, states that the punishment of whipping seldom proves deterrent, because leaving, as it does, indelible marks on the person of the convict, it lowers him in the estimation of his friends, and ultimately makes him a habitual criminal. Moreover, as an order for this form of punishment is carried out at once, innocent persons too are occasionally subjected to it through the inexperience of young magistrates. Similarly, solitary confinement which involves the treatment of human beings like so many brutes is equally objectionable, and had better be abolished along with the punishment of whipping.

ADVOCATE,
26th April,
1906.

The Judicial Administration in the United Provinces.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, publishes the following letter from a correspondent:—Sir,—Nawab Muhammad Yusuf Ali Khan has really performed yeoman's service to his countrymen by inviting His Honour's attention to the fact that the administration of justice in the United Provinces is not keeping pace with advancement in other matters.

The work is now-a-days judged from quantity and not from quality. The quantity of the work done repays in promotion, no matter how poor that work may be on its merits. This is the complaint everywhere in the mufassil. The merits of a case are hardly evenly balanced. The just determination of a case is a secondary matter; a speedy disposal of it is primary. If a case can be disposed of on a preliminary point with some plausibility of reasoning, that technical objection is sure to find favour with the Judge. If a question of complicated accounts is to be gone into, every effort will be made to catch hold of some easy point which may enable the case to be struck off the file.

Some officers are hard-worked no doubt. But I do not believe that any strengthening of the present cadre is called for. There is a sufficient number of Judges who, if made to work properly by the superior officers keeping a watchful eye over their work, can rise to the occasion and turn out a better work without encumbering the cause list.

If they show a capricious error of judgment in any case they should be censured departmentally. A frequent use of technical objections being sustained should not be encouraged. A departmental order should be issued that in case the officers give effect to a not very clear technical objection they should decide other points as well as a matter of practice.

A speedy disposal of cases may be insisted upon, but for purposes of promotion greater importance may be attached to the quality of the work done.

Whatever may be the state of the public opinion in these benighted Provinces, a capable conscientious, and equity-loving Judge is sure to gain popularity with people of every shade of opinion.

In Oudh Saiyid Sharf Ali, a Subordinate Judge, has earned the just reputation of being a thoroughly satisfactory Judge. He is a Judge of whom any administration may well feel proud. The other Judges may do well to follow his example.

It is a painful spectacle to find that the reputation which the Indian Judges enjoyed for better quality of the judicial work being turned out, borders on the verge of being tarnished.

Undoubtedly some evil star is presiding over the destinies of India. Our unfortunate generation is going to undo the work of a past generation of Indian Judges deservedly known for their hard work, patience and justice-loving disposition

It is therefore yet early to nip the evil in the bud.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,

A suggestion to give direct appointment in the higher grades of the Police department to Indians of good social position.

12. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th April, says that as appointments of Indians in the Police department are generally made in the lower grades of the service, men of good social position do not find the line sufficiently attractive, and that men of low social status who enter the service as constables are seldom able to leave off their vices even when they are promoted to higher grades. This is surely an ugly blot on the Police service, and the editor hopes that with a view to attract a better class of Indians to the Police department Government would do well to give them direct appointments in the higher grades.

Suggested total abolition of the salt duty.

13. The Express (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says:—The Indian people are to all intents and purposes a nation of vegetarians, a very small percentage among them using meat as a daily dish and that, too, in a very small quantity. And vegetarians eat more salt than meat-eaters.

* * * * * * *

Above all, when we consider that the wages of the ryot in many parts of India only amounts to three pence a day, and often does not exceed two pence, it is obviously possible to understand that he cannot afford to pay a whole day's wage for 1½ lbs. of salt, for the use of himself, family, and plough bullocks should he possess any. Nothing less than the abolition of the duty with liberty to any man living on the sea coast to prepare his own salt will help to improve the health of the people as far as the use of salt can do it.

The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 25th April, expresses the same views.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th April, 1906.

Construction of Municipal public works at Meerut.

14. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th April, publishes a communication in which the writer complains that the construction of its public works by hired labour which the Meerut Municipal Board has lately adopted in place of getting work done by contract as has hitherto been the practice, has proved more expensive, and the work is unnecessarily prolonged. The supervision is lax, and the full number of labourers paid for are never seen at work. The mate or head labourer, who is a protégé of an influential member, is dishonest. To prevent the waste of public money, the writer therefore suggests that a retired European engineer had better be placed in charge of the Municipal public works, and a sub-overseer, who should not be a native of Meerut or a friend of a Municipal member, placed under him, that the old contract system be re-introduced, and that tenders be considered and accepted by the Public Works Committee in the presence of the Collector.

The pilgrim tax levied at Ajodhya by the Fyzabad Municipality.

15. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 25th April, referring to the proposal of the Fyzabad Municipality to collect its pilgrim tax (at Ajodhya) through the Railway authorities by adding the amount of tax to the railway fare, states that though the proposed arrangement will conduce to the pilgrims' convenience, the tax will nevertheless be a burden, and the Municipal Board had better defer its drainage scheme and plead its inability to carry it out, rather than saddle pilgrims from distant parts of the country with this disagreeable impost.

Alleged inadequacy of the water supply for putting out fires at Lucknow.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says :—The breaking out of fires is the order of the day. Within the last week no less than three fires broke out in the Aminabad and Nayagaon muhallas causing serious loss of property if no injury to life or limb. As is natural, it is the poor who suffer most, living as they do in thatched or tiled cottages which are now turned into so much combustible matter on account of the heat. The pity is that the work of the fire brigade is in this city done by the disinfecting syringes with the Health Office, which are themselves very few and quite unsuited to the new task they are called upon to perform. By the way the Municipality had spent sixty thousand rupees in erecting a raised reservoir at Aishbagh, on the assurance that the water supply of the city would be kept up continuous for the twenty-four hours. But our hydrants refuse to work after 7 A. M. not a little to the inconvenience of the citizens, especially during the hot seasons. The Municipal fire engine could not be of any avail, and even if it could come in time it would have failed to save the burning shops from fire as there is no water during the night in the pipes. People having dispensed with their old rope and dol, thus find themselves helpless when any fire breaks out.

The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 25th April, expresses similar views.

18. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 24th April, says that the objection taken by the Congress papers to Sir Bampfylde Fuller's proposal to lower the preliminary educational standard for the Muhammadan candidates for the pleadership examination in his province is simply frivolous. The editor sees no harm in the proposal for a province where education is backward and whose inhabitants would be elbowed out by the Calcutta Bengalis unless they are shown special concessions by the Government in their first attempt to make progress.

ADVOCATE,
19th April, 1906.

The Advocate on the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th April, says :—It was at Barisal where Sir Bampfylde Fuller had called the leading gentlemen of the town and told them that if they did not cease from further agitation against the Partition and in favour of Swadeshism, he would treat them in the manner Sháista Khan, the last Moghal

Governor, had treated their ancestors—a remark which we were told Sir Bampfylde regretted in his calmer moments. It is again at Barisal that the fire of discontent has been set ablaze by indiscretions committed by the officers, which his Government will regret only too soon. Sir Bampfylde Fuller appears to be bent on proving himself in no way an inferior edition of Sháista Khan. He does not stop to think whether he injures the Government whom he is serving or the people whom he is called upon to rule. Let us first give the facts of this irritating incident. On Sunday morning we received the following message from Barisal:—

> The Bengal Provincial Conference met at Barisal this noon (14th April). When the delegates were escorting President Mr. Rasool to the paudal uttering "Bande Mátaram" which had been interdicted by a circular of the New Government in East Bengal and which circular had been pronounced illegal by Mr. Pugh, the Police with regulation láthis made sorties on younger and less known delegates as well as upon unoffending bystanders and committed serious assaults on them breaking one or two heads. After this the District Superintendent of Police arrested Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and took him to the Magistrate as he was leading the escort. Babu Moti Lal Ghose and others offered themselves also to be arrested, but the District Superintendent of Police said that his orders were to arrest Babu Surendra Nath and none else. All leading men would have been glad to be arrested. This day's occurrence prove the truth of the many reports of illegalities committed on inoffensive and peaceful people bent upon serving their country.

[Then followed extracts from the Amrit Bazar Patrika and the Bengali relating to the incident].

All this has happened not in a badly governed Native State nor in any dominion under Asiatic rulers but in British territory, which had been governed on constitutional lines for over one century and a half. The responsibility of the incident cannot be placed on the District Superintendent of Police or the District Magistrate alone. The whole affair was prearranged. The Magistrate desired to teach a lesson under orders from above to the Calcutta leader, and so he held his court even on a gazetted holiday. Now the offence of which Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was charged was no offence according to the law of the land and he could not be arrested on that account. Sir Bampfylde Fuller had declared the reciting of Bande Mátaram to be an offence. Sir Bampfylde Fuller is not a law unto himself, and as such no subject of the King is bound to obey illegal orders promulgated by any executive Government. Babu Surendra Nath and the entire Conference were within their rights to recite the song which has not yet been declared by the legislature to be seditious. Even if it was within the competence of the Magistrate to prevent the formation of a procession or the singing of certain songs on public streets, the procession which was led by Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was not a procession in the sense in which the word has been used in the Police Act. Infliction of fine on an accused person for contempt of Court was an unheard-of thing. But this has happened in a province said to be within the regulation area. The whole thing was absurd from beginning to end. Sir Bampfylde Fuller by this blunder has simply strengthened the hands of the Partition agitators and made their case stronger. He has brought discredit on the Government of his province and it now lies between him and Lord Minto to decide whether he is competent by his temperament to rule a province. The matter of fact is this. Sir B. Fuller had assured Lord Minto, and His Excellency the Viceroy had assured the Parliament through Mr. Morley, that the agitation against the Partition was dying. Mr. Morley had on this ground declined to re-open the question. But Sir B. Fuller soon found out his mistake. Instead of allowing the agitation to take its course, he attempted to kill it by the adoption of violent measures, all of which were doomed to failure. If the agitation against Partition was dying, then why all this excitement? Why should Russian methods be adopted to rule people who are said to be no more agitated? Why should the Magistrate assume the position of a middleman for the sale of Manchester piece-goods? Why should the police try to coerce people by assaulting the inoffensive among them? If the agitation had died, what should have brought people in thousands to receive Babu Surendra Nath and Calcutta leaders, to greet them on their way to Barisal? The agitation has not died: the foolish coercive measures adopted and the attempts made to suppress a genuine feeling will increase the unrest and discontent and create ill-will against the administration.

The Barisal incident cannot be treated as one confined to a town or the province of Eastern Bengal and Assam. It is an affair which affects the status of every Indian subject of King Edward and opens wider questions which must soon be settled. No human power can degrade Babu Surendra Nath in the estimation of his countrymen. One has just to bring to his mind the spectacle of the District Superintendent of Police arresting an elderly man like Babu Surendra Nath, an idol in his countrymen's affection and love, the District Superintendent of Police desiring to take him to the Magistrate and from there to jail and yet respectable men and no felons beseeching the policemen to take them also to the Magistrate. This illegal arrest, this summary trial and this conviction and infliction of a heavy fine are events which will, besides rousing indignation all over the country, raise graver questions as to the methods which are to be used in the administration of the land.

Is India to be ruled by constitutional methods or by the caprices and whims of the executive? If in Eastern Bengal liberty of speech, freedom of action, and the procedure laid down by the statutes are to be set aside at the sweet will of one individual—let what be the position of the person,—what guarantee is there that the same thing might not be done in other parts of India, and thus one of the greatest guarantees for peace and order in the country taken away? It is this aspect of the question which will create a feeling of dissatisfaction in all parts of India; it will rouse feelings of dismay which it will take years to erase. Of course all constitutional methods will be adopted to see the great wrong done righted; but beyond appeals and petitions something more is required, and that is to keep up a vigorous agitation to make it impossible for the executive to set aside all laws and be party to proceedings which are likely to create insecurity and to encourage lawlessness. We look upon indiscriminate assaults, arrests of young men in Bengal engaged in the Swadeshi movement and this arrest of Babu Surendra Nath as God-sends to condemn, in the eyes of the responsible rulers of the Empire and the civilised world, the system of bureaucratic Government which on the least excitement created by its blundering measures loses its head.

The Hindustáni (Lucknow,) of the 25th April, expresses similar views.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), in its issues of the 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th April, giving a detailed account of the incident, also disapproves of the action of the authorities.

ADVOCATE,
19th April, 1906.

Indignation felt in the United Provinces at the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th April, says:—A telegram announcing the arrest of Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji was received in Lucknow on Sunday morning and soon the news was the subject of general talk in the educated community. It produced a profound sensation; great indignation was felt against the Fuller methods of administration and deep sympathy with Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji. Similar is the feeling in all centres of thought in these Provinces. Reports from Allahabad, Cawnpore and Benares speak of the same feeling.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th April, 1906.

The Indian People on the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

23. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th April, says:—On the 15th instant we received the following telegram from Barisal:—'The Bengal Provincial Conference met at Barisal this noon (14th April). When the delegates were escorting President Rasúl to the Pandal uttering Bande Mátaram, which had been interdicted by a circular of the new Government in East Bengal and which had been pronounced illegal by Mr. Pugh, the police with regulation láthis made a sortie on the younger and less known delegates as well as upon unoffending bystanders and committed serious assaults upon them, breaking one or two heads. After this the District Superintendent of Police arrested Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji and took him to the Magistrate as he was leading the escort and was prominent. Babu Moti Lal Ghose and others also offered to be arrested, but the District Superintendent of Police said that his orders were to arrest Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji and no one else. All leading men would have been glad to be arrested. This day's occurrence proves the truth of the many reports of illegalities committed on inoffensive and peaceful people bent upon serving their country.'

Subsequently we learn that the Magistrate commenced by taunting and insulting Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji, who protested and claimed to defend himself. Forthwith the Magistrate charged Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji with contempt of court and called upon him to apologise. Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji declined to do so, saying that he had not the slightest intention of committing contempt of court. The Magistrate thereupon fined him Rs. 200 for contempt of court, and another Rs. 200 under the Police Act for leading a procession without a license and disobeying the orders of the Local Government by shouting Bande Mátaram. The fine was paid and Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji returned straight to the Conference which was in full session. At the Conference he was greeted with tumultuous and exultant shouts of Bande Mátaram and had to stand on a table, the delegates pressing forward to take the dust of his feet. Afterwards the business of the Conference proceeded.

Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji might have refused to pay the fine and preferred to go to jail. But his presence in the jail was not so necessary as at the Conference. It would have been a superfluous protest. When he went to Barisal he was ready to go to jail and others were ready to go with him. The Government of East Bengal or any other Government can have him arrested or sent to jail with or without a trial. But the great thing to consider was—was the Conference to be abandoned because of the arrest of Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji ? As long as it was not broken up by main force the Conference should have been held and it was so held. Through its most distinguished leader the authorities aimed a blow at the Conference itself, and they would have been pleased if it had been broken up in terror and disorder. Thanks to the courage and patriotism of the leaders such a step was never thought of, and Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji himself returned to the Conference directly the Police and the Magistrate had done with him.

Out of the Conference what were the feelings of the people ? This may be judged by a telegram sent from Allahabad to Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji :—"We congratulate you upon your triumphant vindication of the national cause and glory in the crown of patriotism and martyrdom placed on your brow. May you live long to lead us !" That is the feeling throughout the country. We deprecate any movement to sympathize with Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji, or to express regret at what has happened. If the arrest of Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji were dishonour or humiliation, why should the other leaders of Bengal have been anxious to share his treatment ? It was because they felt it was a great glory and a great honour that they offered themselves for arrest. The history of the world is full of such instances when what the authorities call punishment is called martyrdom by the people, and men so treated are called martyrs by history and not criminals. Charles Stuart Parnell and the Irish leaders were sent to jail for an offence against the laws of the country. Did their countrymen regard it as a dishonour ? Jesus of Nazareth was judicially tried and sentenced to death on the cross by a duly constituted court of justice. Is he regarded as a criminal to-day ? The man whom the Magistrate of Barisal sentenced to a fine stands higher to-day in the estimation of his countrymen than he did the day before the District Superintendent of Police arrested him, and men pushed one another in the struggle to take the dust of his feet.

Does any one really believe that Mr Surendra Nath Banerji committed contempt of court, or really violated the law ? Did he go to Barisal to invite a conflict with the authorities, or to help the work of the Conference ? The 14th of this month was a close holiday, and yet the Magistrate was waiting for the great leader of New India to be brought before him as a prisoner. Everything had been decided beforehand. The District Superintendent of Police had his orders. He was to arrest only Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji and no one else. The charge was a trumpery one, but it was enough, and the Magistrate was sufficiently resourceful to add another charge of contempt of court. The object was to strike terror into the hearts of the bold men who had decided to hold the Conference at Barisal, or to exasperate them into some act of violence. But neither object was gained. The Conference went on as if nothing had happened, and no one sought a conflict with the police.

Some of the delegates and bystanders were assaulted severely by the police in the presence of the District Superintendent, who never intervened. When a complaint was made at the police station the complainants were referred to the court. At the Conference it was declared that as there was no constitutional Government at Barisal it was unnecessary to go through the entire programme.

What do Englishmen themselves think of the recent occurrences in Barisal? Will they tend to strengthen the foundations of British rule, and to strengthen public confidence in British justice? No one has ever questioned the power of the Government to arrest and punish Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji or any one else. But does the strength of the Government consist in force, or in justice? Does the Government approve of what has been done in Barisal by the police and the Magistrate? Or, is it thought that the people will be cowed down by what has happened and will abandon legitimate and constitutional agitation? As was pointed out by an Anglo-Indian paper sometime ago, one regiment of cavalry can overrun all Bengal. In fact the question of resistance to authority has never arisen, because hope of redress has not yet died out among the people.

Is it, however, only Bengal that has been stirred by this news from Barisal? The Government knows better than that. And there is no responsible Government which can afford to ignore the fact that every corner of India is responding to the same note of indignation and exultation. If the police and the magistrate of Barisal are supported by the Local Government, as they undoubtedly will be, and then by the Government of India, and finally the Secretary of State for India, it will mark the sign-post of the parting of the ways. The Government need not apprehend, as it does not, any violence or ebullition of feeling, but there will be an end to sympathetic co-operation. People now understand what to expect from the Government and its officers. Provincial Conferences have been held during the last twenty years and have never been interfered with. At Barisal the movement has been treated almost like a mutiny. Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji was arrested and fined and immediately afterwards shouts of Bande Mátaram were raised at the Conference, and people renewed the Swadeshi and boycott vow; what did the authorities do to prevent it? The District Superintendent of Police could not even oblige those who requested him to arrest them. Therefore the terrorism in Barisal has failed, as the leaders of Bengal are ready to go to jail. Will the Government devise sterner measures to suppress the new spirit that has appeared or will it try to realise the situation in a more reasonable spirit?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd April, 1906.

The Indian People on the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

24. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd April, says :—In our last issue we commented upon the scandalous state of affairs in Barisal. We have since read the official and the non-official versions, and in the light of further facts now available, the matter seems to call for a further discussion. It is no secret that the very name of Sir Bampfylde Fuller has now become odious to the educated community. But as if the notoriety already achieved by this breaker of all official decorum and constitutional principles was not enough, he seems determined to cover himself with still further obloquy. It would ordinarily be hard to believe that anything like what has happened in Barisal was possible in a country with the least pretensions to a civilized and constitutional Government, and yet hard facts can scarcely be passed over. The illegal proceedings of the officials at Barisal would be quite sufficient in a European country to bring about an immediate change in the personnel of an administration. No Government in Europe, excepting it be Russia, could afford for a day to be so insane, insolent and ruthless as the Government of Eastern Bengal. What was the head and front of the offence of Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji for which he was arrested by an insolent Police Superintendent, and marched off to the private residence of a yet more insolent Magistrate? Where is the Government which has prohibited in modern times the singing of patriotic songs? Where is the law in India which authorizes the prohibition of singing a patriotic song in a public street? Why should the singing of Bande Mátaram be interdicted? Is it or is it not a fact that one of the most eminent European counsels in India, Mr. Pugh, a former Advocate-General of Bengal, who we presume knows law better than the sapient ruler of Eastern Bengal and the whole host of his satellites, had pronounced against the illegality of the circular issued by the Government? And who does not know the observations thrown out by Sir Francis Maclean, Chief Justice, during the hearing of the Rungpur case, which finally resulted in the withdrawal of the prosecution? After all this, to have arrested a man of the position and influence of Mr. Surendra Nath, the idol of his educated countrymen, to have dispersed the Provincial Conference at Barisal in the name of law and to have assaulted the unarmed delegates, was not all this folly, nay, was it not malice and vindictiveness in its worst form? And what shall we say of a Magistrate who insults the accused, punishes him for contempt of court, when by his own conduct he brings the very name of court into disgrace, charges him with an offence of leading a procession without a license under the Police Act, and disobeying other lawful orders which are enshrouded in obscurity, denies the accused all chance of engaging a pleader, and forthwith punishes him with a sentence of fine? It is impossible to speak of a Magistrate like this creature of Sir Bampfylde Fuller with any patience. And yet it may be that there is a sufficient excuse for him. He was acting under inspiration, if we should be charitable enough not to say authority. We have heard of many magisterial vagaries, but of none like those with which this Magistrate's name is coupled. Not only does he do all this, but he abuses the machinery of law still further. When men who are assaulted by the police go to make a report to the police, the report is not regularly recorded. When they lodge a complaint through counsel before a Subordinate Magistrate he says he cannot issue process against the accused and sends the papers to this worthy District Magistrate. And when papers are taken to this same District Magistrate, he forthwith dismisses the complaints. Was there a grosser travesty of justice? Was law ever abused to this extent? Is there no remedy for these Russian methods of administration? We pause for an answer.

But it may be asked what was the underlying object of all this high-handedness? Was it that the Government of Eastern Bengal wanted to bring Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji into disgrace? If so, nothing could have been more foolish, more wicked and more mistaken. The country is not going to give up Mr. Banerji. He is literally the maker of Young India. He is the inspirer of our hopes, the best exponent of our ambitions, the most powerful interpreter of the new plan of thought in India. He may be poor in worldly possessions, he may not glory in decorations, but he is rich beyond all measure in a spirit of fervent patriotism. He is a power in the country. He has won his position not so much by his achievements, great as they no doubt are, as by suffering. His cause is the cause of justice, of truth, and of light, and he is unconquerable. Persecutions like the one to which he was subjected at Barisal, only deepen the people's love and esteem for him, while they show the mettle of which he is made. Long before the hope of a Governorship glimmered upon Sir Bampfylde, when he was perhaps tying the tape over his files in the Secretariat, or when he was trying pick-pockets and other members of that class of humanity, Mr. Surendra Nath had reached a height of fame to which many may aspire but few can attain. Such a man is not to be disgraced, nor to be cowed down by such outbreaks of vindictiveness, or by such threats and menaces. Sir Bampfylde cannot altogether have an easy conscience. For did he not revile Mr. Banerji at Barisal itself a few months ago, and does he not know that of all men, Mr. Surendra Nath has been the most unsparing critic of his administration, or 'to be more accurate' his maladministration? But it is useless to speak of conscience. If the Government of Eastern Bengal may be said to be above such petty revenge, then we may ask whether all this high-handedness was not meant to suddenly crush all agitation and thus add to the veracity of the report sent to Mr. Morley about the subsiding of popular feeling over the Partition of Bengal? Or, lastly, was it a temptation offered to the leaders of Bengal to take the law in their own hands, and thus to drown their voices in the retirement of prison-cells? It is really difficult to say what it was. But one thing is certain. No people whose patience has been tried so sorely could have shown more admirable self-control and greater organization at one and the same time. If the incident at Barisal demonstrates the danger of an autocratic rule, it also marks a distinct advance in the history of political agitation in India.

But it is not only with respect to what happened to Mr. Banerji or the other delegates that the Barisal incident will rankle in the public mind for a long time to come. It opens a question of much graver and wider importance. It shows that a wrong-headed Magistrate or Governor may at any time stop a public meeting for the flimsiest of reasons. It jeopardizes a most valued and time-honoured privilege of British citizenship.

And now what remains to be done? Shall the country be a silent spectator of all such misdeeds, of all such violations against the basal principle of British rule in India, or shall it call for some redress? Will the official account be accepted as the gospel truth? Will the indignation in the country be impotent?

We think there can be only one answer. The country calls upon Lord Minto to intervene. Let him put his foot down. If Lord Minto has already succumbed to his surroundings, will Mr. John Morley, who preached 'sentiment and sympathy' only the other day, interfere? We do not want any more high principles. We are already sick of them. We want their application to actual facts. The tax-payer has already paid largely for commissions that have added more and more to his troubles. Will Mr. Morley think of appointing a commission to enquire into the affairs of Eastern Bengal? We cannot say. We do not hope. But we may tell Mr. John Morley that the sooner he rids the country of men like Sir Bampfylde Fuller and his erring subordinates, the better it will be for the Government and the people alike. Popular feeling has already been too much sacrificed at the altar of prestige. No further sacrifices of it can be made with safety to the interests of the body politic. Otherwise, all this talk about sympathy and sentiment is the veriest cant and the grossest delusion. Conciliation is no more weakness than prestige is power. Let Lord Minto and Mr. Morley think coolly and act bravely. The country refuses to be humbugged any more.

The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st April, referring to the incident, rejoices to observe that the illegal and high-handed conduct of the authorities at Barisal has only conduced to strengthen the cause of Swadeshism.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th April, 1906.

The Riyáz-ul Akhbár on the alleged state of unrest in Bengal.

25. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 20th April, referring to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal and the alleged state of unrest in Bengal, says that the Bengalis themselves are responsible for all this. Surely the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller cannot be blamed for its desire to see that meetings are conducted in a quiet orderly manner, and the Bengalis on their part can hardly gain anything by shouting "Bande Mátaram" and wasting their energies in public demonstrations. To take advantage of the arrest and punishment of Babu Surendra Nath for creating fresh agitation, is to court ruin by openly setting Government orders at defiance. If the Bengalis are going to make much fuss about this so-called political martyrdom of Babu Surendra Nath, the editor fears that Government will find it no easy task to preserve order, and may be compelled to take strong measures of repression. It would therefore be wise on the part of the Bengalis to give up the modes of agitation prevailing in England, and have due respect for the authorities, which is a characteristic feature of the Indian people. It is absurd to compare the measures adopted by the Government in India with Russian autocratic methods, for the comparison is not fair inasmuch as in Russia there is no revolutionising race distinct from the ruling race.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd April, 1906.

The cry of Bande Mátaram, and the people in Eastern Bengal.

26. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd April, says:—In the midst of the universal indignation to which the outrages at Barisal have given rise, we must not lose sight of a great, a significant, positive fact. The entire energy of the authorities was directed to the suppression of the cry Bande Mátaram. The leaders and the delegates believed, and with perfect justice, that any order to suppress that cry is illegal, for it is raised wherever Indians meet, from Peshawar to Chittagong and Simla to Malabar, and is never interfered with. When the police assaulted the delegates and the young men of the Anti-Circular Society they wanted the shout of Bande Mátaram to be stopped. But the men who were struck down by láthis and lay bleeding continued to shout Bande Mátaram all the time. After Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji had been arrested and taken before the Magistrate the delegates went shouting Bande Mátaram to the pavilion, and the police were powerless to stop them, though the assault might have been repeated. When the District Superintendent of Police dispersed the Conference it broke up with deafening shouts of Bande Mátaram. Let those who gibe at us and make mock of us say what they will, the first act of martyrdom has been consecrated at Barisal. Men who suffer for the faith they have, must, in the law of nature, qualify themselves for a more positive future.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd April,
1906.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd April, says:—We reproduce from the Bengalee the text of the judgment given by Mr. Emerson in the above case:—"One witness has been examined. The accused declines to examine himself, but asks for a delay in order that he may have a pleader to cross-examine, and bring witnesses. The case cannot be delayed for this. The order of fine of Rs. 200 for disobeying the order of the Magistrate and the Police, lawfully issued, is passed under section 188, Indian Penal Code, in default one month's imprisonment." The order in the contempt case has also been published. Mr. Emerson evidently believes that there is no appeal against his judgment, and the improper request of an accused person for a pleader and time should not be granted. The one witness evidently was the District Superintendent of Police. This judgment is also one that our countrymen will do well to remember.

The time will come, and it is not far distant, when certain historical dates will be borne in mind by all Indians. The first is the 14th April, 1906, when Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was arrested and fined at Barisal, with a dramatic suddenness and celerity which may be the despair of Russian officials. On the 15th the Barisal Provincial Conference was dispersed as a "disorderly" meeting by order of the District Magistrate. Other meetings were forbidden and a literary conference which had been arranged was abandoned. The arrest and fine did not scare Babu Surendra Nath Banerji out of Barisal, for on the 16th he went into the interior to address a meeting at a village, being followed by a strong force of police which dispersed the meeting before it could be held. On the 18th he returned to Calcutta.

On the 17th applications for summonses for assault against the District Superintendent of Police, Assistant Superintendent and other members of the police were made on behalf of several delegates to the senior Deputy Magistrate, who submitted the papers to the District Magistrate, who dismissed the complaints and struck them off the file. Mr. Emerson, the District Magistrate of Barisal, has made no mistake, and has done his part of the work thoroughly. When, however, the matter comes up in the calm sphere of the High Court a good deal of light may be thrown upon Mr. Emerson's ways, and his knowledge of law and procedure. We wonder if he is the same officer who was at Rungpore when the special constables' case cropped up.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

ADVOCATE,
22nd April, 1906.

28. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd April, says:—The Statesman deputed a special correspondent to Barisal soon after the dispersal by force of the Provincial Conference. The reporter waited on the District Superintendent of Police of the town who declined to give him his version without the permission of the District Magistrate, who, in his turn, said he could not furnish the official version without the Commissioner's sanction; the Commissioner made the same excuse and wanted the Local Government's sanction. From the pillar to the post the special correspondent had to run and the Government, after four days' mature consideration, gave out an official account of the incident:—

* * * * * * *

So the Eastern Bengal Government takes upon itself the full responsibility of all that has happened in Barisal. The report that Sir Bampfylde Fuller was privately present at Barisal during the Conference has not been yet contradicted. Now, what does this official version prove? Simply this that Sir Bampfylde Fuller has lost his head over this Bande Mátaram song; and this weakness has infected his subordinates. They were either revengeful against the Calcutta leaders or were afraid of the Bengalis. True, the Government had interdicted the singing of the patriotic song Bande Mátaram. But the song was sung by outsiders, by people who are not residents of the new province. If they had committed an offence they could have been summoned before the Court. But why were they assaulted by the police?

It has not been alleged that Bande Mátaram are magic words and as soon as a Bengali sings Bande Mátaram he becomes disloyal to the Government. Bande Mátaram is no war cry and the worst Bengali-phobe cannot say that the shouting of Bande Mátaram does lead people to become lawless. No crime in Bakerganj can be attributed to the singing of this patriotic song. So it is not at all difficult to understand the motives of the Barisal executive in sending a large force of police to the meeting-place. There was no complaint from anybody that any breach of the public peace was apprehended. The delegates and visitors had not gone to attend the Conference with láthis to break each other's heads or with intention to proceed to the Magistrate's Court to break it in vengeance for the Partition measure for which he was not responsible. The presence of the police armed with láthis, guns and bayonets near the compound of the Conference Pandal could only be with one object, and that could not be any other than this—anyhow to find means to suppress the meeting. And the police thought that there could be no better means to do this than to create a row and declare the meeting to be an unlawful assembly. The police might have calculated that as soon as they would assault the delegates, the delegates would retaliate with the result that there would then be a regular riot. But the Bengal leaders were too shrewd to allow themselves to be drawn by the police with the result that the police have made themselves ridiculous in the eyes of the whole world.

If the police in India with the connivance of the Magistracy can degrade itself so low as to provoke people to lawlessness and breach of peace, how is it possible for the people to keep their patience and express confidence in a system of administration which can be guilty of these tricks? And it is the possibility of such occurrences that creates alarm.

Why did the police interfere in this way unless it were to lead people to lawlessness and thus get an opportunity to stigmatise them as rioters and law-breakers? This experience is not new. How to protect ourselves from these machinations, magisterial and police, is a question which ought to engage our attention.

The police before dispersing the Conference wanted the leaders to assure it that 5,000 men assembled at a public meeting would not utter a particular phrase after they had left the meeting. Now, can such an assurance be demanded in any other part of the world? To ask twenty men to stand security for five thousand is a preposterous request. And because Mr. A. Rasúl and his colleagues did not give the assurance, that is to say could not do an impossible thing, they were asked to disperse as if they were criminals engaged in some conspiracy against the State. The police was in a large force. It could have prevented people by force to utter Bande Mátaram. It could have filled the Exchequer by asking every one of the 5,000—according to popular version—and 8,000—according to the Police version—to pay Rs. 200 each for the privilege of uttering Bande Mátaram. Why, every one could also have been punished for contempt of court? But the police was not prepared to go to that length. It wanted the people, and not themselves, to obey a certain unlawful executive order. Such a thing is possible only in India, where the executive can without fear of public opinion take extreme measures on the least excitement, and attempt to humiliate the highest in the land without any risk. It is this aspect of the British administration in India which makes it unpopular.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd April, 1906.

The Indian People on the life and doings of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

29. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd April, says:—In Men of the Time there are one or two Indians whose careers find a place, but the name of Surendra Nath Banerji cannot be found in that publication.

* * * * * * * *

Had Surendra Nath Banerji remained a member of the Indian Civil Service, to-day he might have been a Commissioner or a Member of the Board of Revenue, or he might have been only a retired Civilian by this time. Other Indians have held these and other offices, and one or two of them are not even respected by their countrymen. The Government, when they turned the young Bengali out of the Civil Service on a trumpery charge for which he was hardly to blame, thought they had finished with him and given the quietus to his career. But men are short-sighted always, and never remember that man's destiny is in his own hands and not in that of others. The man who is crucified as a criminal by a great and powerful Government is called the Saviour of a whole continent a few years later. Men who are burnt as heretics at the stake are the martyrs of the Church, and men who are hunted as traitors and criminals are the patriots and exemplars of history. Well has the Persian sage said:—"Thy place in life is seeking after thee, therefore be thou at rest from seeking after it." As events have proved times out of number, a sentence of imprisonment imposed by a Government sometimes turns out to be a far greater honour than a title or distinction conferred by the same Government.

The first time that Surendra Nath Banerji came accidentally into conflict with the Calcutta High Court he had to face the first serious trial of his life. His removal from the Civil Service can hardly be called a trial, for it set him free from the trammels of office and placed his boundless energy and his matchless eloquence at the service of his country.

There are many who remember his trial at the High Court for contempt of court as a thing of yesterday. Mr. Justice Norris was furious because of the comparison with Judge Jeffreys. The Full Bench of the Court sat to try Surendra Nath Banerji. A mistake had been made and Mr. W. C. Bonnerji, Surendra Nath's counsel, advised his client to throw himself upon the mercy of the court. The only question was one of sentence. The one Indian Judge, the late Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, stood out boldly for a sentence of fine as quite sufficient for the ends of justice and upholding the prestige of the court. But the other Judges were of another opinion and a sentence of imprisonment for two months in the civil jail was passed. The court room, the corridors, the approaches to the court were thronged by an immense multitude among whom could be seen the most distinguished citizens of Calcutta. The military were called in to preserve order. The late Kumar Indra Chandra Singh was present in Court with a sum of a lakh of rupees in cash to pay down any fine that might be imposed. When sentence had been passed it was not deemed prudent to remove the prisoner in the common prisoners' van. It was reported at the time that Surendra Nath Banerji was taken to jail by a Sheriff officer in Mr. Justice Norris's own brougham.

The two months that Surendra Nath Banerji spent in jail marked an epoch in the history of the jail. His friends and admirers visited him in large numbers. When the day of his release arrived his friends waited outside the jail to give him a fitting reception. A carriage and four was in waiting for him. But there was a great disappointment in store for his friends. At about 4 o'clock in the morning Surendra Nath had been released and had been driven at his own request in a hackney carriage to the Sealdah station, whence he proceeded by rail to Barrackpore. On his return to Calcutta several meetings were organized in his honour. At one of these, held at the Free Church Institution, now Duff College, one of the most eloquent speeches was made by Mr. Justice Asutosh Mukerji, then a student at college. In an impassioned and eloquent speech, the future Judge of the High Court dwelt on the great qualities of "our illustrious leader."

Surendra Nath Banerji has never hesitated or paused in his duty. In the Municipality, in the Legislative Council, as a delegate to England, he has always pleaded the cause of his country and fought the good fight like a soldier good and true. Twice has he been elected President of the Indian National Congress and may be elected a third time. When Sir J. Bourdillon left the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal to take up the appointment of Resident in Mysore, he wrote a letter of warm appreciation to Surendra Nath Banerji, recognising him as the leader of the Opposition, his great ability and his transparent and conspicuous honesty of purpose.

The Partition of Bengal served to Surendra Nath as another trumpet call to duty. He has always been at the head of the agitation and is the foremost leader of the Swadeshi movement. He visited every village in Bengal and spoke to large audiences in homely Bengali. Some people were inclined to ask why he did not carry on his agitation to East Bengal after the high-handedness and lawlessness introduced by Sir Joseph Fuller. When Surendra Nath declared on the platform of the Congress at Benares that he and others were prepared to go to jail he had fully weighed his words. He had long been a hero to his countrymen; the Swadeshi movement made him their idol. And Sir Joseph Fuller has now placed the crown of patriotism and martyrdom on his head.

Other patriotic Indians have served their country, Surendra Nath has suffered for it, and consquently his position is unique. Governments have their own way and no Government is wiser than another when dealing with the force of popular opinion. Probably no other Local Government in India would have acted as the Government of East Bengal has done, but the responsibility must be shared by the Government of India as well as the British Government. The cup of Surendra Nath's martyrdom may or may not be full, but his place in the hearts of his countrymen is secure. Penetrated through and through by the love for his country and the people, his splendid abilities and his marvellous energy devoted to the cause of his country, persecuted by a Government which claims to be the most enlightened in the world, Surendra Nath Banerji stands forth to-day as the most heroic, the most illustrious, figure in India, the intrepid, eloquent and undaunted herald of a new hope, the prophet of a new age, the Brahmin through whose sufferings may be expedited the regeneration of his race!

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd April, 1906.

Suggestion for holding a public meeting at Allahabad to protest against the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

30. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd April, says:—The barbarities of the authorities at Barisal, the absolutely illegal arrest and conviction of Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji have excited the most intense indignation throughout India and meetings of protest have been held at Lahore, Madras, and other distant places. We are yet waiting for a meeting at Allahabad, which is the nearest provincial capital to Bengal. The most deliberately insolent paragraph about the Barisal incident has appeared in an Allahabad Anglo-Indian paper, and that calls for a protest as much as the original scandal itself. If possible, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji is admired more outside Bengal than even in his own province, and at the present moment he is the centre of the national sentiment. The meetings that are being held all over the country must not be interpreted as expressions of sympathy for Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji. They are merely the flickerings of a fast diminishing faith in British justice. If we still hope for justice from the Government we are bound to declare our feelings publicly, and the meetings all over the country show that the faith of the people is not yet dead. The abandonment of the idea of a public meeting will not imply approval of what has been done at Barisal, but the loss of faith in the justice of the Government. We do not owe a public meeting to Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji so much as to the Government itself, for we are most anxious to dissociate the Government from the action of the authorities at Barisal. If the Barisal affair is publicly approved and supported by the Government there will be no longer any need for public meetings, for it will amount to a denial of the right of meeting and constitutional agitation. We must not, by our own indifference, lend colour to the impression that we have ceased to have faith in the right of public protest. The feeling everywhere is that the Government of East Bengal is pursuing a course foreign to the genius of British rule and altogether Russian in its methods, and against this we must everywhere emphatically protest so long as there may be hope of hearing left.

A public meeting to be held at Allahabad to protest against the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

31. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says:—A correspondent wires from Allahabad:—"A public meeting will be held here on Saturday next on the maidán behind the Bengali School at 6 P. M. to give expression to public sentiment regarding the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and other events of Barisal. The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya will preside."

BHARAT JIWAN
23rd April, 1906.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

32. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 23rd April, referring to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, states that the authorities at Barisal have acted against the law in a most barefaced way as they are not justified in taking the cry of Bande Mátaram and the invocation of a deity as indications of disaffection towards Government. This action of the Government has simply helped to infuse fresh vigour into the Swadeshi movement. It is to be hoped that Lord Minto will consider it expedient to check the high-handed proceedings of the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

The Citizen on the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

CITIZEN,
23rd April, 1906.

33. The *Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd April, says:—A telegraphic message sent to the address of our distinguished fellow-citizen, the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, filled the Indian public of Allahabad with consternation, as, in the stillness of the Sabbath, the news spread on the 15th instant, like wild fire through the length and breadth of it, that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was arrested at Barisal. Babu Surendra Nath is a citizen of the Empire, belonging as much to the United Provinces, the Punjab, Bombay and Madras as to United Bengal herself. Distance, they say, lends a charm to an object. It is no wonder, therefore, that the Bengali patriot is regarded by people in the other provinces as a veritable hero, and his actions wrought "hoping for nothing again" may inspire in them a like spirit of self-devotion.

True to its tactics, the Pioneer has nothing to say on the summary trial of Babu Surendra Nath by Mr. Emerson. All that it has done is to reproduce a short paragraph from the Statesman under the heading "Conflict with the police at Barisal," and does not think it worth its while to enlighten its readers on the fresh qualities that the new ruler of the new province has developed as an unscrupulous fighter. For the benefit of our own readers, as well as such readers of our contemporary as may care to know how Indian leaders are, in the discharge of that which is not to win them promotion, wealth or glory, but which is simple duty, being persecuted and prosecuted by the powers that be, we give below a brief statement of the incidents that led to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath and his fine of Rs. 400.

Some 300 delegates from various parts of Bengal had reached Barisal by the 13th instant. The next day at about 2 P. M., they were walking in a body behind the carriage of their president to the place appointed for the meeting. Now, in front of the compound in which they were to meet, a large body of police, a few carrying guns and the others regulation láthis, was stationed. As soon as the leading delegates had walked in, the Police began to beat the rest with regulation láthis and snatched their badges from some. One was mercilessly beaten and thrown into a tank, on which, a certain policeman exclaimed that the man was dying and pulled him out. Another was felled senseless at the gate of the compound. The police went inside the compound and assaulted people there. Bystanders in the lanes were also assaulted by the police, who made sorties on them with láthis. Many people including delegates were wounded, some severely. The delegates did not even carry walking sticks. The District Superintendent himself assaulted several delegates. He and the Assistant Superintendent were present all through, and the whole incident took place in their presence. They were asked to stop the assault, but in vain. Some of the leaders who had gone ahead came back and protested against the assault.

Babu Surendra Nath Banerji who had gone ahead was arrested by the District Superintendent of police and taken to the Magistrate. Others also offered to be arrested, but the District Superintendent refused to make further arrests, saying that his instructions were to arrest Babu Surendra Nath alone. The rest of the delegates then proceeded to the Conference amid deafening cries of Bande Mátaram. No cry of Bande Mátaram had been raised prior to the assault by the police.

* * * * * * * *

The above is the first phase of the Barisal Provincial Conference. The next is that the Government of Eastern Bengal have prohibited the meeting since the leaders were unable to give an undertaking that there should be no crying of Bande Mátaram in the public streets. Whilst the meeting was in progress, the Police Superintendent served the leaders with a notice under section 144 of the Indian Penal Code, prohibiting the further sitting of the Conference; but this notice was not complied with, till the Superintendent came in and told the president the terms upon which the Conference would be allowed to proceed, namely those which we have mentioned above. The undertaking was not given, and the Superintendent then ordered the Conference to disperse and gave the leaders their choice of doing so quietly or compelling the invocation of Police aid. It is needless to say that the Conference then dispersed.

Our local contemporary is of course silent over the entire event. But then there is the Englishman that has been doing its level best to misrepresent matters. Resolute to see that the delegates who were assaulted in such a cowardly manner receive no sympathy from the outside public, this paper has given out that the Bengali leaders had "with the mischievous idea of making trouble" purposely selected Barisal as the place for holding their Conference, "as it had earned an unenviable notoriety during the recent boycott agitation." Such insinuations are altogether beneath notice, and only tend to show how unmanly and un-English is the spirit from which they emanate. As a matter of fact, Barisal was selected as the place for holding this year's Conference at the Conference held about this time last year at Mymensingh, and long before the boycott agitation took its rise. The idea of brewing mischief, therefore, originated not with the Bengali leaders, but with the unconstitutional Government of the new province. The remark of the Police Superintendent, too, who refused to arrest the other leaders, his instructions being to arrest Babu Surendra Nath alone, is significant.

ARYA MITRA,
24th April, 1906.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

34. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th April, after giving an account of the interference of the authorities with the meeting of the Bengal Provincial Conference at Barisal, observes that this was the first instance in India in which a peaceful meeting was dispersed through the agency of the police, and that the proceedings adopted by the authorities were quite unworthy of British rule which holds law supreme, though they might be things of frequent occurrence in a country like Russia. It is useless for sympathisers with Babu Surendra Nath to hold meetings and transmit telegrams of sympathy to him. They should rather make a joint representation to the Indian Government to have the offending officers warned.

The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th April, expresses similar views.

AL BASHIR,
24th April, 1906.

Al Bashir on the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

35. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 24th April, says that as the Secretary of State observed in Parliament that the anti-Bengal partition agitation was subsiding, the Bengalis were roused to renewed activity, desiring to demonstrate that their opposition was as strong as ever. At the meeting of their Provincial Conference which was lately held at Barisal, they endeavoured to draw in the Musalmans who wished to keep aloof. A disturbance of the peace was thus apprehended by the authorities who with the view to preserving order, prohibited the parade of any political processions, and the shouting of Bande Mátaram in the public streets. Mr. A. Rasul, an obscure Muhammadan barrister, who merely sought self-aggrandisement, was selected President of the Conference by the Calcutta political leaders. When on the arrival of the Bengali leaders from Calcutta, a procession was formed to proceed to the Conference Pandál, a breach of the public peace was apprehended from continued shouting of Bande Mátaram, and the police endeavoured to induce the procession to proceed quietly but in vain. The District Superintendent of Police was thus obliged to arrest Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, the principal leader. When taken to the Magistrate's court the Babu behaved insolently towards the presiding officer and was fined for contempt of court and for being a member of an unlawful assembly. Telegrams were despatched throughout the country to publish the so-called political martyrdom of the Babu, who in return received telegrams of condolence and sympathy. The fact that the magistrate held his court even on a holiday to try the Babu simply shows his vigilance and freedom from personal ill-feeling; otherwise the Babu would have been sent to the lock-up to await his trial on the opening of the court.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th April, 1906.

The anti-Partition agitation and the need for union among the Muhammadans.

36. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th April, states that the real cause of the continuance of the anti-Partition agitation is that the Bengalis and their sympathisers in other provinces are afraid of the progress of the Muhammadan community which will result from the partition and which is calculated to deprive the Bengalis of their exclusive enjoyment of the benefits of office. Muhammadans ought to take a lesson from other nations and should first form themselves into a compact harmonious body, before thinking of acting in concert with other communities.

Indignation felt at the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji in the various provinces of India.

ADVOCATE,
26th April, 1906.

37. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says :—The outburst of the feeling of indignation which is passing over the country over the Barisal affair, which is subject of talk in all private circles in these, of influential public demonstrations in the advanced, Provinces, makes one thing clear, namely, that the Barisal outrage is not looked upon as merely a local affair, but an Imperial question concerning the liberties of all subjects of the King-Emperor. Babu Surendra Nath Banerji's individuality is great, but it is not his personality that has roused so much interest as the fear that what has happened in Eastern Bengal to-day may happen in any other province to-morrow. If in Eastern Bengal it is possible to disperse an assembly by brute force simply on the ground that the leaders numbering half-a-dozen were not in a position to guarantee that 7,000 or 8,000 persons assembled in a place would not sing a patriotic song after the meeting be over, any conference, religious, social, or political, might be dispersed. The position of the leaders responsible for such conferences and meetings becomes very delicate. Hitherto the conveners of public meetings in India as elsewhere could be held responsible for the words which they uttered in expressing the feeling of the entire body. They had never been held responsible for the speeches made by others in the meeting and surely not for what they or others did outside the hall. If it comes within the competence of the District Magistrate to disperse a meeting in apprehension of what is likely to happen after the meeting, then all public meetings shall have to be stopped and there will be an end of political congresses and conferences, as also of social reform meetings and caste gatherings. In Upper India what important town is there which does not hold its Arya Samaj annual demonstration which people in large numbers join and pass in processions through the streets singing patriotic songs ? These become liable to be dispersed at the sweet will of the Magistrate. There are Nadwat-ul-Ulama, Sanátan Dharm Sabha and a number of other organisations which deal with religious, social and economical questions and appeal to the sentiments of the community. These all are likely to be interfered with if the powers of the District Magistrate are not defined in this respect and the Government of India upholds the doings of the Government of Eastern Bengal.

* * * * * * *

Of all the meetings so far held the Madras meeting was the most influential attended.

* * * * * * *

The meeting was attended by over ten thousand persons. When such a large number of distinguished lawyers in Madras declare the circular of the Fuller Government to be illegal arbitrary proceedings of the Magistrate and the police, we dare say the legal advisers of the Government of India will take time to consider the question. The Madras protest meeting was emphatic. Its first resolution runs as follows :

> "That this meeting of the citizens of Madras expresses its emphatic and indignant protest against the high-handed proceedings of the authorities at Barisal in causing the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and the dispersion by a police force of the Provincial Conference of Bengal, as a flagrant infringement of the liberties of British subjects and a subversion of the principles of Constitutional Government."

These Provinces, expect the legal luminaries of Allahabad and Lucknow to take the lead in the matter and give expression to the general feeling of apprehension and alarm created by the doings at Barisal. These Provinces join with the rest of India in demanding a guarantee for the free use of the rights of public meeting and freedom of speech, which we have so long enjoyed and which it is to the advantage of the State and the people that Indians should continue to enjoy.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th April, 1906.

Memorial in honour of Sir James Digges LaTouche.

38. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th April, rejoices to hear that the Talukdars of Oudh contemplate the founding of some institution of public utility in memory of Sir James Digges LaTouche, whose beneficent acts, and especially his services in the cause of education, have won the hearts of the people. Such a memorial will, in the editor's opinion, more fittingly preserve the memory of His Honour than a statue.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th April, 1906.

The Muhammadans, and higher appointments in Government Service.

39. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th April, disagreeing with the views of those who think that Bengalis and other Hindus have secured a larger share of important Government appointments than the Muhammadans on account of the former's political agitation, says that the preponderance of the Hindu element in the public service is due simply to their superior merits and qualifications, and that the Muhammadans too will fare equally well if they are found similarly qualified. It is absurd to suppose that Government is frightened by the political agitation of Hindus and confers high appointments on them to conciliate them.

MOHINI,
24th April 1906.

Alleged unsympathetic attitude of Government towards the people of India.

40. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 24th April, complains that the laws introduced in India by the British Government are too harsh for the mild, law-abiding and loyal people, and what makes matters worse is that the local administrators are left free to do what they please, being supported in the long run by the higher authorities, both in this country and by the Secretary of State for India, seeing that Mr. Morley also has lately deprecated interference with accomplished facts. Under these circumstances, the unfortunate people can only pray for the alleviation of their sufferings.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th April, 1906.

Need for promotion of friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

41. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th April, referring to the speech of Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk at Aligarh, on the need for promotion of mutual good feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans (vide article No. 25, on page 206 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), suggests that the Press and the educated members of both communities should take the lead in the furtherance of the cause.

A case of practical Sati at Calcutta.

42. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says :—A case of practical sati has occurred in Calcutta. A young Brahmin woman, who had lost her husband a week ago from plague, on Thursday locked herself in her room and set fire to her sári with matches. She uttered no cry and it was only when the smoke was seen issuing from the room that the other inmates burst open the door and found her lying on the ground enveloped in flames. She was removed to the Mayo Hospital, where she died the following day.

ADVOCATE,
26th April, 1906.

Alleged suicide committed by some persons while performing the homa ceremony.

43. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says :—A Sádhu performed homa ceremony at Wased, near Ahmedabad. He piled firewood in an old disused well, lighted it and invited his followers to jump with him, assuming that no harm would be done and that they would have a glimpse of Bhagwán and happiness of the Paradise. He, along with nine others, five of whom were women, jumped into the fire in the presence of a crowd. Soon after they cried for help. Three out of ten were taken out alive by the by-standers. Of these three, two died subsequently. The third is in a critical condition.

HINDOSTHAN,
24th April, 1906.

Need for better provision for the comfort of third class railway passengers.

44. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 24th April, is glad to learn that the Railway Board has directed its attention to the need for better provision for the convenience of third class passengers on Indian railways, and observes that this class of passengers, which contributes so largely to the Railway income, ought to be better cared for.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
25th April, 1906.

Certain complaints against the Oudh and Rohilkhand and other Railway administrations.

45. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th April, publishes a letter from one L. N. Varma who recounts his experience of railway travelling over the Oudh and Rohilkhand, East Indian and other Railways last year. While travelling from Dehra Dun to Moradabad on the 1st April, 1905, he found that at the Lhaksar station the passengers were ordered to vacate the carriages as the train by which they came was not to proceed on its journey. After some time a train came from Saharanpur and they were all directed to occupy it, but when they did so, they were shortly after asked to leave that train also. It was now morning and the passengers required water for ablution and other purposes, but a body of European artillerymen had taken possession of the pump at the station and would not allow any one else to approach it. At last another train became available at about 8 A. M., but it had only a single intermediate class carriage without a water-closet. In another journey the writer experienced much difficulty in buying a ticket at the Bareilly station. On 3rd of August the writer had to wait for several hours at Hardoi, before he could obtain a ticket because the Bengali clerk declined to issue a ticket for him though according to the rules the booking office at Hardoi ought to remain open from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M. He was not even allowed to occupy the bench provided at the station for intermediate class passengers. He also found that the rule fixing the limit of passengers for each compartment was not generally observed. On 31st of August when proceeding from Hardoi to Bareilly, he found that the mail train had only two intermediate compartments, one of which was occupied by Europeans, and the other was overcrowded by natives, so that several intermediate class passengers had to travel in third class carriages. The instructions to call out the name of the station and periods of halt, on the arrival of a train and to notify the duration of unusual halt of a train at a station to the passengers occupying it, are seldom if ever observed. As to the Bareilly-Kathgodam section of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway, the writer thinks it is useless to make any particular complaints because on this line the comfort of none but European passengers is attended to. Alluding to his experience on the East Indian and Great Indian Peninsula Railways the writer says that on the 13th of June he could not get water at any station from Aligarh to Tundla. Similarly from Tundla to Gwalior he could not get water at any station beyond Agra. The water-carriers at the East Indian Railway stations take their stand near the locomotive engine, where passengers occupying distant carriages in the train cannot go to fetch water lest the train should start before they had time to re-occupy their seats.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

TAFRIH,
21st April, 1906.

A suggestion to reduce the postage on trade circulars and price lists.

46. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st April, supporting the suggestion published in some other Indian newspapers, to reduce the postage on trade circulars and price lists whose weight does not exceed five tolas from one-half to a quarter of an anna, observes that the adoption of the proposal is not likely to result in any decrease in the income of the Postal department. On the contrary past experience of similar concessions in the Postal and Telegraph departments warrants the hope that a considerable increase in income will follow the introduction of the change.

The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 22nd April, also supports the proposal.

ARYA MITRA,
24th April, 1906.

Protest against the publication by the Muhammadans of a pamphlet offensive to the Arya Samajists

47. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th April, referring to the publication and wide distribution of a pamphlet entitled "Arya Samaj ki pol" (hollowness of the Arya Samaj) by one Shaikh Abdul Aziz, under the auspices of the Anjuman-i-Islamia of Delhi, observes that the language used on pages 16 and 18 of the pamphlet is very offensive to the Arya Samajists. Whenever the Musalmans find themselves unable to beat the Arya Samajists in the field of fair discussion, they either institute criminal proceedings against their opponents or have recourse to abusive language in verbal discourses and in print. It is to be hoped the Government will interfere and prevent the Muhammadans from further wounding the feelings of the Arya Samajists.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

MUSAFIR,
23rd April, 1906.

A suggestion to the Indian Government for establishing a work-house for able-bodied beggars.

48. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd April, stating that the Government of Australia has put a stop to street mendicancy in that country by establishing a reformatory where able-bodied beggars are confined and fed according to the amount of work done by them, being only released on their engaging to work for their living and never to beg again, suggests that the Government of India would also do well to adopt similar measures for the reclamation of idle able-bodied beggars who are a source of economic loss to the country.

MOHINI,
25th April, 1906.

Suggested use of certain Hindi appellations in place of 'Babu,' 'Mr.', &c. at present in use.

49. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 25th April, approves of the proposal lately made in the press for the substitution, before Hindu personal proper names, of the appellations 'shriyut' 'shrimán,' 'shrimáti,' &c., for 'Mr.', 'Babu,' 'Mrs.' and similar other words now in use.

ADVOCATE,
26th April, 1906.

Alleged suspicious attitude of the people towards native Christians.

50. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, says :—If the reformer is an object of suspicion to orthodox people, the Indian Christian is not taken kindly to by those who have the welfare of India at their heart. The reason is obvious. Being the religion of the ruling class, Christianity has a political feature that makes its Indian followers objects of suspicion according to Chanakya's well-known saying which indicates mistrust of rulers all over the world. It rests with educated and patriotic Indian Christians to change the attitude of Indians in general towards their faith, thereby bringing about more religious toleration, social advancement and a spirit of conciliation in this country of bigotry and orthodoxy.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
1st May, 1906.

The Akabah dispute between Turkey and England.

1. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st May, referring to the dispute between Turkey and England regarding Akabah, says that, although the attitude of the English Press is not favourable to peace, a rupture of relations is not imminent, inasmuch as Turkey, in addition to her being at present occupied with the construction of the Hedjaz Railway, has practically no Navy, and England is not going to depart from her policy of not taking the initiative in war against any important Power. The Turkish desire for the possession of Akabah is based on strategic considerations: they cannot for a moment be supposed to be so ignorant of the geography of their own Empire as to confuse between Dhaba and Akabah. Some time ago a rumour was afloat that the German Emperor had instigated the Sultan to raise the question of the evacuation of Egypt and had promised him his support in the matter, but the Sultan is not the man to act at the instigation of other Powers. He is no doubt bent upon getting his province of Egypt evacuated by England and is patiently waiting for a fit opportunity for the purpose. The editor thinks that in the improbable contingency of war between Turkey and Egypt, England will help Egypt and view with satisfaction the weakening of the Muhammadan power through such a struggle. As for evacuation, the editor is afraid that England will not take such a step unless she is driven to it. The editor hopes that the Akabah question will be amicably settled, but thinks that the Egyptian question is sure to crop up sooner or later, for England has promised to evacuate Egypt as soon as the country becomes capable of carrying on its own administration efficiently, while Turkey thinks that foreign help is demoralizing the native administration and hindering its spontaneous and healthy development.

OUDH AKHBAR,
5th May, 1906.

Turkey, Egypt and England.

2. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 5th May, referring to the disturbances in the Hedjaz and the boundary dispute between Turkey and Egypt, says that while Turkey is fully entitled to strengthen her power on the Hedjaz coast, England also has a serious responsibility as protector of Egypt and guardian of the Suez Canal. The construction of the Suez Canal while proving beneficial to Asia, has in some respects been very detrimental to its interests. All the European Powers will set aside their mutual differences with a view to retain their control over the passage. If Turkey is going to make up for her past remissness in keeping Egypt under proper control, she will find that she has a tremendous task before her, which she cannot possibly carry through single-handed, especially at the present moment when the Hedjaz disturbance has not yet been quelled. She will find Italy, France, England, Egypt and Abyssinia ranged against her in the struggle. Germany's help cannot be counted upon; in fact she may prove a dangerous enemy in the disguise of a friend. Under these circumstances, Turkey ought to keep quiet until such time when she finds the whole of Asia ready and willing to give her active support. To enter at present into a struggle for the possession of the Suez Canal would but lead to further weakening of Muhammadan power. Moreover, it is no wise policy on the part of the Muhammadans to make an enemy of England. At least this is, or ought to be, the view of Indian Musalmans. However, in spite of the alarm raised by the later telegrams, it is to be hoped that the crisis will soon be over and amicable relations re-established.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th April, 1906.

Contrast between the Imperial Government's attitude towards Natal and India.

3. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th April, says that Natal, though a British dependency, enjoys practical independence and brooks no interference in its affairs by the Imperial Government. The British Government boasts of having wiped away slavery from the face of the earth, but at the same time the people of India are subjected to what may be termed a kind of modified slavery, and the natives of Natal are being treated there even worse than dogs. A few natives who ventured to protest against the intolerable severities to which they are subjected, were sentenced to be executed, and the Imperial Government's order for postponement of execution was resented by the Natal authorities as an unwarranted interference.

The Imperial Government had ultimately to sanction the execution, because it must court the good will of its colonies to maintain its nominal supremacy over them. England has, in short, to put up with all sorts of vagaries on the part of her colonies, but in the case of India she plays the rôle of a step-mother, keeping her step-children alive for the sake of the services they render to her.

URDU-I-MUALLA,
March and April,
1906.

The Muhammadans and the Indian National Congress.

4. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), in its combined issue for March and April, publishes an article communicated by Haji Muhammad Musa Khan of Dataoli in the Aligarh district, in which the writer remarks that the Indian National Congress at its session of December 1905 appears to have paid some attention to the needs of Muhammadans. This attitude of the Congress may be with a view to entice Muhammadans into its fold, or it may be due to other causes. But the writer thinks that so long as suitable modifications are not made in the system of election to secure the representation of Muhammadans at least in the proportion of their population, the Muhammadans cannot be satisfied. They cannot support systems of election which past experience has proved to be detrimental to their interests, few Muhammadans having succeeded in securing membership of the Legislative Councils under the election system now in force. It is absurd to retort that suitable Muhammadans are not forthcoming; the fact is that the system of election is faulty. A method likely to promote good feeling between the two communities would be for either community to elect as its representatives members of the other community. The writer then refers to the resolutions of the Congress of December 1905. As regards the first resolution of welcome to the Prince of Wales, he says that Muhammadans are in complete accord, but remarks that the request at the end detracts from the value of the loyal sentiments expressed, and if made at all, ought to have formed the subject of a separate resolution. As regards the second resolution asking for extension of the scope and powers of councils and their elected members, the writer has no objection, provided the election system be modified to secure adequate representation of Muhammadans. With reference to the third resolution regarding excise administration, the writer thinks that the Muhammadans are prepared to go much farther than the Congress proposal. The fourth and fifth resolutions regarding extended participation of Indians in the administration and their wider employment in the higher grades of the public service are approved of, subject to arrangements securing to Muhammadans their proper share. The sixth resolution acknowledging remission of taxation and asking for further remissions is fully approved. With reference to the seventh resolution, objection is taken to the recommendation for retrenching military expenditure on the ground of the increase of the military power of other Asiatic nations, but the proposal to apportion expenditure between the Indian and Imperial Governments is considered reasonable on the ground that the Indian army is maintained for keeping up British supremacy in Asia. The eighth, ninth and tenth resolutions, respectively relating to the Indian emigrants to South Africa, the separation of the Judicial and Executive services and the police reform, are fully supported. The writer sees no objection to supporting the eleventh resolution against the partition of Bengal, since the Muhammadans appear to have gained nothing by the partition, but thinks that in this respect the Muhammadans of other provinces ought to follow the views of their co-religionists in Eastern Bengal. He takes strong exception to the twelfth resolution which he thinks implies the mixing up of the sacred cause of Swadeshism with expression of disapproval of the partition of Bengal, showing as it does that the support of country manufactures is based on motives of retaliation for a supposed wrong. The Congress is thanked for its thirteenth resolution in which attention is drawn to the troubles of Mecca pilgrims. The election recommended in the fourteenth resolution ought, in the writer's opinion, to be subject to such conditions as would secure adequate representation of Muhammadans. With regard to the fifteenth resolution supporting the candidature of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, regret is expressed for India's losing the parliamentary services of its "Grand Old Man." The sixteenth and seventeenth resolutions regarding Lala Lajpat Rai and Mr. Gokhale are approved. In the eighteenth resolution the deficiency of one Muhammadan, having regard to the proportion of population, is pointed out. As regards the nineteenth resolution, it is suggested that Nawab Saiyid Muhammad ought to have been one of the joint secretaries. The twentieth, twenty-first and twenty-second resolutions are considered to be merely formal and are not open to objection. In conclusion the Congress leaders are asked to accede to the wishes of the Muhammadans and thus win them over, for the withholding of Muhammadan support is detracting from the influence and importance of the Congress.

The editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla in a review of the above article remarks that before the Congress leaders are asked to guarantee the proper numerical representation of Muhammadans under the elective system, they must be satisfied that the Muhammadan representatives will give their full support to political measures tending to the public good and will not take up the side of Government in opposition to Hindu representatives. He is further of opinion that the reasonable wishes of the author of the article can hardly be fulfilled unless Muhammadans freely mix and exchange views with the Hindu Congress leaders and regain the qualifications they have lost owing to their long abstention from political discussion. The editor also thinks that, having regard to the wrongs suffered by the Bengalis and to subsequent events at Barisal, the Congress was justified in passing its resolution against the action of Sir J. B. Fuller's Government and in support of the boycott movement.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 1st May, 1906.

Protest against interpreting Muhammadan aloofness from the National Congress as indicative of ill-feeling against the Hindus.

5. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st May, states that the opposition of Muhammadans to the Congress is simply because they do not regard it as a useful institution and is not due to any ill-feeling against the Hindus, for as a matter of fact even the Hindus as a body are not supporters of the Congress movement. Political differences do not involve enmity against any particular community, and the conduct of those who are trying to stir up discord between Hindus and Muhammadans because the latter do not support the Congress movement, is most reprehensible. Both the Hindu and the Muhammadan newspapers have a perfect right to defend the interests of their respective communities and it is unfair on the part of Hindu papers to find fault with Al-Bashír and other Muhammadan organs for defending Muhammadan interests, for the Hindu papers are equally mindful of Hindu interests.

HINDOSTHAN, 25th April, 1906.

A recent revision of the Darbar List of the Taluqdars of Oudh.

6. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 25th April, in continuation of its previous remarks on the recently revised Darbar List of the Taluqdárs of Oudh (vide articles Nos. 3 and 4 on page 231 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), says :—Now we have finished our criticism on the list of the Taluqdars, and have only to make a few minute observations. It is satisfactory to note that a Nawab has been considered equal to a Raja. Raja means a King ; it is equal to rex regis in Latin, but on account of the Hindus being out of Government the word has lost its magnitude. The word Nawáb meant the deputy of the Emperor of India or other rulers, but outside the court a Nawab was considered an equal of a Rája, though the real meaning of the word makes a Nawáb inferior to a Rája. Our authority for this statement is the incorporation of the name of Nawáb Haji Fateh Ali Khan Sahib, C.I.E., Kizilbásh, with the name of the Rájas of Oudh. The other point which raises our curiosity is the omission of the name of the Taluqdár of Pavánsi and that of the Taluqdár of Bahloolpur from the list, for which no reason has been given.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR,
April, 1906.

Approval of the views expressed by the Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Yusuf Ali Khan regarding the unsatisfactory work of subordinate civil courts.

8. The Zamindár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for April, fully approves of the views expressed by the Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Yusuf Ali Khan in his speech read at a recent meeting of the United Provinces Legislative Council, regarding the slip-shod manner in which the subordinate civil courts are supposed to do their work.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th April, 1906.

A Tahsildar in the United Provinces accused of unjustly fining a person for contempt of court.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, says :—While a Tahsildar in these Provinces was holding his court, he found a man standing with his back to the wall. In the opinion of this mighty personage this showed want of respect for the Court, and the Tahsildar at once called on the unfortunate man to behave himself. According to the account given by the tahsildar himself the man thereupon said in a loud and harsh tone, "áwáz karih baland," that such severity was unknown even in the High Court. Straightway the Tahsildar drew up proceedings for contempt against the man with the loud and harsh voice and fined him Rs. 50. We wonder whether the Tahsildar ever went to school with Mr. Emerson, the District Magistrate of Barisal, and learnt from him the law of contempt. Application for revision has been made in the Allahabad High Court.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
28th April, 1906.

Oaths in Indian Law Courts.

10. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 28th April, supports the suggestion of a correspondent of the Tohfa-i-Hind, to revert to the old practice of administering oath to witnesses and others by the Ganges water or the Quran, in Indian law courts (vide article No. 12, on page 215 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906).

CITIZEN,
30th April, 1906.

A recent fatal affray between certain villagers and three British soldiers at Dadri in the Bulandshahr district.

11. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, referring to a recent fatal affray between some villagers and three British soldiers in the Bulandshahr district (vide article No. 14, on page 201 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906) says :—The Dadri case in which judgment has been delivered by the District Magistrate of Bulandshahr shows that in a certain village a scuffle ensued between some British soldiers and Indian villagers, and though in course of the scuffle a villager was killed by the discharge of a gun belonging to the soldiers, the soldiers were not tried at all—even for man-slaughter. Had a charge been brought against the European soldiers for culpable homicide or causing death by a rash and negligent act, we of course know what the result in the long run would have been ; and on this ground we may, we suppose, congratulate the Hon'ble Judges of our High Court that the farce of a trial was not allowed to be enacted.

* * * * * * * *

Death, however, was caused ; and to maintain the dignity of law, it was necessary that some party should suffer for it. Accordingly it was five villagers who were hauled up on a charge of wantonly attacking the British soldiers. The case against the accused rested on the evidence of the soldiers alone, and though to save their own skin they were capable of inventing any lie, their unsupported statements have been received by the Magistrate as gospel truth.

* * * * * * * *

The villagers' version is "that three soldiers came to shoot ducks on the village pond : they were asked not to shoot, because there were children playing near. The soldiers then went off towards a mango tree, where peacocks lived and fired a shot which flushed a peacock. Then Bhim closed with a soldier and was shot."

* * * * * * * *

The Magistrate should have examined the village chaukidar and remembered that the constable's statement did not confirm the statements of the soldiers. We understand that the villagers have appealed to the Sessions Judge, and we do not therefore consider it proper to comment here any further on the case.

CITIZEN,
30th April, 1906.

Certain British soldiers accused of causing the death of a native policeman at Rawalpindi.

12. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, says :—One more account of the British soldier's exploit comes to us from the Punjab. In Rawalpindi there is a sarai called the sarai of Billa, in which prostitutes live and practise their nefarious trade. It is a place much infested by soldiers. On the evening the murder took place, a party of soldiers, very much the worse for drink, with uncertain steps found their way at last to the sarai. Having arrived there they at once commenced to molest the unfortunate inmates. Some of the latter, being comparative novices in their filthy trade, were frightened and ran away seeking safety in the neighbouring fields. The soldiers who were now thoroughly roused chased the fleeing girls. Seeing their persecutors at their heels the runaway girls cried loudly for help. A policeman who heard the cries went to their assistance. He was met by a volley of stones from the Tommies, who felt justly enraged by this interference from a mere Indian policeman. They again assailed him with the deadly missiles. The poor fellow was hit so hard and in so many places that he dropped down in a dead faint. He was eventually conveyed to the hospital where he died soon after. The farce of an enquiry on the incident was soon over. The soldiers got off none the worse for their escapade, while the poor Indian constable has gone to his Maker to prefer his appeal for justice.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

An alleged case of police persecution in the Allahabad district.

13. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, says :—A Muhammadan zamindar of some position was recently called upon by the District Magistrate of Allahabad to show cause why his licenses for arms should not be cancelled on the ground that his name had been entered in Police register No. 10, and that the District Superintendent of Police had reported that under the circumstances he was not a fit person to be allowed to retain arms.

Mr. Hamilton of the Allahabad Bar appeared for the zamindar to show cause, and stated that his client was on bad terms with the police of his circle owing (1) to a dispute about the possession and dismantling of a piece of land close to the police station, and (2) owing to the police being of opinion that Mr. Hamilton's client helped certain Pásis in their case against the police. The particulars of this case were then read out by the Magistrate's reader and appeared shortly to be as follows :—

Two Sub-Inspectors of Police were investigating a case in the course of which a number of Pásis of different villages, some of whom were tenants of the zamindar in question, were collected at the place of investigation and were made to hang on for a number of days. The Pásis ultimately assaulted the two police officers and a couple of other police officers were deputed to inquire into the cause of assault. The result was that the Pásis were sent up for trial charged with a number of offences, viz. assaulting a public servant in the discharge of his duties, obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his duties, rioting, hurt, &c., &c. The case came up before a senior Muhammadan Deputy Magistrate who is held in high esteem by the officials as well as by the public, and who himself was in the Police force before he joined the executive service. The two police officers alleged to have been assaulted were also Muhammadans. The result of the Magistrate's inquiry was that the Pásis were found to have been maltreated by the police, and in order to extricate themselves from the position they were put in for no fault of theirs, if they assaulted the police officers responsible for it they were perfectly justified in doing so. He disbelieved the story told by the prosecution, i.e., the police version of the case, and acquitted the Pásis. There was no appeal by the Government. The judgment of the Deputy Magistrate has become final.

The police suspected and, as a matter of fact, rightly suspected that the zamindar actively helped his tenants in the said case against the police.

Mr. Hamilton therefore contended that that was the reason of the animus of the police against his client and that it accounted for the bad reports and damning entries made against his client by the local police. The District Magistrate having recorded the plea put forward by Mr. Hamilton on behalf of his client asked the District Superintendent of Police for a fresh inquiry and report with reference to the allegations made by Mr. Hamilton. On the receipt of a second report from the police saying that the allegations made were without any foundation, the District Magistrate called upon them to put forward some respectable witnesses who would support the police report as to the zamindar's bad associations.

A number of Police officers and a few other witnesses were sent up by the Police and were examined by the District Magistrate. The Police officers examined gave most damning evidence against Mr. Hamilton's client. Of the other witnesses some made vague and indefinite statements as to his character, others corroborated the Police officers' story, though some of the witnesses said they had never seen the man and did not know his name. Of the police officers examined one was the officer assaulted by the Pásis and another the officer who had inquired into and challaned the case against the Pásis. They both admitted that they knew that the zamindar had been helping the Pásis, and that in the Police diary of the inquiry in that case an entry had been made as to the zamindar's bad associations, &c., which it appears was the first entry of its kind against the man. It was also elicited in cross-examination that some three or four entries recorded in the police diaries about the suspicion of the Police that this zamindar harboured Pási? thieves, &c., were made in the interval of a year and a half following the assault on the Police by the Pásis.

The District Magistrate was not much impressed by the evidence produced on behalf of the Police and he sent for the Sub-Divisional officer and the Tahsildar. Both of them were examined and they denied all knowledge of the zamindar's alleged criminal proclivities The District Magistrate then passed orders saying that there might be some truth in the police version of the case, but there was much exaggeration in it and he did not consider it proved that the zamindár habitually harbours thieves, &c. In the District Magistrate's opinion a case for cancellation of license was not made out and he discharged the rule issued against the licensee, but he remarked at the end of his order that before the license is renewed next year, an inquiry will again be made into the conduct of the licensee, and unless he can satisfy the District Magistrate that there is no cause of complaint against him his license for arms will not be renewed.

No comments are necessary on this case.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th April, 1906.

A protest against the contents of police diaries being made public by police officials.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, says:—If the police diaries are confidential papers meant for the inspection of the officers of the Police and the Magistrates of the districts then to make their contents public is as dangerous and prejudicial to the interests of the subject as in the case of the entries in register No. 10.

So long as the entries in the police diaries are allowed to remain private and confidential, nobody can complain of any remarks made against him in those diaries, but as soon as you make them public property, the person whose reputation is damaged by the said entries is entitled to be compensated for the injury done to his good name without sufficient grounds or by reason of malice. Under the circumstances is it prudent and politic to make the improper use of the entries in police diaries that is ordinarly made in badmáshi cases?

CITIZEN,
30th April, 1906.

Alleged hard lot of clerks in the office of the Government Railway Police at Allahabad.

15. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, publishes the following communication from a local correspondent:—You have been always fighting for the poor clerks, and it is a fact that nothing pleases you so much as the alleviation of distress of innocent quill drivers who are as helpless as frogs in the animal kingdom. In the office of the Government Railway Police a kind of forced labour is in vogue, and the under-clerks have to work from 10 A. M. to 7 P. M: and not only this, but their attendance is requisitioned on gazetted local holidays, while the officers in charge are kept quite ignorant of the fact. It is not only rumoured, but is a fact that the native Superintendent is responsible for this vexatious practice and it is difficult to account for the cruel treatment. Whether he cannot cope with the work, or is wanting in knack or that there is some defect in the distribution and exaction of work, I am not in a position to vouch for; but it is certain that during his predecessor's time the clerks left office at 4 P. M., could enjoy every holiday, and yet no complaints were ever heard for arrear of work. Now, as the Royal tour and the calamitous Magh mela are over, the plea of press of work does not hold. It is evident that there is some screw loose in the machinery. If this grievance attracts the notice of the Deputy Inspector-General we may be sure of a remedy, and with this view I take the indulgence of requesting you to spare a little space in your paper.

Inadequacy of pipe-water at Agra.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
1st May, 1906.

16. A correspondent of the Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 1st May, complaining of the inadequate supply of pipe-water in muhalla Shahganj, Agra, says that the residents submitted several petitions complaining of the inconvenience to which they were subjected, but to no purpose. The writer is of opinion that no improvement can be effected unless steps are taken by the rate-payers to impress on the Board a due sense of its responsibilities.

Need for proper arrangements for extinguishing fires in the Moradabad municipality.

COLONEL,
1st May, 1906.

17. The Colonel (Moradabad), of the 1st May, stating that on the 30th April, a dangerous fire broke out in muhalla Nawabpura at Moradabad, complains that the municipality has made no arrangements for putting out fires which often break out in the city.

(e).—Education.

Alleged superior claims of Mr. Cox for appointment as Principal of the Muir Central College at Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th April, 1906.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, says:—The announcement in the local Government Gazette that the vacancy in the Principalship of the Muir Central College caused by the retirement of Dr. Thibaut, C.I.E., will be filled by Mr. Jennings, Professor of English in that college and latterly an Inspector of Schools, gives rise to some very unpleasant reflections. In the ordinary course of things the appointment should have gone to Mr. Homersham Cox, the Professor of Mathematics in the Muir College, who is senior to Mr. Jennings by two or three years. Mr. Cox graduated as fourth wrangler from Cambridge in 1880, and is at present the most distinguished mathematician in India. He has taken a most prominent part in the affairs of the Allahabad University and has been closely associated with the Public Library. As a student and scholar he has a very high reputation and has been constantly consulted by the Local Government in University affairs. The appointment of Mr. Jennings involves a grave injustice to Mr. Cox, and we do not profess to know on what grounds it is justified.

Suggested need for instruction in agriculture, art and handicrafts.

HINDOSTHAN,
29th April, 1906.

19. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 29th April, urges the desirability of giving instruction in agriculture, art and handicrafts, simultaneously with literary instruction in village schools in order that students may on leaving school be enabled to earn their livelihood. The action of the Panjáb Government in this direction is commended.

20. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 1st May, notices with pleasure that a scholarship of 150 pounds per annum has been awarded to a student at Lahore to enable him to complete his industrial education in England, and thanks Government for its interest in the industrial education of Indian youths.

Need for better arrangements for conserving water in the Garhwal district.

GARHWALI,
March and April, 1906.

21. The Garhwáli (Dehra Dun), in its combined issue for March and April, draws the attention of Government to the need for providing means of irrigation with a view to soften the rigour of famines and suggests the construction of tanks in the Garhwal Bhabar, where the digging of canals is impracticable. As a first step in the direction, the editor suggests that a tank should be constructed at Dada Mandi, where conditions are favourable for the undertaking. This will benefit both the Garhwal and Bijnor districts and also put an end to the ravages of the Khoh river on Kotdwár. The editor disapproves of the project for protecting Kotdwár by means of an embankment, which he thinks, is sure to require constant repairs and may give way at any moment.

KHET KHETI AUR KHETIHAR,

Proposal to publish interesting agricultural information in Hindi for the benefit of cultivators.

22. The Khet Kheti aur Khetihar (Benares), of the 1st May, observing that a great deal of matter of interest to the Indian cultivator is published in English by the Indian Government and also appears from time to time in books, reports and periodicals in America and elsewhere, urges the desirability of issuing full or abstract Hindi translation of such matter for the benefit of agriculturists, and proposes to take up the work of such translation and its publication in its columns or separately as may be necessary. The support and patronage of Government and of the public is solicited of the venture.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th April, 1906.

Alleged self-conceit and high-handed behaviour of Anglo-Indian rulers.

23. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th April, compares Anglo-Indian rulers to a young man who, through immoral habits, contracted a loathsome disease and kept it secret, so that when his friends informed his parents of his condition, they would not believe in the possibility of their son contracting the disease, till at last his whole body began to rot and his condition was thus exposed; the boy finally recovered but lost his nose from the disease. The disease from which Anglo-Indians are suffering are self-conceit and disregard for justice, the agitators for reform are the friends, and the British public the parents whose indifference towards the former is likely to cause serious injury to British rule in India.

HINDI PRADIP,
May, 1906.

Alleged indifference of Government towards the interests of the Indians.

24. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for May, referring to the continuance of fatal epidemic diseases and scarcity in the country, the heavy drain of taxation and the alleged oppressive behaviour of Government officers, remarks that whatever may be the case with the illiterate classes, the educated classes are dissatisfied with foreign rule, especially at times when they are insulted by their arrogant rulers and when the difference between the treatment of the white conquerors and the black conquered is brought to light in mixed cases. Our rulers seem to forget that their prosperity is based on the wealth derived from this country, for otherwise they would not show such gross indifference with regard to matters affecting the Indian people, while trifles supposed to affect British interests are constantly made subjects of question in Parliament.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th April, 1906.

Approval of the opinion expressed by a Simla Anglo-Indian paper regarding the Barisal affair.

25. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, says :—In the mass of silly and inflammatory nonsense that the Anglo-Indian papers—barring always the Statesman—have been writing about the disgraceful Barisal scandal, there is one Anglo-Indian paper published at Simla which has been able to sound a note of reasonableness. It says justly that the action of the Barisal authorities has brought the Government into discredit. The District Superintendent of Police and the Magistrate should have dealt with the members of the Reception Committee, if they thought something had to be done. If a license was needed for the procession, Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, who had just arrived, could not have applied for it as that was the duty of the local Reception Committee. He was not even the President of the Conference, but a visitor, a delegate and a guest like the five or six hundred other people who had come from different districts. In their insane hurry to punish the foremost leader of the people the authorities cast every consideration of prudence, propriety, justice and law to the winds.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th April, 1906.

Alleged misrepresentation of the Barisal affair by the Pioneer.

26. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, says :—Newspaper editors are not professional lawyers and are not expected to deal with knotty legal problems, but that is no reason why any one connected with a newspaper should run away with a notion on a question of law without taking the slightest pains to ascertain what he is about. Yet that is exactly what the Pioneer, in its eagerness to belittle the Barisal affair, has done. It speaks glibly of the light sentence passed on Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, of the violation of law and so on and so forth. And it thinks that stuff of this kind will pass for carefully weighed public opinion. What was the law that was broken? What was the heavy sentence that could have been imposed? If the writer in the Pioneer had seen the wonderful judgments of Mr. Emerson, the District Magistrate of Barisal, he might have well questioned the finality of such proceedings, and his doubts would have been strengthened had he asked a lawyer to look up for him the law on the subject. Neither Mr. Emerson nor Sir Bampfylde Fuller, fortunately, is the last court of appeal on a question of law, though they have taken to making laws without a Legislative Council, and thinking that they are the servants of the Tsar of Russia, instead of the Emperor of India.

The official version supplied to the Statesman by the Commissioner has been given an importance that does not belong to it, and which does not affect the case at all. We are merely concerned with the proceedings before the Magistrate, the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and the dispersal of the Provincial Conference. The proceedings for contempt of court are beneath contempt at present, judging by the Magistrate's own foolish order. Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was convicted under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code. The Police Code and "an order passed under the Police Act" are also mentioned, but they are both vague and meaningless and there is no conviction under either head. Now under section 188 the maximum sentence is a fine of Rs. 200, or simple imprisonment for one month or both. The Pioneer thinks the maximum fine allowed by the law a light sentence. Perhaps a sentence of imprisonment would have suited it better. Well there was nothing to prevent Mr. Emerson from passing such a sentence to please the Pioneer. When a certain managing proprietor of the Pioneer was sentenced to a fine for an offence which can be punished with simple imprisonment for two years, did the sentence appear light or heavy? Or, will it be very distressing to tax our wise contemporary's memory so heavily?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th April, 1906.

The Pioneer and the Barisal affair.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, publishes the following letter from a correspondent:—Sir,—It is just at the moment when the mind is occupied with and exercised over the cruelties—we speak in the mildest language—that have been practised upon the delegates to the Conference at Barisal that the local daily stands forth as the apologist of the doings of the Government of East Bengal in terms of which a true born Britisher ought to feel ashamed. Made without personal knowledge such statements should be taken for what they are worth, and no person with one grain of sense and sensibility will be disposed to attach any credit whatsoever to them. But if the Pioneer had only stopped where it ought to have in this state of its knowledge, with a bare reproduction of the official version of the story, not much harm would have been done. Unfortunately, however for itself, the Pioneer assumes the office of 'Sir Oracle' and in doing so pours the vial of its wrath upon the head of a person the latchet of whose shoes even it is not worthy to unloose. The Pioneer is the professed organ of the official section, and as such its duty is to justify even the errors of that section. But the language of adulation is of no avail; and in the light of day the whole affair at Barisal stands exposed in all its native grossness. The attempt, therefore, to whitewash "Fullerism"—if we may say so—serves only to bring out the weakness of the official side of the case and to plunge Sir Bampfylde and his ignoble brood of satellites deeper into the mire. Silence on our part now would be weakness; inaction would be connivance. We owe it to ourselves, therefore, to ask the Pioneer what justification it has for the illiberal criticisms that it has made with respect to Babu Surendra Nath Banerji. Criticism, say we? Call it rather abuse. Babu Surendra Nath Banerji has been called a law-breaker, and, as if the measure of its abuse was not full, we are reminded of the mildness of the punishment dealt out to him. And again, to add insult to injury, this truthful journal expresses its wonder that there were not more broken heads and thinks that this affair should not be allowed to bulk too largely in public opinion.

"Oh judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts. And men have lost their reason."

Babu Surendra Nath is a law-breaker indeed! But what is the law and where is the law that he is alleged to have broken? Where in this wide world is there a law by which the singing of national songs is banned? It is hard indeed to be punished for the breach of a law that cannot be shown. Can a circular or an order that an irresponsible despot may, in his sweet will, choose to promulgate, declaring that unlawful which by the unanimous verdict of mankind is lawful, be said to be law or to have acquired the force of law? And people are expected to conform to it! Who, we ask, are the breakers of the law—the law of the land—which every one is bound to obey whatever may be his station in life? Is it Babu Surendra Nath, or they who, in the name of law and order without provocation and out of an insatiable desire for revenge, inflicted deadly injuries on scores of devoted persons defenceless and unprepared as they were, that set the law at naught? Is it again Babu Surendra Nath or the Philistine-Magistrate who tried him that defied the law? And yet the Pioneer and the newspapers of the class to which it belongs would have us believe that Sir Bampfylde's men were all that time doing their duty. We know not what their conception of law and duty is. But if we are to understand that the actions of the authorities at Barisal were in accordance with law far better would it be not to have any laws at all than to have laws which make justice a sham and a mockery and take the form of right to excite wrong. We have no means of knowing yet how the news has been received in the higher circles; but may we not hope that the true instincts of the British race will assert themselves before long and disavow in the strongest manner acts for which there exists no parallel except perhaps in Russia? And is there any warrant for that hope? The answer will depend upon the view that commends itself to the authorities. If the Pioneer's criticisms are received as Gospel truth, then may we bid a long farewell to all our hopes. A fruitful source of misgovernment in this country is the influence of papers like the Pioneer. To the misuse of their influence is attributable, to a very large extent, that estrangement of feeling,—that soreness of mind—which unhappily is so rampant even up to this day. It is their chief aim to give currency to deliberate misrepresentations regarding every constitutional agitation of the people of this country and to set one class against another. By their attitude of persistent and unvarying hostility to the educated class they have hampered the true cause of progress and reform and have lowered British honour and reputation in this country. That is the reason why so much remains yet undone—why clamant evils are not redressed. Popular aims and popular aspirations are always presented by them through a coloured medium which serves to widen the gulf between the rulers and the ruled—to prevent the establishment of that feeling of confidence and cordiality between them which is the aim of every enlightened Government on the face of the earth to attain. So long as these newspapers are allowed to maintain their career of mischief and calumny—so long as our rulers will not let themselves to study and regard the wishes and the interests of the people,—to get some touch-point and means of contact, if we may say, with popular opinion—so long will the clouds that now lower on the political horizon continue to grow darker and deeper, and that blind and senseless course of persecution and tyranny, which has set ablaze a whole province, will be carried on with impunity. Babu Surendra Nath is the uncompromising opponent of the bureaucracy. His whole life has been an emphatic protest against this form of Government which seeks to keep the people—the children of the soil—out of the counsels of the rulers. He is the hero who has fought a hundred constitutional battles, no matter with what success, in order to gain this point. He is the idol of his countrymen—the observed of observers—the pole-star of their hopes and aspirations—the centre of their love and reverence. He is, in short, the father of young India. And can anybody wonder that this gentleman should come in most for the abuse of the Pioneer and those of its class? They would belie their existence if they did not do so. But Babu Surendra Nath towers head and shoulders above his puny critics. He is clothed in a breast-plate of steel against which their poisoned darts do but strike to fall back again and recoil upon those who fling them at him. Their attempts to bring him into discredit have no more success than those of a dwarf to reach the moon. In the eyes of his countrymen—nay, of the whole world—Babu Surendra Nath occupies that lofty eminence whereon "Fame's proud temple shines afar," and which only the heroes of antiquity have reached. He may be compared to the "tall cliff" which we read of in Goldsmith's familiar lines in describing the village pastor:—

"As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head."

He is thus above the reach of all illiberal and unmanly criticisms which passion and prejudice may level against him. It has been attempted to paint him as the arch-enemy of the British Govnernment; but if that Government has a true friend it is he and his compatriots; and it is because he has the genuine welfare of that Government at heart and also because he is animated by a sober and rational desire to bring about the improvement of his country, to redress error and to correct the imperfections which even yet exist in the Government of his people and country (which, by the way, is not only natural, but laudable in man) that he is made to appear in that lurid light by gross misrepresentation. It is in the hope, therefore, that the Governmeut will see through their mistake and may know that the comments of the Pioneer and papers of that class which seek to minimise the wrongs that have been done at Barisal, are not only erroneous but absolutely false, that we have thought it proper to take up so much space. We have no special quarrel with them. They have their own world to live in and an existence to maintain. Let them do so. But what we say is, 'do not misrepresent and do not make mischief.'

RAHBAR,
28th April, 1906.

Alleged effect of the Barisal incident in establishing more friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

28. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, observes that the Barisal incident has won over to the Swadeshi cause the few Muhammadans who were hitherto opposed to it, and has thus led to the establishment of more friendly relations between the two great communities living in this country.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th April, 1906.

Alleged arrogance and high-handed attitude of Sir J. B. Fuller.

29. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th April, says:—Nature intended him for a play-actor, a prize-fighter, or a circus rider, but fate made him a ruler of men, and he became a very famous man. He might have ended his career as a ruler of semi-savages and wild hills, but there was some one above him who sliced off a large portion of fine territory from another kingdom and added it to his share. This great good furtune fairly put him off his head. He came down from the wild forests and the mountains and told his new subjects, "I am the direct representative of Tamerlane and Changhez Khan, Nadir Shah and Attila, Alexander and Peter the Great. So fall down before me and worship me." But the people were heavy with grief as they did not like the new arrangement, and they did not fall down and worship their new ruler. Then he sent for their leaders and told them in a terrible voice—"Have you forgotten Shaista Khan? Know that he lives in me again, and my hand will be as heavy as his was." And next he gave orders that cities and villages, trees and rivers should be illuminated in his honour. The people replied by putting out their lights and fires after the sunset as if the curfew bell were tolling over the country. At this his wrath knew no bounds. He prohibited whistling in the streets, and songs were forbidden under pain of death. And he went about foaming and fretting over the country. But people would whistle and sing songs. Then he let loose an army of dwarfs from his mountain. They played havoc among the people and broke their heads and their noses, for they were themselves flat-nosed. And he caught hold of a number of other people and dressed them up as mock guardians of the peace. And he taught them how to stand at attention and how to salute when he passed in all his might. But the foolish people would do neither and so they were hauled up before the Kazi. When he went to inspect a school he found a number of boys reading "d-o-g—dog." "What!" he thundered, "you are being taught how to set your dogs at me when you grow up!" So he shut up the schools and sent the boys to the reformatories. At another place he found people establishing trade guilds and associations for public purposes. "Ah traitors," he roared, "have I not read history, and do I not know that this is the beginning of Socialism and Nihilism? You say you are weaving cloths, but I know you are manufacturing dynamite and infernal machines." So he ordered them to be blown off from the mouths of guns.

It was then pointed out to him that what was being done was illegal. "Jaw me no law," he burst out, "am I not a law unto myself and to the people over whom I rule? I am the law, the maker and the breaker of laws. There is no law except my will." And for living magistrates and judges he substituted automatons. When a complaint was made before a subordinate magistrate he passed no orders, but merely sent up the papers to his superior officer, who had his orders from his master. Thus there was no hitch and no conflict of authority. Everything worked mechnically and the ruler was pleased. But his happiness was of short duration. His men came and told him that the very people who refused to have illuminations in his honour had illuminated towns in honour of his arch-enemy, a leader of the people, who assailed him in public and made mock of him. And thereupon he swore a terrible revenge. His opportunity soon came. There was to be a peaceful gathering at which his enemy was to be present. He issued his orders at once. As soon as the gathering came together armed men were let loose to attack the unarmed and defenceless men who were mercilessly beaten. Their leader was dragged as a prisoner and a criminal before the Kazi, who punished him forthwith. The ruler said he had prevented, by his timely activity, a great civil war. The men who were beaten were spreading mutiny and rebellion, and many of them had infernal machines on them, though the same could not be found. And those who were above the ruler said he was a great man and deserved well of his employers. But the time came when he was found out. It was found out that he had produced discontent everywhere and discredited his employers; that he was vindictive, cruel, pitiless. And the order came that he was to be tried at the bar of the supreme tribunal of the Empire. He was thunderstruck when he was placed at the bar. "Try me," he shouted, "you might as well try the Emperor of all Russias; you might as well try Julius Cæsar. There is no court which can have jurisdiction over me, for I am above all law." The President answered in calm, unruffled notes, but with an ominous sound as of doom :—"True, prisoner at the bar, but we are not a court appointed by royal or imperial authority, and we are here as the elect of the people, and we have tried crowned heads before this. Ay, and crowned heads have fallen by our orders. You were unfit for the trust to which you were appointed and you have abused your powers. You have sown the seeds of future trouble and the Empire that is so easily held to-day may be lost in a few years owing to your folly. You will no longer be allowed to wield the authority you have so long abused."

And the astonished prisoner was removed.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th April, 1906.

Alleged reaction in the policy hitherto pursued by the Government of Eastern Bengal and need for co-operation and organisation among the people.

30. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th April, says :—There are signs already visible that the ruler of East Bengal and his advisers are not quite at ease after their achievement at Barisal. Undeterred by their ill-treatment at Barisal some of the delegates have proceeded to other stations and have been holding Swadeshi meetings and getting people to renew the boycott pledge. At Dacca the District Superintendent of Police sent a notice that it would be necessary to obtain his permission for processions, but the mass and public meetings have not been interfered with. At one place three Honorary Magistrates and a clerk have resigned by way of protest against the Barisal outrage. This opens up a possibility of an effective passive resistance if only the organisation could be completed. The resignation of clerks ought not to be encouraged unless a fund is first established to help them, but Honorary Magistrates can resign in a body if they will only make up their mind to do so. This step has been recommended for over six months, and it should be worked out. 'Why should honorary work be done by men whose leaders and countrymen are treated like criminals and rebels? Instead of merely holding protest meetings let the leaders of Bengal establish organisations for co-operation, so that public indignation may find a tangible outlet. Every effort should be made to convince the Government of India that East Bengal must have another ruler.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
30th April, 1906.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

31. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 30th April, referring to the alleged high-handed conduct of the authorities at Barisal in arresting and fining Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, observes that their action is condemned by the educated and illiterate alike, and indignantly asks if that was the proper way to keep up the prestige of the Government. Surely there was nothing in the Bengali cry of Bande Mátaram to make the British lion tremble with fear. The editor is, however, glad to notice that the Barisal incident has infused a new spirit in the hearts of the Indians all over the country, and has dispelled the illusive hopes they had based on the ground of the impartiality of their rulers.

The Barisal incident.

CITIZEN,
30th April, 1906.

32. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, says:—Our readers must have read the official version of the Barisal case. Containing as it does a number of incorrect and misleading statements, it can hardly be regarded as ingenuous. Mr. LeMesurier says that "having regard to local conditions and to what took place some months ago" he had prohibited procession and organised shouting of Bande Mátaram. The Commissioner does not say what the local conditions were, nor does he say what took place some months ago.

* * * * * * *

Even if we allow that the police were within their rights in enforcing the Government circular, what plea is advanced for the cowardly assaults committed by them upon the unarmed delegates? Some of them, we understand, were beaten almost to death. The Commissioner seems to be strangely silent on this part of the police proceedings. There is surely a limit to passivity. If on that day, purely in the exercise of the right of private defence, the delegates had thought it proper to retaliate, the police would have been nowhere, and who other than Sir Bampfylde Fuller would have been held responsible for the number of murders committed?

* * * * * * *

What concerns us immediately is the serious invasion of constitutional rights. And we feel it our duty to warn the Government that the danger to them will be equally serious if it is to be lightly passed over by them.

Protest against the interference of the Police with the meeting at Barisal.

OUDH AKHBAR,
30th April & 1st May, 1906.

33. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), in its issues of the 30th April and 1st May, states that the Barisal incident has rudely shaken the long-cherished belief of the people that the law was in this country superior to the whims and caprices of individual officers, and for this the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller is fully responsible. That the leaders of the procession and Conference had no intention beyond vindicating their rights in a lawful manner, is abundantly proved by the precautions they had taken to avoid all occasion of conflict with the police, and having regard to the peaceful attitude of the people throughout, the action of the authorities was all the more unjustifiable. The editor fears that a repetition of the action taken by Government officers at Barisal will not tend to heighten the prestige of Government in the eyes of the public, but is on the other hand likely to force the people to take the law into their own hands and provoke a serious breach of the peace. The contagion may also spread to other provincial Governments and the local Barisal affair may thus assume Imperial significance.

A public meeting held at Allahabad to protest against the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal.

CITIZEN,
30th April, 1906.

34. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, says:—Pursuant to a notice issued by Messrs. Ranjit Singh, L.M.S., Durga Charan Banerji, and Govind Prasad, Vakils, and Drs. Satish Chandra Banerji and Tej Bahadur Sapru, a meeting under the chairmanship of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya was held at Allahabad on Saturday, the 28th instant at 6 P. M. to give expression to the popular feeling on the recent affairs at Barisal. Mr. Lovett, the District Magistrate, having, on behalf of the Mayo Hall Committee, refused the use of the hall, in justice to the large crowd that were anxious to associate themselves with the proceedings and had poured in, the meeting was held on the maidán to the west of the Anglo-Bengali School. The proceedings were brief and to the point, and the few speeches made were moderately toned. A keen sense of indignation, however, pervaded the meeting, and the magnificent words in which Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru gave expression to it touched every heart. The first resolution moved was by Dr. Sapru, being to the effect that the meeting protested against the high-handed and unconstitutional measures adopted by the government of Eastern Bengal. The second resolution was moved by Munshi Govind Prasad for drawing the attention of the Government of India and the Secretary of State to the grave situation and praying for necessary action in the matter. The meeting dispersed at about 8 P. M., amidst deafening cries of Bande Mátaram.

Comments on the speech delivered by the President of the Barisal Provincial Conference.

CITIZEN,
30th April, 1906.

35. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, says:—We reproduce elsewhere in the present issue the eloquent and instructive address delivered by the President of the Barisal Provincial Conference, Mr. A. Rasul, Barrister-at-law. It was fortunate that the Magistrate of Barisal had no knowledge of its contents early enough to prohibit its being delivered. It seems to us to be a political manifesto of the first order which all those of our countrymen who have got the capacity to understand it, will do well to study. It will infuse the right spirit into even some men of the backsliding sort. The address is invaluable as coming from a Muhammadan gentleman of much culture and wide information, who also knows as much as a foreigner can the conditions of English and Anglo-Indian society. In the concluding portion of his address, Mr. Rasul exhorts his co-religionists, in words of ardent conviction and sincere patriotism, not to cherish but to discard for ever all foolish illusions and hopes of basking in the favour of the official class by means of sycophantic methods.

RAHBAR,
28th April, 1906.

The cry of Bande Mátaram, and the rumoured transfer of Sir J. B. Fuller to the United Provinces.

36. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, regrets to learn that the cry of Bande Mátaram is offensive to Government officers in other provinces of India also. The performance of a play was recently prohibited at Bombay on account of its containing the words Bande Mátaram in several places. This feeling of official aversion to Bande Mátaram may also spread to these provinces, especially because it is rumoured that Sir Bampfylde Fuller will succeed Sir James Digges LaTouche as Lieutenant-Governor. If the rumour comes out to be true, the people of the United Provinces will either gain strength through their resistance to the opposition they are likely to meet with at the hands of the new Lieutenant-Governor, or they will sink into an irretrievable state of servitude. The editor, having regard to the present indifference of the inhabitants, fears that the last contingency is more probable.

ARYA MITRA,
1st May, 1906.

Rumoured transfer of Sir J. B. Fuller to the United Provinces.

37. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st May, referring to the rumoured transfer of Sir J. B. Fuller to the United Provinces, and observing that transfers of Lieutenant-Governors were not heard of before, says that Sir J. B. Fuller's autocratic temper having not yet cooled the transfer may be regarded by him as a degradation. The editor also hears that Sir J. B. Fuller is going to Europe on six months' leave.

AL BASHIR,
1st May, 1906.

Alleged rumour regarding the transfer of Sir Bampfylde Fuller to the United Provinces.

38. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 1st May, referring to the rumour that on the approaching retirement of Sir James Digges LaTouche, Sir Bampfylde Fuller will be transferred to these Provinces owing to the present state of unrest in East Bengal on the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, says that the rumour is set on foot by the Bengalis with a view to lower the prestige of Government officers in the eyes of the public. The rumour has no foundation, but at all events if it turns out to be true, the editor would consider the appointment beneficial to the Muhammadans of the United Provinces, but at the same time, the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal will lose a sympathetic administrator.

HINDI PRADIP,
May, 1906.

The Barisal incident.

39. The Hindí Pradip (Allahabad), for May, referring to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal, wonders if there is no means of punishing a provincial governor who exceeds his powers, and asks if Lord Minto is powerless to do anything in the matter. The editor thinks that, apart from the Province of Eastern Bengal, there is a tendency throughout India to favour Europeans at the expense of natives. With the advance of the people in knowledge and civilization, they are being more and more harshly treated by Government officers.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st May, 1906.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

40. The Mufíd-i-Ám (Agra), of the 1st May, republishes with full approval an article from the Watan (Lahore), suggesting that in order to deter the other political agitators, the authorities at Barisal should have inflicted a severer punishment on Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, whose present conviction was not the first, and urging that the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief ought to attend to the smouldering disaffection within the country itself, which is far more dangerous than open rebellion or enemies outside the border.

KAVINDRA BATIKA,
1st May, 1906.

The Barisal affair.

41. The Kavindra Bátika (Allahabad), of the 1st May, referring to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and the dispersal of the Conference at Barisal, remarks that such improper and unjust proceedings of the East Bengal authorities are likely to bring disgrace on the British Government.

ARYA MITRA,
1st May, 1906.

The alleged state of unrest in Bengal.

42. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st May, stating that the Bengalis who used to look upon their British rulers as their deliverers from the oppressions of Muhammadan rule are now, owing to the indiscreet proceedings of Sir J. B. Fuller and his subordinates, bitterly opposed to Government, remarks that this estrangement is detrimental to the interests of both the governors and the governed, and hopes that Government officers will do their best to regain the people's confidence.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st May, 1906.

Comments on the remark of a Bengali newspaper that Babu Serendra Nath Banerji ought to have refused to pay the fine imposed on him.

43. The Mufíd-i-Ám (Agra), of the 1st May, referring to the opinion expressed by the Amrit Bazar Patrika that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji ought to have refused to pay the fine imposed upon him by the Magistrate of Barisal, observes that this opinion is obviously the outcome of rebellious ideas, advocating clearly as it does a rupture of the relations between the rulers and the ruled. The spirit of insubordination has reached a dangerous point in India, and the Musalmans should think twice before throwing in their lot with the so-called patriots.

URDU-I-MUALLA,
March and April, 1906.

The boycotting of foreign goods.

44. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), in its joint issue for March and April, publishes an article written by one Talammuz Husain of the Aligarh College on Indian trade, in which the writer observes that the principle of free trade must be subject to certain exceptions. India would, if she were free, have adopted a protectionist policy to revive and maintain her industries, and in her present circumstances patriotism ought to make amends for this want of power. The boycotting of foreign goods, though apparently a form of protection, is merely a harbinger of free trade, for in due course the position of local manufactures will be so far strengthened that they will be able to compete with foreign manufactures even under a free trade system. Thus if the boycott is likely to prove beneficial to the country, no fear of official displeasure ought to hinder Indians from this patriotic course. But such fears are really groundless, since Government officers of the highest standing have declared themselves in favour of the Swadeshi movement, for the success of which in its early stages the boycott of foreign goods is necessary. Those who object to purchase coarse and high priced articles of country manufacture in preference to finer and cheaper foreign goods, are reminded that for some time thoughts of personal advantage must be subordinated to the needs of the country.

The editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla, in a review of the above article expresses its agreement with the views of the writer and points out that under the present circumstances the boycott of foreign goods is a necesary step towards the support of the Swadeshi movement.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th April, 1906.

Boycott and Swadeshism.

45. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th April, in discussing the Swadeshi movement has the following:—In 1765, when the Stamp Act was provoking dissatisfaction and unrest in the American Colonies of Great Britain, a congress of delegates from nine of the thirteen colonies drew up a series of resolutions, and submitted them to the King and to both Houses of Parliament. No answer was vouchsafed. What followed is told simply and concisely by Prof. Katharine Coman, of Wellesley College, in an able exposition of "The Industrial History of the United States," just published by Messrs. Macmillan:—

"Argument having failed of effect, the colonists sought to reach the ear of the mother country through her trade interests. . . . . Meantime a systematic effort was made to develop domestic manufactures as a substitute for imported goods. . . . . The royal Governors and other British officers underrated this movement representing in their reports to the Board of Trade that the actual achievements of the newly established manufactures were slight. . . . . Manufacturers realised the loss of the American market in diminished sales. Unable to dispose of the goods in stock, they closed their mills. Thousands of workmen were thrown out of employment. Petitions for the repeal of the legislation that had occasioned this business paralysis, were forwarded to London. . . . . Early in 1766 the Stamp Act was repealed, because, as the preamble recites, the continuance of the said Act would be attended with many inconveniences and might be productive of consequences greatly detrimental to the commercial interests of the Kingdom. A fresh series of legislative enactments was intended to enforce the principle at stake in another form, and "resistance to this new manifestation of the imperial policy, was even more widespread and systematic than that called out by the Stamp Act. . . . . The men of Boston assembled, and resolved, that " the excessive use of foreign superfluities is the chief cause of the present distressed state of this town, as it is thereby drained of its money; which misfortune is likely to be increased by means of the late additional burdens and impositions on the trade of the Province, which threaten the country with poverty and ruin." Citizens were urged to abstain from the purchase of the taxed commodities. The General Court of Massachusetts endorsed Boston's action by the resolution, that "this House will by all prudent means endeavour to discountenance the use of foreign superfluities and to encourage the manufacturers of this province." Similar resolutions were adopted by the legislatures of Connecticut, Virginia, New York, Maryland, and North Carolina. The artisans of Charleston, under the lead of Christopher Gadsden, assembled under the Liberty Oak, and adopted non-importation resolutions, which were enforced by boycott of merchants importing English goods. More backward colonies, such as New Hampshire and Georgia, and more conservative, such as Rhode Island and Pennsylvania, entered into the movement later, and under compulsion. Committees of correspondence and supervision kept watch upon imports, and theatened refractory parties, whether colonies or individuals, with non-intercourse. . . . . The seaports and the factory towns sent remonstrances to the Government, and besieged the House of Commons with petitions. The Ministry was obliged to yield (1770). The tax on tea was retained, however, and the Americans objected to it as strenuously as to the Stamp Tax, and it could be collected only by force. . . . . They determined on enforcement." A solemn league and covenant was signed by patriotic citizens, who bound themselves to abstain from all intercourse with Great Britain until the coercive legislation should be repealed (1774) . . . The boycott was more rigorously enforced than in 1765 or in 1768. But the effect for the colonies was even more disastrous. . . . . The colonists, on their part, were being driven to the conviction that, nothing short of complete separation would insure their interests against prejudicial legislation. And so perversely was ushered in the American Revolution.

INDIAN PUNCH,
30th April, 1906.

An appeal to Indians to promote Swadeshism.

46. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 30th April, publishes an Urdu poem in which the writer attributing the present decline in Indian wealth, art and commerce to the apathy of the people towards the use of country-made articles, asks the Indian patriots to restore the country to the position it has lost by promoting Swadeshism and putting aside all discord.

SITARA-I-HIND,
4th May, 1906.

The boycotting of foreign goods.

47. A correspondent of the Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of the 4th May, referring to the late deputation of Mr. Gokhale and Lala Lajpat Rai to England by the Indian National Congress for the purpose of drawing the attention of the British public towards Indian affairs, says that the experience gained by these gentlemen in England is not encouraging, the British public having little time to devote to anything but their home affairs. The writer does not think it wise on the part of Indians to rely solely on the British public and Government, and he urges on Indian patriots to take up the question of self-help in earnest. India is rich in agricultural and other resources and if these are properly utilized a regeneration of the country is sure to follow. The Indians should therefore try to ameliorate the condition of their country by making it one of their solemn duties never to use any article manufactured outside their country, and this the writer hopes will in due course enable them to hold their own against foreign competitors.

1st May 1906.

A warning to the Musalmans to keep themselves aloof from political agitation.

48. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st May, referring to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, observes that the liberty of the subject must in every country be limited and therefore those who transgress the limit imposed by superior authority must be prepared to bear the consequences. The editor regrets to say that a few unthinking Musalmans, regardless of their own shortcomings, seem to be disposed to combine with the Bengalis in political agitation and warns them to beware of the fatal consequences of such a step. They should properly appreciate the limited liberty already enjoyed by them and ought not to risk what they have already got in the vain endeavour to obtain more.

RAJPUT,
30th April, 1906.

Suggestion to separate youthful offenders from habitual criminals in Indian jails.

49. The Rájput (Agra), of the 30th April, alluding to certain arrangements made in English prisons for separating youthful offenders from habitual criminals, suggests the adoption of similar measures in Indian jails, where youthful offenders should be taught some handicraft to enable them to earn an honest livelihood on release.

HINDI PRADIP,
May, 1906.

Comments on the Pioneer's remarks about Mr. Gokhale's speech protesting against rise in military expenditure.

50. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for May, referring to the Pioneer's adverse comments on Mr. Gokhale's protest in the Imperial Legislative Council against the ever-growing military expenditure in India, indignantly asks whether the paper wishes that the people of this country should not even speak about the wrongs they are suffering.

HINDOSTHAN,
4th May, 1906.

Suggestions for the improvement of Government forests.

51. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 4th May, suggests that sandal trees, and shrubs yielding rubber, camphor, &c., should be planted in Government forests, which should also be made easily accessible by the construction of light railways and tramways.

HINDOSTHAN,
1st May, 1906.

Approval of the arrangements at the Kumbh Magh Mela lately held in Allahabad.

52. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 1st May, referring to the Sanitary Report on the Kumbh Mágh Mela in Allahabad in 1906, published by the United Provinces Government, expresses its full satisfaction at the excellent sanitary and other arrangements made for the convenience of the pilgrims.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,

Suggested abolition of the quarantine imposed at Bombay on Mecca pilgrims before they are allowed to embark.

53. A correspondent of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st May, referring to a meeting held at Bombay on the 10th April last under the chairmanship of His Highness the Agha Khan, for submitting a memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy praying for discontinuance of the forced residence of Mecca pilgrims in a segregation camp previous to embarkation, suggests that all Muhammadan associations in India should submit separate memorials supporting the prayer of the Bombay meeting. The writer thinks that Lord Minto will ever be gratefully remembered by the Muhammadans if he grants their present prayer, the reasonableness of which has been amply demonstrated by the leading men who spoke at the Bombay meeting.

ARYA MITRA,
1st May, 1906.

Christian missionaries accused of enticing away Hindu women in order to convert them to Christianity.

54. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st May, referring to the desire of some persons in England to prevent Asiatics from marrying Englishwomen by means of legislation, considers it a pity that the Hindus have not taken any steps to prevent the Christian missionaries in this country from enticing even married Hindu women out of their homes and converting them to Christianity.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

GARHWALI,
March and April, 1906.

Unsatisfactory condition of the road between Rudraprayag and Kedarnath in the Garhwal district.

55. The Garhwáli (Dehra Dun), in its joint issue for March and April, observing that the construction of a road from Hardwar to Badri Nath has conduced to the convenience of traders and pilgrims, says that as the road between Rudraprayág and Kedárnáth is in an unsatisfactory condition and without mile-stones, the pilgrims passing over it are much inconvenienced, and asks Government and charitable Hindus to provide funds for carrying out the requisite improvements.

I.—POLITICS.

OUDH PUNCH,
3rd May, 1906.

The Anglo-Chinese treaty relating to Tibet.

1. THE Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, publishes a cartoon in which China in the shape of an eagle is represented as flying off with a lamb, which stands for Tibet, in its talons, while the British lion is represented as lying down on the ground and looking helplessly upwards, the eagle with the lamb having attaineda height beyond his reach.

SAHIFA,
5th May, 1906.

Egypt, England and Turkey.

2. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th May, referring to Lord Cromer's proposal to abolish the Egyptian mixed Consular courts and to form a new Legislative Council composed mainly of foreigners, observes that the adoption of the proposal will expose Egypt to foreign intrigue and will not tend to facilitate business. Apart from this attempted interference in the internal affairs of Egypt, the British Government is trying to pick a quarrel with Turkey regarding the boundary question, regardless of the fact that the general unrest in Egypt indicates that the people are prepared to admit the Imperial rights of Turkey and are not in favour of quarrelling with the Sultan without adequate reason. At first it was given out that the increase in the British army occupying Egypt was due to reasons of general policy, but Earl Grey subsequently admitted that Lord Cromer desired an increase of the British garrison in Egypt in view of Turkish action on the frontier. Thus the British Government has decided to make Turkish troops leave Egyptian territory, but it remains to be seen whether the Turkish troops have in fact occupied Egyptian soil. The editor considers it an admitted fact that Akabah is Turkish territory, and from a view of the map is inclined to think that Tabah is included within the Akabah district. Be that as it may, the whole Islamic world is, the editor thinks, praying for an amicable settlement, as war would be most unfortunate.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th May, 1906.

England and the boundary dispute between Turkey and Egypt.

3. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th May, referring to the boundary dispute between Turkey and Egypt, says that Lord Cromer ought to act considerately in the matter, for although Egypt is in fact in the power of foreigners, and the British Government is protector of Egyptian rights, the previous history and geographical position of the country is such that it must remain under Turkish influence. It is therefore improper on the part of the British Government to quarrel with the friendly power of Turkey regarding a boundary dispute between Turkey and Egypt. If the Khedive tries to secure his rights by going to war with his master, his action will not be viewed with approval by the world at large.

ARYA MITRA,
8th May, 1906.

The Turco-Egyptian boundary dispute.

4. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th May, referring to the Turco-Egyptian frontier dispute and the opposition evinced by the Pan-Islamic Press and the Egyptian population against the British, says that matters are growing critical, and wonders why the Khedive has left Egypt for Europe at such a moment when his presence in the country is most needed.

HINDUSTANI,
9th May, 1906.

England, Turkey and Egypt.

5. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 9th May, referring to the straitened relations between England and Turkey in connection with the Akabah question, thinks that it is Germany who, in order to avenge herself on England for her failure in Morocco, has instigated the Porte to raise the boundary question. England fears that at the instigation of Germany, Turkey desires to extend her influence in the Arabian Sea and thereby harm British interests there, while Turkey disclaims any such intent and does not desire to raise the question of the evacuation of Egypt at present. The editor does not understand why the Egyptians, if they approve of British interference in Egypt, are showing such signs of unrest, especially at a time when Lord Cromer is dilating on the wonderful progress made by the country since it came under British protection. The editor thinks that mere religious sympathy with the Sultan is not sufficient to explain the dissatisfaction manifested by the Egyptian people. He sees nothing to be wondered at in the Sultan's desire to promote friendship with Persia and Afghanistan, but thinks that without the development of strong patriotic feelings similar to those of the Japanese, mere religious sympathy will not enable Asiatic powers to combat successfully against the nations of the West in whom the sentiment of patriotism is all-powerful. However, as both England and Turkey seem disinclined to go to war, the editor hopes that matters will soon take a peaceful turn.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th May, 1906.

The boundary dispute between Turkey and Egypt, and the issue of a pamphlet by an Honorary Magistrate to show that the Sultan is not the "Leader of the Faithful."

6. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th May, referring to the boundary dispute between Turkey and Egypt, fears that it may lead to serious consequences, for the Turks are strengthening their forces at Akabah, German workmen are busy in constructing a railway in the vicinity and the British are also going to increase the number of their forces in Egypt. That some mischief is brewing also appears from the fact that attempts are being made to convince Indian Muhammadans that the Sultan of Turkey is not the Khalifa or rightful leader of the Muhammadans, and thus to weaken the feelings of respect with which he is viewed by the Muhammadan community. Such seems to the editor to be the object of a pamphlet on the subject recently published by an Honorary Magistrate who probably belongs to the Shia sect; for the raising of such a question of purely academic interest so late in the day is otherwise inexplicable. The editor remarks that religious leaders and not Honorary Magistrates can write on such a subject with authority, and adds that even granting that no one at the present day can claim to be the "Leader of the Faithful," it cannot be denied that trouble to the Sultan means trouble to the Muhammadan religion, for he is the protector of Islam, the guardian of the sacred shrines in Arabia and of the relics of the Prophet. Christians having gradually swept off nearly all Muhammadan States from the face of the globe, Turkey is the only Power remaining that can protect Islam. The remaining so-called Muhammadan powers are under the influence of the Christian powers, and owe their very existence to the dread inspired by the collective force of the Muhammadan world. Christians have already sown the seed of discord among the Muhammadan States, and this action of theirs seems to be but the first step towards the weakening of the power of the Sultan and through him of the Muhammadans. Granting that the Sultan has no right to summon the whole Muhammadan world to a religious war, and that no Muhammadan king can proclaim a religious war for his personal benefit and without reasonable cause, it cannot, the editor thinks, be denied that as soon as the banner of the Prophet is unfurled for the protection of the Muhammadan faith, it will be the religious duty of every Muhammadan to serve under that banner. The war will cease to be political and will assume a religious phase. The editor thinks it will be impossible to restrain Muhammadans at such a juncture as all Christians are already aware; for no Muhammadan can bear to see Mecca, Medina and the relics of the Prophet pass into the hands of a Christian power, and if there are any they are traitors to their faith.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th May, 1906.

Establishment of a hospital by Christian missionaries at Bahrein in Arabia.

7. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th May, referring to the opening of a hospital by Christian missionaries at Bahrein in Arabia, observes that this forebodes trouble to the whole Arabian peninsula, for the Christian missionaries will lose no opportunity for inciting the Arabs against the Sultan of Turkey, and will also breed trouble by taking part in the mutual strife of Arab chiefs, thus acting like the monkey of the fable who helped himself to the whole cake of cheese he had undertaken to divide equitably between two rival cats.

Delegation of Mr. Gokhale to England.

8. The Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 30th April, referring to the deputation of Mr. Gokhale to England for bringing the needs of India before the British public, observes that it is vain to expect that Englishmen will give up their fixed policy of government by listening to the speeches delivered by an Indian, and suggests that the money spent on such missions would be better employed in developing the material resources of this country. When India becomes prosperous her representations are sure to be carefully attended to, and her prosperity will also enable her the better to bear the strain of bad government.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th May, 1906.

Remarks on the conviction of Zia-ul-Haq's father by the Rampur State Court of Sessions.

9. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th May, states that Munshi Ali Husain, father of Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, has been sentenced by the Rampur State Court of Sessions to four months' imprisonment without regard to the man's advanced age and the fact that he had already spent three months in the lock-up. The editor says that the man's conviction was a foregone conclusion, and wonders why no attempt has yet been made by the Prime Minister to refute the serious charges contained in Zia-ul-Haq's pamphlets. However groundless the charges may be, silence is generally regarded as a proof of the accusations being well-founded.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th May, 1906.

A pamphlet issued by Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, bringing various charges against His Highness the Nawab of Rampur.

10. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th May, referring to a pamphlet issued in English by the notorious Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq on the occasion of the late visit of Lord Curzon to Rampur bringing various charges against His Highness the Nawab, and entitled "The shaking of innocent with guilty hands," says that in the first place it is difficult to understand how the writer of the pamphlet can characterise as innocent a viceroy who signalized his régime by deposing the Maharaja of Panna, by depriving Indians of their proper share in Government employment, by taking the province of Berar from the Nizam and by perpetrating many other similar acts of injustice towards Indians. Then, the pamphlet charges His Highness the Nawab of Rampur with such heinous acts as seducing innocent virgins, separating married ladies from their husbands, getting his adversaries secretly and cruelly put to death, bringing innocent respectable persons to disgrace, keeping lads for immoral purposes, &c., and His Highness and the Minister have somehow thought it fit to allow such reports to spread unchecked and uncontradicted. The matter is one of grave importance and, in the editor's opinion, the British Government which never hesitates in punishing crime without regard to the offender's position, as has already been proved by the deposition of the late Maharajas of Baroda and Panna, should make a thorough inquiry into the allegations made by Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq in the pamphlet in question, with a view to show that the Supreme Government is not unmindful of the interests of subjects of Native States.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 6th May, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the Allahabad High Court to Lucknow.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th May, says:—Once again the public mind in these provinces is being unsettled by the question of the transfer of the Allahabad High Court to Lucknow. . . . . If a regard for propriety did not prevent us from giving out the name of the chief mover we could easily do so. It is enough to say that that person happens to be a highly placed official and it is not difficult to discover his identity. But while we admire the zeal and pertinacity of those who are anxious to revive the faded glories of Lucknow, we think the question is of so much importance that individual sentiment and personal likes and dislikes ought to have no place in its settlement. Two things are obvious. The first is that Allahabad has of late been in a bad way in respect of official patronage and favours. It is the seat of the Government of these Provinces minus the Government itself. The Lieutenant-Governor is nowadays looked upon more as a distinguished visitor to Allahabad than as a permanent resident, so far as his office admits of permanence. And the Lieutenant-Governor in this instance means not merely the individual, but the centre of all administrative and social life in the province. The other thing which is but too obvious is that Lucknow has cast its spell over the mind of the Government. Its attractions have proved too strong for the official mind. There seems to be some charm about it, which, however, is not apparent to an outsider. What may be the secret of it ? Surely it cannot be pretended that the climate of Lucknow is more cooling to the official brain or that it mellows the mind of the Government into greater generosity at the time of Budget meetings which have become quite a feature of Lucknow. Nor we think can it be urged that its extensive parks, its attractive race-course, or the brilliant life at Chattar Manzil are sufficient to atone for everything else that may be to its debit side. An explanation has been suggested to us and it is that the pomp and glitter of the Barons of Oudh and their inexhaustible hospitality, call for an adequate return and that can be done only by making their city the first official city in the province. But let that be as it may, we do not object to the Government humouring them as much as it likes. Our only objection is that it should not be at the expense of others who if they cannot boast of the grand style about them, have no less strong claims based upon what we may call prescription and economy. . . . . Then, it would be the merest affectation to say that a change of seat of the High Court to Lucknow will not result in a considerable depreciation of house property. . . . . Who wants this change ? Surely not the people of the Agra Province, unless the people of Agra mean the Hon'ble Nawab who hails from Aligarh and the Hon'ble representative of the Chamber of Commerce. We deny most emphatically that Nawab Yusuf Ali Khan was acting as the spokesman of his province when he asked the Government, at the last Budget meeting of the Council, to remove the High Court to Lucknow. . . . . Viewed from any standpoint, the case for the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow seems to be exceedingly poor and weak, and a Government like that of these Provinces which has not hesitated to confess its bankruptcy in its Provincial resources can hardly afford to undertake such an ambitious and fruitless scheme with the taxpayers' money, when there are so many crying needs to be met. . . . . For the present we shall rest content with sounding this note of warning. It is for the leaders of public opinion at Allahabad to take up the question at once. Let the whole Province of Agra unite in a strong protest against the measure, and let the Government learn wisdom betimes from the experience of partitioning Bengal against the wishes of the people of Bengal.

INDIAN PUNCH,
7th May 1906.

A recent fatal affray between certain villagers and three British soldiers at Dadri in the Bulandshahr district.

12. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 7th May, referring to the recent affray between certain villagers and three British soldiers at Dadri in the Bulandshahr district (vide articles Nos. 14 and 11 on pages 201 and 258 respectively of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), regrets to say that instead of the soldiers being punished for causing the death of a villager, the villagers themselves were convicted and punished with various terms of imprisonment ranging from two years to six months. This incident further confirms the long-held opinion that mixed cases cannot be impartially tried in India.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th May, 1906.

Need for fuller exercise of revisional powers by the higher criminal courts.

13. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 7th May, observing that the provisions of law relating to revision of criminal cases by the higher courts are very useful in keeping the work of the lower courts up to the mark, urges the necessity of all cases which come up in revision being fully gone into by the court exercising revisional powers. Similarly the higher courts should also vigilantly exercise their power of calling up, on their own initiative cases from subordinate courts for the purposes of revision. The Registrar of the High Court should also be empowered to visit the courts of District and Sessions Judges and District Magistrates for inspecting records of cases decided by those officers, and to report thereon to the Judges of the High Court.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th May, 1906.

Need for establishing a Criminal Court of Appeal in India.

14. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 7th May, referring to the introduction in the British Parliament of a bill to constitute a Criminal Court of Appeal, and to the occasional incarceration and even execution of innocent men in England, says:—Such miscarriages of justice are not unknown in India, and the sooner the bill is passed and made law, its introduction into India is imperative. Two instances of a gross miscarriage of justice occurred in Calcutta, which the writer quotes as a proof of the imperative need of a Criminal Court of Appeal. First a man named Niven was convicted of murder many years ago and hanged for having stabbed to death a policeman in Kidderpore. The real culprit died in the General Hospital, Calcutta, he having confessed that he was the murderer. In the second case a soldier was convicted of shooting a native in a tank in the neighbourhood of Calcutta, was condemned to death, and laid in the condemned cell for days in anticipation of the death sentence being carried out. Mr. Woodroffe, father of the present Mr.

Justice Woodroffe, a legal luminary of great ability in his time in Calcutta, pressed for a new trial. He succeeded, with the result that the man was acquitted and rejoined his regiment. But for the interest taken in the case by Mr. Woodroffe, senior, there can be no manner of doubt that the man would have been hanged. We believe, there are many natives undergoing incarceration in jails throughout the country innocent of the crimes of which they stand convicted. A Criminal Court of Appeal would prevent many, if not all, such miscarriages of justice.

17. It is suggested that in case the Municipal Board cannot afford to build a Town Hall, public subscriptions may be invited and the Municipal and District Boards of Agra asked to contribute a portion of the sum required. HINDUSTANI, 2nd May, 1906.

The recent examinations of the Allahabad University.

19. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 2nd May, referring to the late Intermediate and lower examinations of the Allahabad University, observes that they were held in an extremely hot season, and owing to two examination papers being set daily, the students had to go to the examination hall and come back to their residence in the hot sun twice every day. The editor suggests that in future if it be decided to set two question papers in one day in the summer season, the examination should be held from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M. The questions set were on the whole fair. But the translation paper of the School Final examination was rather severe, and the English Entrance paper was far beyond the capacity of the candidates. The Entrance translation paper was also difficult, and the Urdu portion instead of being correctly printed in a running hand, as it ought to have been, was full of misprints and illegible. The editor thinks that few Bengali and Parsi candidates are likely to pass in the translation paper, and hopes that the examiners will show some leniency in assigning marks.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
4th May, 1906.

Alleged evil effects of indifference towards female education.

20. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th May, referring to the alleged abduction of two Hindu ladies from Hathras by a missionary lady (vide Article No. 14 on page 216 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), attributes such scandals to the deplorable indifference of the people towards female education. Missionary ladies with a view to secure converts spend a large portion of their time in impressing on young inexperienced girls the superiority of Christianity over the religions professed in India, with the result that some girls are naturally deluded. As many such cases are brought to light from time to time, the editor urges that parents should pay more attention to the proper education of their girls, which must not be left in the hands of missionary ladies.

BHARAT JIWAN,
7th May, 1906.

A suggestion for improving the pay and prospects of Hindi teachers.

21. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 7th May, publishes a letter from a correspondent in which the writer suggests that having regard to the heavy work imposed on Hindi school teachers owing to Hindi having now been made a compulsory instead of a merely optional subject, their pay and prospects should be improved and they should be placed at least on a par with Persian teachers. The writer also recommends the inclusion of Hindi and Persian teachers in the general cadre of English teachers with a view to improving the former's chances of promotion.

25. The Dilshád (Meerut), of the 15th March, received on the 10th May, publishes a letter from a correspondent in which the writer while approving of Swadeshism as beneficial to the country, urges the desirability of dissociating the movement from the Bengali Anti-Partition agitation.

ADVOCATE,
6th May, 1906.

The need of Swadeshi sentiment.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th May, says:—The word "Swadeshi" is on the lips of every one. To some it conjures up pictures of practical patriotism the fruits of which they hope to reap within a measurable distance of time. To some the mystic word opens up a gorgeous vista of economic future for India wherein they see visions of "wealth of Ind" showering on her people "barbaric pearl and gold." Others, less exaggerated in their hopes, discover in the word a sound doctrine of political economy which, translated into practice, would strengthen the commercial position of India and renew some of its dormant arts and industries. . . . . In the time of old East India Company when Indian silk, cotton and other stuffs began to be imported into England, so great was the exasperation of English manufacturers at the idea of Indian goods offering a "cheaper market" in England, that the British Parliament passed an Act in the year 1701 which obtained Royal assent on the 11th of April 1701, by which it was enacted: "That from and after the 29th day of September 1701, all wrought silks, Angolas and stuffs mixed with silk or herbs of manufacture of China, Persia, or the East Indies, and all calicoes, painted, dyed, printed or stained there, which are or shall be imported into this kingdom, shall not be worn or otherwise used in Great Britain, and all goods imported after that day, shall be warehoused or exported again." In 1775 a "Patriotic Society" was started in Edinburgh as a protest against the fashion of wearing Indian cotton apparel. The delicate object of that Society was also to boycott every man who associated with ladies wearing them. To our Anglo-Indian critics who vehemently condemn the boycott of Bengal, the above incidents present a very awkward subject for reflection. . . . . On the top of all this we labour under the additional burden of what is known as "Excise Duty" on our own cotton goods so that we can under no circumstance under-sell Manchester, and thus competition is made harder for us rather than easier by the measures of our own Government.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th May, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement and the boycotting of foreign goods.

27. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th May, states that the Bengalis at first intended to boycott Manchester goods in order that the Lancashire voters may force the Secretary of State for India to disallow the partition of Bengal. Finding, however, that the people of other provinces were quite indifferent regarding the partition question, they cunningly brought forward the Swadeshi movement with which the country at large is in sympathy. But the boycotting of foreign goods is neither practicable nor a necessary step towards the support of country manufactures, for India is quite unprepared to supply all its own necessaries. The Muhammadans, who consider it a religious duty to obey God, the Prophet and the ruler for the time being, cannot view with favour a movement which is based on enmity with the British Government. In conclusion the editor says that the boycott movement being based on motives of retaliation for the partition of Bengal is doomed to failure.

28. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th May, while expressing its sympathy with the Swadeshi movement, advises Árya Samájists to confine their energies to the service of the Árya Samáj, which will suffer if any of its votaries take to other fields of work.

ALMORA AKHBAR,

The Barisal incidents.

29. The Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 30th April, referring to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and the other Barisal incidents, remarks that the action of the authorities is calculated to bring disgrace on British rule, which has hitherto been noted for its tolerance and clemency.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
3rd May, 1906.

The Barisal incident.

30. In the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd May, the editor closes an article regarding the Barisal incident entitled "History repeats itself" with these words :—"The present administrators and statesmen entrusted with the government of India sadly want a schooling in the teaching of history, and it is high time that they should in their leisure hours turn over the pages of their long-forgotten school books dealing with the political history of Europe and England."

In the body of the article he referred to and quoted passages from speeches by Fox in 1797 for the repeal of the Treason and Sedition Acts, and compared the Barisal meeting and its dispersal to the Manchester riots of August 1819, and adverted to the disaffection throughout the country which resulted from their repression by force.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
3rd May, 1906.

Alleged illegal action of Mr. Emerson, the District Magistrate of Barisal.

31. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd May, says :—The threads that Mr. Emerson of Barisal set loose are being slowly gathered in. A successful application has been made in the High Court for a rule on the District Magistrate of Barisal calling on him to show cause why the complaint of Phani Bhusan Banerji should not be further enquired into, and why, if the order for further enquiry was made by the High Court, it should not be made by a Magistrate outside the district of Backergunge. Phani Bhusan Banerji is the young lad who was struck across the face by Mr. Kemp, and whose lip was cut open, for no other offence than passing alone along the street. When a complaint was made to the District Magistrate it was summarily struck out. Other complaints of a similar nature were also struck out at the same time. We do not think Mr. Emerson is such a fool as to have thought he had heard the last of these cases, and it is difficult to say when he will hear the last of them. Government by circular is not the same as the administration of justice, and Mr. Emerson can expect no help from his master when it comes to a question of law in the higher courts.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
3rd May, 1906.

Two lessons of the Barisal outrage.

32. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd May, says :—An occurrence of such a startling character as the recent police and magisterial outrages at Barisal must have its significance and its lesson. Thoughtful people will doubtless endeavour to ascertain both. . . . . In the earlier days of British rule in India there were occasions when great misdeeds of men high in office aroused the indignation of the English people, and the offenders, no matter how highly placed, were brought to trial and to condign punishment. . . . . Later on, such sensational incidents have been of rarer occurrence, but official wrong-doers have frequently been called to account for their misdoings or abuse of authority. . . . . Compared to that of which Mr. Emerson and Mr. Kemp of Barisal have been guilty, all previous instances of official misdeeds were venal, and on no occasion were the effects so far-reaching, or so serious as on the present. It has to be further remembered that the original offenders are not the District Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police of Barisal, but the Lieutenant-Governor of the new Province of East Bengal and Assam, who has characterised his administration from the outset by a persistent violation of the broad principles of British justice, and who has substituted the rule of the police láthi and Gurkha violence for the administration of law and order. He has converted a hitherto peaceful territory into a field for daily oppression and abuse of authority, and has interfered with rights which are inalienable from British rule and which are freely enjoyed all over the Indian Empire. Unless Mr. Emerson and Mr. Kemp had the Local Government at their back they could not have ventured to commit the outrages that have stirred India deeply from one end to the other. It is not a matter of an individual indiscretion, or an official high-handedness at all. It is a deliberate blow aimed at the constitution, a gross interference with the primary rights of the subject, an indiscriminate personal violence without the shadow of any justification. The foremost men of Bengal were insulted and some of them were assaulted, and their most famous leader was treated as a common criminal and malefactor, for doing nothing more than what is done every day everywhere in India. . . . . The other lesson that he who runs may read is the attitude of the Anglo-Indian community towards the people, and especially the educated classes of this country. With a few rare exceptions, and exceptions prove the rule, all Anglo-Indian papers have approved of the action of the authorities at Barisal and have even said that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and the other delegates were leniently treated. If these papers represent Anglo-Indian feeling, and not a single disclaimer has so far appeared in any Anglo-Indian newspaper, all hope must be abandoned of any cordiality of feeling or understanding between the Anglo-Indian and Indian communities in this country. The inference is perfectly justified that if a gathering like the Indian National Congress or a Provincial Conference were to be dispersed by force by the police or the military, if the delegates were to be indiscriminately assaulted, arrested and punished, the Anglo-Indian Press would see nothing in such measures to disapprove and would admire the lenity of the law and the forbearance of the authorities. . . . . The only feeling that inspires them is an unbounded antipathy against the educated classes of India. . . . . There is practically nothing to choose between this frame of mind and the attitude of the colonists in South Africa towards the Indian population in that colony. It is simply a question of difference in the law and the administration. On the one hand, therefore, we have to see what action is taken by the Supreme Government to restore the public confidence that has been so seriously shaken by the action of a provincial ruler and his subordinates, and, on the other, we have to realize the fact which does not admit of a doubt that we can no longer calculate on the good will and sympathy of our Anglo-Indian fellow-subjects in the common cause of law and order.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
3rd May, 1906.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

33. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd May, says :—There was something else that Mr. Emerson wanted to do, but which was left undone. He wanted to bind down Babu Surendra Nath Banerji under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. And he did so evidently without any report from the police. Had Babu Surendra Nath Banerji's name been placed on police register No. 10 of Barisal? If so, it must have been very rapid work and would be very complimentary to Mr. Kemp. Mr. Emerson, in the plenitude of his powers, believed that he could set the whole of the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code in motion against Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, who had been politely informed that he was a prisoner and not an accused person. Babu Surendra Nath Benerji was asked who would be his security. He named a gentleman, who had been previously turned out by Mr. Emerson because he had not a pagri on, and this gentleman was called in and offered to stand surety. Then Babu Surendra Nath Banerji pleasantly reminded the Magistrate that he could not be bound down by an executive order, and a judicial proceeding would be necessary. That made Mr. Emerson consult a book—evidently a very rare thing with him—and he said nothing further about section 107, and the next day, which was a Sunday, he dropped it, so great is his devotion to duty. So Mr. Emerson thinks that he can bind down an outsider, who does not even belong to the district and is merely a passing visitor. It seems he has yet to learn a thing or two, and he has been properly taken in hand by the High Court.

MOHINI,
4th May, 1906.

The attitude of the people regarding the Barisal affair.

34. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 4th May, observes that hopes of the advent of a new era of sympathetic rule raised in the breasts of the people by the appointment of Lord Minto as Viceroy and the accession of the Liberals to power, have vanished long ago. With reference to the Barisal affair, however, people are still waiting patiently for the decision of Lord Minto and of the Secretary of State, but whatever the decision may be, the time has come for Indians to put aside all indolence and idle talk and to bring into play all the highest qualities of their nature with a view to tide over the difficulties which surround them.

BHARAT JIWAN,
7th May, 1906.

The arrest of Babu Surendra Nath and the cry of Bande Mátaram.

35. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 7th May, in a communicated article, remarks that the arrest and punishment of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji has only raised him in the estimation of his countrymen, and has shaken the people's confidence in the Government. Referring to the prohibition of the cry of Bande Mátaram, the writer says that it was not a call to arms and ought not to have been so seriously noticed. Those who are elated with strong feelings of patriotism whenever the note of their National Anthem is struck, ought to have shown some respect for the patriotic song of their subject people.

TAFRIH,
7th May, 1906.

The Barisal affairs.

36. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th May, states that the refusal of Mr. John Morley to interfere with the Partition of Bengal on the ground that the agitation against the measure was subsiding, has given the Anti-Partition agitation in Bengal a new lease of life, and has thus been the indirect cause of the unpleasant affairs at Barisal. The dispersal of one Conference may lead to the dispersal of others on slight pretexts, and the Muhammadan and Hindu cries of "Állâh-u-akbar," and "Rám Chandra ki jai" may one day share the fate of Bande Mátaram. The matter is consequently more serious than it appears on the surface. However, now that the case has gone before the Calcutta High Court for revision, the editor hopes that many secrets will be brought to light, and the legality or otherwise of the Government Circular prohibiting the cry of Bande Mátaram will be authoritatively determined.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th May, 1906.

Rumour regarding the transfer of Sir Bampfylde Fuller to the United Provinces.

37. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th May, referring to the rumour that Sir Bampfylde Fuller is shortly to be transferred to the United Provinces, says that it has not yet been confirmed. But if the rumour comes out to be true, the writer fears that, although it will no doubt be welcome to the people of Eastern Bengal, the United Provinces should be prepared to face trouble. Sir J. B. Fuller's retirement will, in the editor's opinion, be the most welcome news.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th May, 1906.

Alleged state of discontent in Bengal and elsewhere.

38. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th May, regrets to say that the high-handed proceedings of Lord Curzon and Sir Bampfylde Fuller have shaken the confidence of the Indian people in the impartiality and toleration of the British Government, and the recent prohibition of the harmless and patriotic cry of Bande Mátaram and the arrest of the Bengali leader, Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, have tended to fan the flame of the already existing discontent. It is high time that the Government of India should look into the matter and remove all cause for complaint.

The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 7th May, expresses similar views and adds that forcible suppression of open agitation can only tend to secret, conspiracies which are far more dangerous.

CITIZEN,
7th May, 1906.

Adverse criticism of the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

39. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 7th May, speaking of Sir J. B. Fuller, says :—What gave him his Lieutenant-Governorship? . . . . The commencement of the administration was marked by a series of curtain lectures for the mere reason that his reception was not good enough. This was followed by the Bande Mátaram craze. This was succeeded by a war against school boys. Then came the melo-dramatic scenes at Rangpur where under the benign administration of Sir Bampfylde's Government a certain number of men including a Barrister and a Mahamohopadhya were enrolled as special constables, provided with batons and uniforms, and for the safety of the realm had to be taught the very wholesome lesson of salaaming a twelve rupee constable. This was an object lesson of great significance, which put into words amounted to a retort to the people of Eastern Bengal for their organized conspiracy in refusing him a cordial reception. "Ye who stubbornly refuse to salaam me shall have to pay for it and be forced to render homage to the meanest of my servants, the veriest head chaprási in my domain." Then came the scene of letting loose Gurkha troops upon the unarmed inhabitants of a peaceful town the head and front of whose offence was no more than this that they sang patriotic songs in honour of their motherland. Notifications, proclamations and circulars have deluged Bengal from end to end. Each one of these incidents was quite sufficient to immortalize Sir Bampfylde, but in the affairs of Barisal he has surpassed even himself.

He well began, he well began,
And before half his race he ran,
Tibigledy pigledy.

The rude assault that has been made upon the sacred principles which rule civilized Governments, in which the majesty of law has been set absolutely at defiance, in which blind force has been substituted for constitutional Government, has stirred to their depths the people of India who accustomed to various degrees of vagaries from officialdom are seldom roused into activity to protect their life, liberty and limbs. . . . . Leaving the prejudices of the controversy aside and placing himself dispassionately in the position of an impartial judge, we hope that it will be at once apparent to Mr. John Morley that even if the partition of Bengal is to be maintained, Sir Bampfylde Fuller has proved himself utterly unworthy of being placed at the head of the Government.

POCKET AKHBAR,
30th April, 1906.

A meeting held at Agra to sympathize with Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

40. The Pocket Akhbár (Agra), of the 30th April, states that an influential meeting of the residents of Agra was held within the compound of the Swadeshi Bazar to express sympathy with Babu Surendra Nath Banerji for his arrest at Barisal, and to protest against the action of the Government of Eastern Bengal.

ADVOCATE,
3rd May, 1906.

A public meeting held at Agra to protest against the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

41. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, publishes the following telegram received from Agra :—Under the auspices of the Congress Committee an open-air mass meeting representing all communities was held on 29th April at Agra at the Swadeshi Bazar. Great enthusiasm prevailed. Mr. Govind Sahai Barrister, presided. Resolutions emphatically protesting against the high-handed proceedings of the authorities at Barisal in causing the arrest of Mr. Surendra Nath and the dispersal of the Conference, and expressing sympathy with Mr. Surendra Nath and other delegates, were passed unanimously. A resolution supporting the Swadeshi movement was passed amidst cries of Bande Mátaram. The whole audience stood and promised solemnly, led by Mr. Gowardhan Das, to eschew foreign goods and support the Swadeshi movement. A telegram explaining the unprecedented state of intense alarm and indignation caused by the unconstitutional methods of the Eastern Bengal Government was sent to the Viceroy with a request to soothe public excitement. A short sketch of the life of Mr. Surendra Nath was read by Maulvi Faiyaz Husain, editor, amidst great enthusiasm. The police was present. A great number of speeches were made by Narain Parshad, Vakil, and Gowardhan Das. The meeting ended with Bande Mátaram and other national songs.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th May, 1906.

Public meetings held at Karachi and Allahabad to protest against the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

42. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th May, says:—We are particularly pleased to learn by telegram that a public meeting of the citizens of Karachi was held on the 3rd instant to protest against the Barisal outrages. . . . . Here in Allahabad we have done what little we could. We might have done better if Pandit Ajodhya Nath had been with us. . . . . Besides those who have taken part in these meetings, what about the men in the service of the Government? Their lips are sealed, but is their indignation the less on that account? Who will open the eyes of the British Government to the danger that is being deliberately created by the responsible servants of the Government?

ARYA MITRA,
8th May, 1906.

Reflections on the protest meetings held in connection with the Barisal affair.

43. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th May, notices with satisfaction that about 150 meetings attended by at least six hundred thousand persons were held in all parts of India to protest against the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and the dispersal of the Barisal Conference, but observes that such ineffectual protests have a tendency to expose the inherent weakness of the people, who in spite of their complete accord are powerless to get their grievances redressed.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
30th April, 1906.

Complaint against the closing of forests to cattle-grazing.

44. The Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 30th April, complains of the vexatious rules of the Forest Department issued with a view to prevent cattle-grazing in reserved forests, and of the barbed wire fencing erected to prevent ingress of cattle in certain forests. The editor suggests that free grazing in forests should be permitted, for cattle not being able to climb trees cannot injure valuable timber trees and it is unjust to prevent the villager, who is fined for failing to supply the full quantity of milk indented for by Government officers on tour, from sending his cattle to forests provided by nature for the support of animals.

JASUS,
May, 1906.

Need for attention to village sanitation.

45. The Jásús (Gahmar), for May, is glad to hear of the remission of the patwari cess. With reference to Sir J. Digges LaTouche's promise to move the Government of India to grant a sum in aid of the sanitary improvement of the large cities in these provinces, the editor observing that the residents of cities are much better off than villagers, and the sanitary condition of villages is much worse than that of cities, hopes that due attention will be paid to village sanitation, and that His Honor will be pleased to impress on his successor the need for continuing His Honor's policy of sanitary improvement.

HINDOSTHAN,
6th May, 1906.

Suggested need for discovering the source of the Brahmaputra in the interest of Indo-Tibetan trade.

46. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 6th May, states that the discovery of the source of the Brahmaputra and its relation to the Sánpu river is likely to facilitate trade between India and Tibet, and supports the Scottish Geographical Society's advice to the Government of India for taking necessary steps for the exploration.

BHARAT JIWAN,
7th May, 1906.

Suggested need for union among Hindus and Musalmans.

47. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 7th May, urges the need for union among Hindus and Muhammadans for the purpose of securing concessions from the Government, and approves of the speech on the subject of Hindu-Muhammadan union lately delivered by Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk at Aligarh (vide article No. 25 on page 206 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906).

RAHBAR, AND UNION GAZETTE,
7th May, 1906.

A meeting held at Liverpool under the auspices of the Indian Famine Union.

48. The Rahbar (Moradabad), and the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th May, publish the substance of the speeches delivered at a meeting held at Liverpool under the auspices of the Liverpool Branch of the Indian Famine Union, and hope that their readers will be interested to know what views certain sympathetic Englishmen hold regarding the affairs of India.

HINDUSTANI,
9th May, 1906.

Lord Kitchener and the Indian Army Administration.

49. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 9th May, referring to the correspondence attacking Lord Kitchener published in the London Times, observes that it is undeniable that the native army is not contented and that the country at large is dissatisfied with the Indian Army administration. The enormous increase in military expenditure in the face of the fact that Russian power has been crippled, is an injustice to India which cannot easily be forgotten. But Lord Kitchener is not wholly to blame; it is the policy of distrust of the natives of India which is responsible for this state of discontent. The reason why recruits are not forthcoming for the native army is that the Indian soldier is not afforded the opportunity to rise in his profession, and he is seldom allowed an occasion to develop his martial qualities. The marked difference between the lodging, feeding and general treatment of European soldiers on the one hand and the native sepoys on the other, and above all the gradual decadence of martial spirit due to the exclusion of middle and high class natives from the higher ranks of military service, also contribute to the same result. This unsatisfactory state of affairs will continue so long as Indians are not allowed an effectual voice in the administration of their country.

ADVOCATE,
10th May, 1906.

The transfer of Dr. Tandan and the alleged grievances of Assistant Surgeons in the United Provinces.

50. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th May, says :—The letter signed by " One of Them " which appears elsewhere is not authenticated, the writer preferring to conceal his identity from us. We publish it because it says all that could be said in favour of the actions of the Medical department. The correspondent has simply misunderstood the situation. Had Dr. Tandan's transfer been owing to the exigencies of the service or in compliance with some rules laid down by the Inspector-General, there would have been no occasion for saying anything. But the transfer was meant to show displeasure at Dr. Tandan's work on the basis of reports received behind his back. The importance of the Balrampur Hospital might not be greater than that of Mainpuri from the official point of view, but the difference is so great in the people's eye that the doctor in charge of the Balrampur Hospital thought it better to resign than accept the Mainpuri appointment. As to Dr. Abdur-Rahim's promotion, the correspondent has no occasion to quarrel with him if he declined to proceed on promotion, his peculiar private circumstances necessitated his stay in Lucknow even if he had to obtain long furlough to do so. . . . . The people have surely good reasons for complaint if men of better experience and superior training after having been posted to larger stations are relegated to third class stations without any fault on their part. Fancy Assistant Surgeons treated something like toys taken from one station to another at the sweet will of somebody without rhyme or reason. An Assistant Surgeon speaking of his own troubles in a private letter, not meant for publication, writes : " I do not understand how I am transferred all of a sudden. I did not commit any gross mistake. I do not know my faults. I have not been allowed to stay at one place for some months. I have had seven transfers in four years. I do not know what to do. I have suffered heavily." Is there any wonder that with this state of things there should be deep discontent in the Department? The insinuation that resignations among Assistant Surgeons are due to deliberate intention of the officers formed while entering the Government service that it will pay them better to set themselves up as private practitioners after eight or nine years' hospital experience, is quite baseless and mischievous. At least in three cases we know of no such intention having entered the heads of the persons concerned. Dr. H. D. Pant resigned in utter disgust of the treatment accorded to him by the Department. So did Dr. P. K. Banerjee. So has Dr. Tandan. Indians in Government service do not deliberately chuck up their appointments. Had there been any such tendency, there would have been many resignations in the Medical Department. Many Vakil and Barrister Subordinate Judges and Munsifs would be better off, if they were to set up as legal practitioners, but we seldom hear of resignations from that line by way of protest. Why should the state of things in the Medical Department be exceptional? To say that the Head Assistants have nothing to do with these transfers is as great a fallacy as to say that the Lucknow and Mainpuri dispensaries are on the same footing. Colonel Murray may be a very good and conscientious man, but it requires a Colonel O'Brien or a Colonel Thomson to see that no injustice is done in his name.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th May, 1096.

The British Government's attitude of distrust towards the natives.

51. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th May, referring to the desire of some Indians to have the European army in India reduced, says that as long as the Government's distrust of Indians remains as it is at present, such a reduction is impossible. This distrust is illustrated by the denial to natives of the right to serve as volunteers, by the difference between the offensive weapons respectively supplied to European and Indian soldiers, by the exclusion of natives from higher military appointments in spite of their having for the last one hundred years fought against their own countrymen at the command of their employers, and by the disability of native judicial officers to try a case, however trifling, against a European.

A warning to wealthy Indians and to the Indian Government.

BHARAT JIWAN, 7th May, 1906.

52. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 7th May, draws the attention of wealthy Indians and of the Indian Government to the Courrieres mine disaster, the San Francisco earthquake, the eruption of Vesuvius, the Revolution in Russia and other similar natural and political convulsions in different parts of the world, and warns them to mend their ways lest some similar calamity overtake them.

A warning to Europeans.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th May, 1906.

53. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th May, referring to the Courrieres mine disaster, the eruption of Vesuvius and the San Francisco earthquake, says that God is angry with Europeans for their first obtaining control over other nations through fraud and subsequently encompassing their ruin. These disasters are Divine warnings which, if Europeans do not take heed, are likely to be followed by the punishment which was dealt out to the Greeks of old.

Delay in delivery of postal articles in Bareilly City.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th May, 1906.

54. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th May, complains of the inconvenience caused by the new arrangements for delivery of postal articles at Bareilly introduced from 1st April, and says that the delivery at about 11 or 12 A.M. of articles which formerly reached the hands of the public as early as 8 A.M., is causing much delay in the disposal of business. The editor suggests that the old delivery arrangements which were quite satisfactory should be restored.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

An intemperate lecture delivered by an Arya Samajist at Lahore.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th May, 1906.

55. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th May, stating that while its Hindu contemporaries are always ready to take offence whenever the Muhammadan Press tries to vindicate Islám against other religions, they do not think it worth their while to prevent the Árya Samáj papers from maliciously attacking Muhammadans, says that one Dharam Pal recently delivered a lecture at Lahore in which after naming some members of the Árya Samáj alleged to have lost their lives in the defence of their faith, he spoke in most offensive terms against the founders of several religions, and especially against the founder of Islám. The editor does not understand how the Government could allow such an intemperate lecture to be delivered in a public place, and fears that abusive language of this nature may excite popular feeling and lead to a breach of the peace.

The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th May, expressing similar views, asks Government to preserve complete notes of such lectures which are full of narratives of murder and blood-shed.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Need for metalling the Khaga road in the Fatehpur district.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th May, 1906.

56. The Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 7th May, suggests that with a view to public convenience, especially in the rainy season, the kachcha road going from Allahabad through Khaga in the direction of Naubasta should be metalled.

HINDOSTHAN,
11th May, 1906.

Need for the destruction of mosquitoes.

57. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 11th May, regrets to learn from the Central Provinces (Municipal) Administration Report that few municipalities there have taken steps for the destruction of mosquitoes, and advocates the necessity for destroying these pests through the agency of Municipal and District Boards with a view to the prevention of fever and the improvement of public health.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
12th May, 1906.

An alleged despatch of a political deputation from the Sultan of Turkey to the Amir of Kabul.

1. THE Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th May, says that it is rumoured that the Sultan of Turkey has sent a deputation to the Amir of Kabul, the object of which is (1) to impress the necessity on the latter's mind of all Muhammadan Powers being united in foreign political matters, so that other Powers may not be able to cause any injury or trouble to any of them, and (2) to, induce him to be prepared to take His Majesty's side, should the British Government harass him at any time. The editor regards the rumour as absurd. One Power is free to seek friendly relations with another, but nobody can conceive that the Sultan would allow a political deputation of such a nature to the Amir to be publicly known.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
12th May, 1906.

The Indian Musalmans, and the dispute between England and Turkey regarding the Egyptian frontier boundary question.

2. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 12th May, referring to the telegram which certain Muhammadans of Aligarh recently addressed to the Viceroy requesting His Excellency to dissuade the British Government from falling out with Turkey over the Egyptian frontier boundary affair, observes that while the message in question is not expected to influence the action of the British Government in any way in the matter, it is calculated to show in what light England is likely to be taken by her Muhammadan subjects in her political dealings with the Sultan of Turkey. The Sahífa (Bijnor), of the 12th May, contending that, whether the Sultan be rightfully the Khalífa of Musalmans or not, he is practically regarded as such by the followers of Islam all over the world, approves of the Aligarh telegram to the Viceroy, and suggests that the Musalmans in other parts of India should follow suit. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th May, doubting the representative character of the Muhammadans who sent the telegram to the Viceroy, says that Indian Musalmans have no right to interfere in the international affairs of England, and that the despatch of such messages to the British Government by them will simply lead the British authorities to distrust and look upon them as an easily excitable people, and it will thus prove injurious to them.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
12th May, 1906.

The Musalmans, and the dispute between England and Turkey regarding the Egyptian boundary question.

3. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th May, referring to the ultimatum issued by the British Government to Turkey in connection with the Egyptian boundary dispute, does not understand why of all European Powers England alone should continually be at loggerheads with Turkey. The Muhammadans all over the world have political relation with England on one hand, and are bound with religious ties to the Sultan of Turkey on the other, nevertheless they always desire the maintenance of cordial relations between the two Powers. The Indian Musalmans are especially anxious to see England devise some means of settling the matter amicably, and not go to war with the Sultan about it. A Muhammadan correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 14th May, also advises the British Government to peacefully settle the matter either by arbitration, or by mutual agreement with the Porte, especially in view of the regard the Musalmans in India and in other parts of the world have for the Sultan.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
13th May, 1906.

The Indian Musalmans, and the Anglo-Turkish crisis.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th May, says:—The telegram sent to the Viceroy by some Muhammadans of Aligarh requesting His Excellency to use his influence to put an end to the strained relations between the two Powers is a novel application. The rôle of the peacemaker is ever blessed, but in the case of the Aligarh Muhammadans there is also a feeling of divided allegiance, Muhammadan sentiment rightly clinging to the last great representative of Muhammadan power. Of course it is a matter of mere form, for the Viceroy of India counts for very little in European politics and Imperial issues. But if we can judge aright there is no need for feeling much anxiety for Turkey, ultimatum or no ultimatum. The rights of the case have yet to be decided, and the time has gone by when the Sick Man of Europe could be browbeaten by any Power. The very weakness of Turkey has been its ultimate source of strength. On land it need not be afraid to meet any Power ; on water of course Turkey is no match for England. But all the tall talk about sealing up the Dardanelles and threatening Constantinople must be taken with a very large pinch of salt, because the other Powers will not be looking on quietly while the Dardanelles is being sealed up. Imperial Anglo-Indian papers are talking very big about England not allowing any Power or combination of Powers to interfere with her, but it will not go very far. A combination of Powers is not dispersed as easily as the Barisal Provincial Conference, and in Europe England is not a very great Power. Even Russia, after she had been thrashed by Japan, took liberties with England to which no other Power would have submitted, and on the Continent of Europe England has hardly a voice. We do not think England and Turkey will come to blows, and it will be wise to refer the dispute to arbitration, though Ministers profess to be vehemently opposed to it.

Quite apart from the representation made by the Aligarh Muhammadans to the Viceroy, there can be no doubt that the ultimatum presented by the British Government to the Porte is causing the greatest anxiety and excitement among Indian Musalmans. The feeling is by no means confined to the educated Muhammadan community. The news has spread over all the bazars of India, and illiterate Muhammadans are found waiting at the houses of educated Muhammadans to learn the latest news. The intelligence of a peaceful solution of the crisis that has arisen would be received as a great relief by all Muhammadans in India. It is known everywhere that the Sultan of Turkey is held in the greatest respect and reverence not only as the representative of the last Muhammadan Power, but also as the spiritual leader of the Musalmans throughout the world. We cannot of course say whether the feelings of the Muhammadans of India will be taken into consideration by the Ministry in dealing with the Porte, but it will be a grave error if the Government in England is not informed of the existence of such a feeling and its significance. The Government of the Sultan has all along been friendly to the British Government and should be treated as a friend. The naval superiority of England alone does not justify the adoption of coercive measures or a minatory attitude. The course of events is being very closely and anxiously followed by the whole Muhammadan community, and they desire nothing more than that the difference between the two Governments should be amicably settled.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th May, 1906.

The Musalmans and the Anglo-Turkish dispute in Egypt.

5. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 16th May, referring to the telegram which the Muhammadans of Aligarh recently addressed to the Viceroy, praying for an amicable settlement of the Anglo-Turkish dispute regarding the Egyptian frontier boundary question, observes that the attitude adopted by the British Government towards the Sultan is calculated to cause dissatisfaction not only among the Indian Musalmans, but also among their co-religionists all over the world ; and expresses a hope that the message in question will be given the consideration due to its importance.

Ill-treatment of Indian coolies in South Africa.

6. Al Aziz (Agra), of the 14th May, states that Ghulam Ahmad, Secretary to the Muhammadan Young Men's Society in South Africa has sent out a pamphlet to India, in which he gives a most harrowing account of how Indian coolies are ill-treated, being sometimes even beaten to death with impunity, by their white masters in that country. It is a sheer pretension on the part of Europeans that they are averse to slavery. The condition of Indian coolies in South Africa is worse than that of regular slaves could be. They are made to work in severe winter with only a light shirt or dhoti on. They are put to the meanest work, having even to remove night soil. They are liable to be most severely beaten if they fail to satisfy their masters in any way whatever. The writer has heard that Government has recently given permission for the importation of several thousands of Indian coolies into South Africa, and he takes this opportunity to warn them as to what kind of treatment will be meted out to them by their masters.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th May, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the Allahabad High Court to Lucknow.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th May, says :—The need of amalgamating the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Lucknow, with the Allahabad High Court is urgent, but who has ever heard of the lesser containing the greater ? It is obvious that the two provinces cannot have two different High Courts ; it is also obvious that the only wise and economical way of meeting the situation is to expand the High Court of Allahabad. The additional cost of adding another wing and some offices to the High Court buildings would not be considerable : the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh would be raised to the status of Judges of the High Court and the thing would be done.

Economy cannot be a light consideration with the Government of these Provinces. The Government is in a state of confessed bankruptcy, and most important reforms cannot be undertaken for want of funds. Will the Local Government apply to the Government of India for funds to effect the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow and will that Government sanction a grant for such a purpose ? Before the Government of India comes to any decision it will have to consider the attitude taken up by Lord Curzon, who firmly and emphatically vetoed any such suggestion. What has happened so soon after the retirement of Lord Curzon, and sooner still after the public statement of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, to justify the revival of the project for the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow ?

Who wants the change ? Do the Judges of the High Court want the court to be removed to Lucknow ? We think the Local Government is perfectly aware of what would be the reply to this question. Does the "speech" read on behalf of an absent member at the last meeting of the local Legislative Council mean a public demand for such a change ? Seriously, that question needs no reply. We can only attribute such a proposal to the curious mood that has come over other administrations by which changes are made without cause and the people are driven to needless exasperation. Is it thought that there will be no excitement over the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow ? Is the Government anxious that the scenes in Bengal should be enacted in this Province, usually so free from excitement ?

What seems to us to be the worst feature of this proposal is the ill-feeling that it is calculated to produce between Allahabad and Lucknow. Ordinarily, there is no cause for any difference between the citizens of these two cities. But when such an uncalled-for and radical change is proposed, a change which will reduce Allahabad to ruin, a feeling of grave resentment will be engendered not only against the Government, but also against Lucknow. There has been no public movement, no public agitation in Lucknow for the removal of the High Court to that city. The citizens of Lucknow are no more responsible for the proposed change than are the people of Allahabad desirous of it. Yet the result will be disastrous so far as Allahabad is concerned. The mere report has a tendency to unhinge business and to excite alarm. A change of the nature proposed is without precedent, without justification, and without warrant. The cause for apprehension is that similar unreasonable measures are being carried out in other parts of the country, and what guarantee is there that the voice of reason and wisdom will prevail in these Provinces ? The intention of the Government should be ascertained definitely, if possible, and steps should be taken to inform the Government, in time, of the consequences of such a retrogressive measure. Instead of increasing the importance of Allahabad we should be thankful if we have left what we already have.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th May, 1906.

Revival of the question of the transfer of the Allahabad High Court to Lucknow.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th May, says :—The reported proposal about the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow has created the greatest excitement and the occasion loudly calls for a press communique.

* * * * * * * *

If the proposal has been revived it has been done behind the back of the Judges of the High Court, who have neither been consulted about, nor informed of the intentions of the Government. Since the Partition of Bengal the maturing of important projects in the dark has come into vogue.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
13th May, 1906.

Revival of the question of the transfer of the Allahabad High Court to Lucknow.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th May, says:—Two years ago, the Local Government proposed to found and establish a High Court Town on the other side of the Gumti, with court houses and residential houses for the Judges, and one or more Benches for Oudh. Of course the members of the Bar were to shift for themselves. Allahabad was to be reduced to the headquarters of a district and a University town. This modest scheme was calculated to cost about 56 lakhs of rupees.

This sweeping and startling proposal which involved a broad breach of faith with those who had helped in making Allahabad the seat of the Government and in founding a large civil station was never put before the public, and it was sent over the heads of the Judges of the High Court as if they were not in existence at all. In the eyes of the purring mother-cat alias the Local Government, the High Court is nothing but a blind, feeble, tottering, wee kitten, which is not sufficiently responsible to be consulted about its movements, and which has only to be caught up by the scruff of the neck and lifted gently—oh, ever so gently—and deposited wherever it may appear to the mother-cat to be safe and comfortable.

That little scheme about the 56 lakhs and the High Court Town springing up on the other side of the Gumti like Aladin's wounderful palace gang agley as Lord Curzon peremptorily vetoed it. It would have been strange indeed if it had received any other treatment. The Local Government has not got sufficient funds for establishing a Law College, though it is expected it would become self-supporting, but it thinks nothing of uprooting the High Court from Allahabad and transplanting it to Lucknow without the remotest need or justification.

Nothing daunted by the rebuff which met its proposal two years ago, the Local Government seems to have come up to the scratch again. As no information is ever available, it is only a matter of general belief; but that belief is so widespread and exists in such high quarters that nothing less than a public disclaimer by the Local Government will allay the public alarm and excitement, and the disclaimer is never likely to be made. We do not think that a formal scheme or proposal has yet been submitted to the Government of India by the Local Government, but the idea has been revived and may soon take a definite shape.

So far as can be ascertained, and we are all completely in the dark, the new idea is a more insidious one. It is not proposed to lay again before the Government of India a scheme like the one that was rejected by Lord Curzon. The Barons of Oudh will be encouraged to build houses in which offices can be located and also residential houses for the Judges. Ultimately, a scheme will be drawn up for the construction, by the Public Works Department, of a building for the High Court. So that new houses and high rents will be the order of the day in Lucknow, while Allahabad will become a wilderness and house rent will go down at a bound, and houses fetching a hundred rupees a month will not find tenants for twenty rupees a month. We confess we find it difficult to associate the present Lieutenant-Governor with such a scheme, but the one that was actually formulated two years ago was so extraordinary, so revolutionary that people may be excused if they believe in the resuscitation of an extinct danger.

To sum up. There never was any proposal for the transfer of the High Court until two years ago, when the present buildings needed expansion. The proposal, which was of a most sweeping character, was made absolutely without the knowledge of the Judges, who were vitally interested, and no reference was made to the Bar or the public. The Government of India rejected the first proposal in the most unmistakeable terms. Nevertheless, it has been again revived, again without the knowledge of the Judges or the public. This action on the part of the Local Government shows in what estimation the High Court and the Judges are held, and what sort of treatment is likely to be meted out to Allahabad, the capital city of the Province of Agra.

HINDOSTHAN,
14th May, 1906.

A meeting held by the Vakils' Association at Allahabad to oppose the proposal of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

10. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 14th May, says :—The Vakils' Association, Allahabad, convened a meeting on the evening of the 10th May to appoint a committee of a few leading residents (Anglo-Indians and Indians) in Allahabad, to counteract the proposal for the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th May, 1906.

A mixed case at Bangalore.

11. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th May, states that a mixed case, in which a native was charged with the offence of committing a rape on a European lady, was recently tried at Bangalore. The Magistrate insisted on trying the case in camera, his reason being to save the lady from the disgrace of a public trial, in spite of the protest of the counsel for the accused. The accused was convicted and sentenced to six months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500, though, according to the court, there was no evidence forthcoming to support the allegation of the complainant. How can Indians expect justice from the officers of the type of the Bangalore Magistrate, who so openly took the side of the European lady in the trial of the case? It is a pity that the Sessions Judge also took the same view of the case, and upheld the Magistrate's judgment.

CITIZEN,
14th May, 1906.

An assault upon a Parsi Honorary Magistrate by certain Military officers at Jubbulpore.

12. A Jubbulpore correspondent of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 14th May, says :—A most cowardly and brutal assault was committed upon our respectable fellow-citizen, Mr. Rustomjee, who is an Honorary Magistrate and Municipal Secretary, by three military officers on the 10th ultimo. The facts of the case as alleged are as follows :—Mr. Rustomjee with his sons had gone to the Howbag railway station to bring his daughters who were coming by 1 A. M. train, Bengal and Nagpur Railway. As they were returning home in three tongas viâ Sadar Bazar, they found three military officers standing on the road opposite the 33rd Punjabi mess. Repeated warnings were given to the officers to move away and to allow the tongas to pass, but they did not move. The first two tongas occupied by Mr. Rustomjee's daughters and sons somehow managed to drive past the officers, but the tonga occupied by Mr. Rustomjee could not pass, and so it stopped in front of the officers. The officers rushed towards the driver and assaulted him. Rustomjee at once got down and remonstrated with the officers at their unprovoked assault. The officers replied by blows. When his sons saw their father being severely assaulted they ran to his help. But they too were as roughly handled by the officers. In the meantime Captain Hughes of the 27th Light Infantry arrived at the scene; but instead of rescuing the Parsi gentlemen he seemed to help the officers in their assault upon the Parsis. Many more persons collected soon after; but none dared interfere. The gentlemen were then taken to the police outpost at Sadar Bazar by the officers and were locked up in a room by the military officers themselves, the Police Sub-Inspector having refused to keep them in custody. The officers then left the outpost and went home with the key of the door. The Sub-Inspector immediately reported the matter to the District Superintendent of Police who went at once and released the gentlemen. The next day Mr. Rustomjee reported the matter to the District Superintendent of Police through his counsel. The Police chalaned the three officers (Lieutenant Cunnyngham, Lieutenant Grey and Lieutenant MacCall) under sections 341, 342, of the Indian Penal Code. The case against the officers came up before the Deputy Commissioner on 17th ultimo. Mr. Wallach, Barrister-at-law of the Allahabad Bar, appeared for the accused. The case was adjourned as one of the accused stated his intention to apply to the High Court, Allahabad, for the transfer of the case. Regarding the assault committed by the officers Mr. Rustomjee and his sons have filed separate suits for damages, claiming Rs. 4,999 and Rs. 2,000 respectively against four officers—Lieutenant Cunnyngham, Lieutenant Grey, Lieutenant MacCall and Captain Hughes. Captain Hughes has been impleaded as he abetted the assault. Mr. Rustomjee has not filed a criminal complaint of assault against the officers. He has preferred the civil suit considering perhaps the uncertainty of criminal justice in cases where the accused are Europeans. The civil cases are proceeding.

Comments on the conviction and punishment of a Sádhu for causing the death of a boy on the occasion of the late Mágh Mela at Allahabad.

13. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 14th May, says:—Our readers will remember that at the last Mágh Mela, a Sádhu, Harku by name, caused the death of a little boy, knocking his head three or four times against a stone pillar. He was committed to Sessions on a charge of murder and sentenced to transportation for life under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. His appeal was heard on Thursday last by a bench composed of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Banerji and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Aikman. His defence was that the act was prompted by the inspiration of the goddess Shakti. The evidence of the medical expert, under whose supervision the prisoner had been for some time, established that he was subject to delusions and that this was brought on by his indulgence in bhang and charas. The accused admitted, however, that at the time of committing the assault, he knew that he was doing wrong but that it was at the prompting of Shakti. In view of this fact, their Lordships held that his case did not come within the purview of the chapter of exceptions in the Indian Penal Code and dismissed his appeal. We cannot help reflecting that with all the heinousness of the act, how different might have been the fate of the accused had he happened to be a European soldier.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
9th May, 1906.

A suggestion for providing a room on the premises of every Collector's Court for the private use of native magistrates, in the United Provinces.

14. A correspondent of the Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 9th May, in supporting the suggestion recently made by the editor for providing private rooms on the premises of the Collectors' courts in the United Provinces, to which native magistrates may retire for refreshment, &c. (vide article No. 13, page 215 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), urges that as the magistrates have to pass many hours every day in court, and have not unoften to cogitate intricate points of law affecting the property and life of their fellow creatures, it is very necessary that they should have some private room where they may take a few minutes' rest, or quietly considers some difficult point. The Government would therefore do well to provide at least one room on the premises of every Collector's court for the private use of native magistrates.

ANAND KADAMBINI,

Certain Municipal complaints at Mirzapur.

16. The Ánand Kádambini (Mirzapur), in its joint issue for March and April, says that the town at Mirzapur is in decay, that many houses there are in ruins and are generally full of filth and dirt. New drains are under construction in the town, so that filthy water from the drains of houses is collected in various places and is most objectionable. Sweepers carry night soil in open baskets from place to place. The Municipal Board would do well to see to these complaints.

BHARAT JIWAN,

Municipal water supply at Benares.

17. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 14th May, says that the complaint regarding the insufficiency of the supply of pipe-water is very general at Benares. The water is turned on in the evening at 5-30 P.M. and is stopped before 7 P.M. In the morning too the supply of water is very scanty. The residents of muhalla Nilkanth complain that they get water in a very thin stream from the taps in their houses. The Municipal authorities should see that water is supplied at a sufficient pressure and for a sufficient number of hours.

AGRA AKHBAR,
14th May, 1906.

Certain Municipal complaints at Agra.

18. The Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 14th May, complains that the pumps at Agra are closed early in the evening so that the people are put to much inconvenience in consequence, especially those living in muhalla Nai Basti where the pump put up has only a single ½ inch tap. Again, if the water pipe gets out of order in any place, it is not readily repaired. The articles which are not specified in the octroi schedule are not fairly taxed: special concessions are made by the octroi officials to certain traders in the matter of levying duty from them. People bringing goods to the octroi office at 3 P. M. and after for payment of duty on them are not attended to and sent back as being too late. This causes much hardship to business men, and the Municipal board had better extend the time for taking octroi up to 5 P. M.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
16th May, 1906.

Certain Municipal complaints at Agra.

19. The Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 16th May, stating that the Secretary to the local municipal board has recently ordered that the drains at Agra should be flushed with pipe water only once in four days and not every day as was done before, says that this order is calculated to let the drains in the narrow lanes and streets become filthy and bad smelling which must seriously affect the health of the general public, especially at this time when cholera has made its appearance in the city. Again, the pumps supply water for only five hours during the day, which certainly causes much inconvenience to the public, especially during the present hot weather. Sufficient water could not also be had to put out the several fires which lately broke out in the town. It is said that the inadequacy of the supply of pipe water is due to the Municipal Secretary's desire to effect a saving in the consumption of coal, and thereby secure an increase in his pay as reward for the economy effected. The editor appeals to His Honour Sir James Digges LaTouche to have the above complaints removed promptly.

Comments on the Government's proposal to start public schools for girls in India.

20. The Gauhar-i-Shahwár (Lucknow), for May, observes that while the British Government committed a serious mistake in the past in throwing open the doors of English education to all classes of the people in this country which has led to the neglect and consequent destruction of the various native arts and industries and produces a host of educated men, from year to year, all of whom cannot be provided with Government employment, it now contemplates committing again a similar mistake in establishing public schools for Indian girls also, which instead of doing any good to the country will simply swell the number of candidates for employment in the Railway, Telegraph and other public departments. Besides, there are but a few so-called enlightened Indians who would allow their girls to attend a public school; the rest of the Indian community, who are old-fashioned people, being quite averse to it.

21. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 13th May, referring to the proposed establishment of a school for the blind at Lahore, expresses a hope that the Government and the people of the United Provinces will do well to consider the expediency of establishing a similar institution at some suitable place in these provinces.

MOHINI,
11th May, 1906.

Need for a practical display of patriotism on the part of Indians.

24. A correspondent of the Mohini (Kanauj), of the 11th May, observing that there can hardly be a human being who does not naturally feel love for the land of his birth, says that the people of a country should do their utmost to improve the condition of their fellow-countrymen by all means in their power, and should practically sympathize with them in their distress. The need for the display of such fellow-feeling is especially marked in a country like India where a very considerable number of the masses fail to get even a good meal every day and where the boys are turned out of schools, whipped and relegated to jail for raising their national cry of Bande Mátaram, or taking a pledge to use only home-made articles. It is a great pity indeed that Englishmen of the present day should forget the strong measures their ancestors adopted in the past to secure political liberty, and should see fit to ill-treat the Indians in their peaceful endeavours to better their abject condition!

The Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller accused of inciting Muhammadans against Hindus in Eastern Bengal.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th May, says:—Though nobody can charge Sir Bampfylde Fuller with deliberately setting Hindus and Muhammadans to cut each other's throats and to create lawlessness in his province, it is clear that he and his subordinates have created the impression that the Muhammadans are to be favoured at the cost of the Hindus. So long as favour was shown in the shape of preference to Government appointments and honorary distinctions there was not much to be said. Hindus in East Bengal must be prepared to make these sacrifices. But when the subordinates go to incite the hatred of one class against the other, the result becomes serious. Fancy what must be the state of things in East Bengal, when at Kishorganj, we are told, Mr. Stapelton, Inspector of Schools, asks the students on pain of fine to write five hundred times "it was rude and foolish waste of time to utter the cry of Bande Mátaram," and, when the students preferred to pay a fine rather than write such foolish sentences on their slates, the fine was directed to be paid to the Anjuman Islamia of Mymensingh. If from incidents like these the Muhammadan mob comes to believe that the Sirkar desires to crush the Hindus, there need be no wonder. Sir Bampfylde Fuller asks the Muhammadan associations to send members to the Legislative Council, an unheard of thing in any part of India. His subordinates make Hindus support these associations with funds. What wonder if the Maulvis, paid by these funds or not, go in the interior and preach a regular "Jehad" against Hindus! Respectable Muhammadans cannot control the mob. They cannot feel interested in seeing lawlessness in the country, but the mob which has nothing to lose can be incited in no time. We know certain bitter anti-Hindu papers had been asking the Maulvis in Northern India to form themselves into a deputation and proceed to Bengal. Who knows how many taking advantage of the strained relations have themselves gone for their own purposes? The following telegram from Mymensingh which has appeared in the Calcutta papers will be read with alarm.

"Mymensingh, May 9.

A number of interested Maulvis misconceiving that the Government is at their back have been inciting the Muhammadans to rise against the Hindus. Thousands of Muhammadans have thus been incited near Nandial and Iswarganj. Gangs looted Harua bazar and besieged Kashi Talukdar's house. The police interfering at Pubail, a fight ensued in which the police were worsted. An Inspector and a Sub-Inspector were wounded when the Muhammadans dispersed. Thousands of Muhammadans assembled on Monday last and proclaimed the looting of the Dhitpur Talukdar's houses and bazars. The police, being wired for from Sadar appeared late with guns. The Muhammadans dispersed after looting two bazars. They proclaim looting villages of Charpara and Kumarail to-morrow. Hundreds with lathis are parading the village paths. The Assistant Superintendent has left for the locality. Great consternation prevails."

This lawlessness means ruin to both the Hindus and Muhammadans; it increases the responsibilities of the rulers of the Province who will find it difficult to control the infuriated mob.

Prosecution of school boys for their Swadeshi zeal in Bengal,

28. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th May, referring to the prosecution of school boys for their Swadeshi zeal in Bengal, says:—The Code of Criminal Procedure provides that having regard to youth, character and antecedents first offenders may be released "on probation of good conduct." It is seldom that boys of the respectable class commit criminal offences in this country. If, in their zeal for the Swadeshi, they are guilty of indiscretion, which may technically be regarded as a transgression of the law, the proper mode of dealing with them would be to have recourse to other methods prescribed; that is, in petty cases it will be sufficient to discharge them with due admonition, or in more serious ones to make them over to parents or guardians for being of good behaviour. We are afraid that the "Fullerised" officers are little likely to pay any attention to this benevolent measure, since they are under orders to hammer the people in order to rid them of the Swadeshism that has got a firm grip of them. The unprovoked assaults on delegates and young men at Barisal have proved beyond doubt that the executive officers in the new Province have lost the balance of their mind.

29. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th May, says:—At the public meeting lately held at Karachi Rs. 25 and odd were actually paid on the spot as a contribution towards the fine imposed on Babu Surendra Nath Banerji. Karachi has thus given points to all other public meetings of a similar nature. The money that may be raised may not be needed for the fine, but all India contributing for a common object must be a most striking object-lesson. It would be a truly national fund. There are other defence funds and associations, Why not seize this opportunity to start an Indian Defence Fund?

BHARAT JIWAN,
14th May, 1906.

Cry of Bande Mátaram and the British rulers.

30. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), the 14th May, observing that Bande Mátaram simply means "hail! mother land," regrets that such a simple phrase, which is only an innocent expression of love for one's native land, should be regarded by Government as a cry calculated to create disaffection against it in the minds of the people. The fact of the matter is that the British authorities have, without any good reason whatever, come to take offence at the cry, and the result is that the people use it the more persistently according as more strenuous efforts are made by Government to suppress it. The editor suggests that if the authorities continue to resent the shouting of Bande Mátaram, the people might take to using it even as the heading of their correspondence, or as the medium for exchange of compliments among them.

CITIZEN,
14th May, 1906,

The Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller and the students in Eastern Bengal.

31. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 14th May, says:—Not content with the heap of insult and injury poured on the devoted heads of our leaders in Bengal, the modern Shaista Khan of Dacca has proceeded once again to victimise the poor students. In a letter addressed by his Secretary, Mr. Lyon, to the Registrar of the Calcutta University, Sir B. Fuller has made several cruel and undignified attacks on the unhappy boys of two high schools in Eastern Bengal, We can only pity the man who has no alternative but to draw his venal quill and to say or unsay as his master may require him to do. But we feel nothing can excuse or expiate the injury the head of an administration does when as punishment for offences, real or imaginary, committed by schoolboys, he deliberately recommends the removal of the schools to which they belong from the list of affiliated institutions. We wonder if the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Holmwood knew of the egregious error committed by Sir B. Fuller in so addressing the letter when he observed the other day "What is all this? It seems absurd to deal with boys in this way. Boys everywhere do things of this kind, but no one thinks of prosecuting them. Schoolboys will be schoolboys all over the world." Indeed, the High Court Judges have grown sick of the proceedings of the authorities in Eastern Bengal, and one of them went so far as to put what was in effect the question "When will this sort of things cease?" Mr. John Morley, however, is a true liberal and has an inexhaustible stock of toleration in him. According to Reuter's message, he discovers the acts of Sir B. Fuller, which he has been closely watching, to be imbued so much with grace divine that they bring to their sweetness no satiety, and he sees at present no reason to discuss them.

HINDUSTANI,
16th May, 1906.

The late events at Barisal.

32. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 16th May, commenting on the official report on the late events relating to the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath, &c., at Barisal, strongly condemns the action of the local authorities in assaulting the delegates to the Bengal Provincial Conference, and in dispersing it by force; and asks why the cry of Bande Mátaram in the public streets in that town was considered as likely to lead to a breach of the peace, it having produced no such result elsewhere.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th May, 1906.

Withdrawal of the prohibitory order against the shouting of Bande Mátaram in the public streets by the Government of Eastern Bengal.

33. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 19th May, is glad to notice that the Government of Eastern Bengal has, after all, seeing the forbearance and uniform peaceful conduct of Bengali leaders even after the late incident at Barisal, thought fit to cancel, with certain reservations, its previous orders prohibiting the shouting of Bande Mátaram in the public streets. There is nothing in the cry which can possibly give offence to the Musalmans of Eastern Bengal, as the Local Government would lead one to suppose it would, by the tone of its recent order. Both the communities have so far borne an equally respectable attitude towards the sacred cry and have united in shouting it in Calcutta and at other places.

GAUHAR-I-SHAHWAR,
May, 1906.

A suggestion to appoint educated Musalmans of the United Provinces and Behar to Government posts in Eastern Bengal.

34. The Gauhar-i-Shahwár (Lucknow), for May, says that, as the Local Government does not find educated Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal to fill up Government posts in that province, Sir Bampfylde Fuller had better import Muhammadans from Behar and the United Provinces for the purpose. There are many educated and competent Musalman youths in the United Provinces who would gladly accept Government employment in the new province.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
9th May, 1906.

Government officers going out on tour during winter.

35. A correspondent of the Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 9th May, says that the complaints which are generally made regarding the inconveniences to which suitors, &c. are alleged to be put in having to attend a touring officer's camp for the trial of their cases, are to a considerable extent exaggerations, and that the advantages attending the disposal of a suit relating to property on the spot are altogether ignored. Similarly the trouble caused to villagers in the supplying of provisions to officers on tour need not be much, if the rules regulating the supply laid down by Government are duly observed. Let education spread, and all such complaints will disappear.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th May, 1906.

Outbreak of a fire at Cawnpore.

36. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th May, referring to the outbreak of a fire in Generalganj at Cawnpore on the 2nd idem, says:—"Fires of the magnitude of the one which broke out on the 2nd instant in Generalganj, Cawnpore, are, fortunately for that city, of rare occurrence. Cawnpore, however go-ahead it may be in most matters, is woefully behind the times in the matter of fire service. This has been grimly illustrated in Wednesday's fire, which resulted in the loss of at least one human life and of over a lakh of rupees worth of property.

* * * * * * * * *

One unfortunate man was caught by the flame in a room in the corner of the courtyard and burned to death and three others are reported as having been injured. A couple of cows, too, were almost cut off when a mahajan offered a reward of five hundred rupees for their rescue. A native rushed into the room where the poor beasts were and succeeded in releasing one which was tied by a rope, which he cut through. The other was fastened by an iron chain and had to be abandoned. The police were in the vicinity some little time after the discovery of the fire, but do not seem to have earned the gratitude of the sufferers by their zealous aid; in fact it was more than noticeable that the assistance rendered by them was of the negative quality until the appearance on the spot about 5 P.M. of the Collector, the Joint Magistrate, the Municipal Secretary and the Officiating Superintendent of Police.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th May, 1906.

A protest against the appointment of men of low social position to Government responsible posts in India.

37. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 15th May, states that while the former rulers of India, and even the British Government in its earlier days appointed only men of good social position to important and responsible public posts, the old order of things is now completely changed, so that all sorts of low class men readily find their way to high administrative and judicial posts through the doors of competitive examinations, and the result is that serious miscarriages of justice take place and dissatisfaction is caused among the people in other ways.

OUDH AKHBAR,
16th May, 1906.

A protest against the recruitment of officers for the Indian Police and Forest Departments in England.

38. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 16th May, stating that the Secretary of State for India has made an announcement to appoint 44 officers for the Indian Police and Forest Departments by the results of a competitive examination to be held in June next, regrets that all these appointments should be made in England and that the Indians should be thereby excluded from them to all intents and purposes. Some people think that India is prosperous under British rule; but it requires no political economy to convince a man that the richest country on the face of the earth must soon be pauperised if a constant drain of wealth is going on as in India in the shape of salaries of foreign officers.

HINDUSTANI,
16th May, 1906.

Question of the introduction of the Punjab Land Alienation Act into the United Provinces.

39. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 16th May, publishes a long article, from a correspondent, in which he, when discussing the question of the introduction of the Punjab Land Alienation Act into the United Provinces regarding which the Local Government is said to have invited opinions from the landowning classes, says that the Act in question has not proved an unmixed blessing in the Punjab. It no doubt prevents cultivable land from passing into the hands of non-agricultural classes, but it has, at the same time, considerably lowered the value of such land, by reducing the number of its possible purchasers. Again, as the assessments of land revenue and rent are heavy, the agricultural classes cannot but borrow money from mahajans to make both ends meet, and the latter are free to charge what rates of interest they please on the money they advance to agriculturists in their need. Such being the case, the agriculturists must generally be encumbered with debts, and have miserable prospects. The Government can however help the agriculturists in this matter by establishing agricultural banks extensively, where cultivators and landholders may get loans at rates lower than that charged by a money-lender. Government might also fix the maximum rate of interest which a money-lender may charge to an agriculturist, prohibiting at the same time the charging of compound interest in all cases. But the restrictions about the transfer of land had better be removed, everybody being left free to transfer his land to whom he pleases. This will raise the value of land, and a landowner will find ready purchasers for his property. No landowner should however be allowed in any case to transfer more than one-fourth of his property during his lifetime, so that, while he may be able to get over his financial embarrassment by the sale of a portion of his property, he may not become an altogether landless man. The period of mortgages without possession should be reduced from 60 to 12 years, so that the mortgagor may have a chance of redeeming his property by payment of the principal and interest due at the end of the shorter period, whereas the accumulated interest of the longer period is generally found to be beyond the means of the mortgagor to pay, and he, as a rule, has to part with his property in the end. As regards conditional sale, it is a most objectionable kind of transfer and should be abolished altogether. If these modifications be made in the law, the Land Alienation Act will, the writer believes, prove of real benefit to the agriculturist.

VI.—Railway.

HINDOSTHAN,
13th May, 1906.

Need for arrangements being made for adding to the comforts of passengers on Indian railways.

40. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 13th May, refers to the various improvements that have been made in carriages for adding to the comfort and convenience of travellers on the American railways, as pointed out by Mr. Priestley who had lately been deputed by the Indian Government to report on those railways, and it hopes that arrangements will now soon be made in India also to ensure greater comfort to third class passengers.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th May, 1906.

An alleged assault by a European Military officer on a booking clerk at the Bareilly junction station.

41. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th May, complains that on the 10th idem on the arrival of 8-15 P. M. mail train at the Bareilly junction, a European military officer who was going to travel by that train struck the local booking clerk so heavily on the face as to cause him to spit blood. The clerk reported the assault to the Station Master who remonstrated with the offender. The latter not only boldly acknowledged the deed, but also freely abused the clerk for having made the complaint to the Station Master, and threatened to give him a further beating on his return journey. The Traffic Superintendent ought certainly to make a thorough enquiry into the affair, and bring the offender to book, who is said to have similarly assaulted another Indian clerk on a previous occasion.

AL BASHIR,
8th May, 1906.

Al Bashir's ridicule of the principle of niyog as advocated by the Arya Samaj.

42. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 8th May, says that one Abdul Ghafur alias Dharmpal, a new convert to Arya Samaj, recently delivered a lecture at Lahore, in which he stated that he had received letters from hundreds of Musalmans and Christians in which they expressed their willingness to enter the Arya Samaj, provided that the members of the latter society admitted them into their caste and gave their daughters in marriage to them. Dharmpal admitted the reasonableness of the demand of would-be Arya Samajists ; and Al Bashir, commenting upon the same, mockingly asks Dharmpal if he has not left the Muhammadan religion to secure a beautiful girl of some Arya Samajist in marriage, and tauntingly tells him that so long as the principle of niyog (according to which a childless widow can have a legitimate issue by a man without marrying him) is advocated by the Arya Samajists, there is no need for a convert to marry an Arya girl, and bear her burden, but that a rule should simply be laid down that in future Arya widows desiring to enter into a niyog connection will be required to do so with none but new converts to the Samaj. This rule will, the editor hopes, bring thousands of debauched Musalmans into the camp of the Samaj.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
16th May, 1906.

A complaint against the behaviour of certain Musalman zealots who have newly arrived at Agra.

43. A local correspondent of the Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 16th May, complains that a number of bigoted Muhammadans, who have recently arrived at Agra, forcibly require every Musalman they meet to live strictly according to their religion. They clip one's moustaches if these happen to be too long, cut the hair of one's head, if the latter is found to wear it in the English fashion, drag one to the nearest mosque if it is time to say prayers, and so on. This conduct of the religious zealots in question has natually given rise to general dissatisfaction among the Musalman community at Agra, and the local authorities would do well to order them to leave the city, as they were required to do by the authorities of other towns they have visited before.

MUFID-I-AM,
20th May, 1906.

The Indian Musalman and the Anglo-Turkish crisis.

1. THE Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 20th May, highly approves of the action of those Aligarh Muhammadans who sent a telegram to the Viceroy protesting against the attitude of the British Government towards Turkey, in respect to the Turco-Egyptian frontier dispute, but regrets that the Aligarh College, which takes upon itself to be the mouthpiece of the Musalman community in India, should not have taken the initiative in the matter, and suggests that the Musalmans of every other large city in the country should despatch similar telegrams to the Viceroy, as it is the duty of every Musalman to support the Turkish Government.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th May, 1906.

The Indian Musalmans and the Anglo-Turkish dispute regarding the Egyptian frontier boundary.

2. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 20th May, is glad to notice that England and Turkey have agreed to settle their Egyptian frontier dispute through a Commission to be appointed for the purpose. If the dispute in question had led to an Anglo-Turkish war, it would certainly have caused much dissatisfaction among the Indian Musalmans who do not wish to see any serious friction arising between the two Powers. But every Indian Musalman knows his duty to the British Government, and he would not be likely to do anything against the latter in the event of war, so that it was weak-minded of the trustees of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh to inform the Government that their college had nothing to do with the Muhammadan meeting held in that town, which had wired to the Viceroy requesting him to induce the British Government not to fall out with the Sultan of Turkey over the Egyptian affair, in view of the pain it would cause to the Muhammadan community.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 23rd May, thanks God that the impending war between England and Turkey has been warded off by the latter complying with the immediate demand of the former. Turkey has, however, suffered in the eyes of the world a serious loss of prestige as suzerain of Egypt in the present dispute.

Al-Azíz (Agra), of the 21st May, expresses satisfaction at the agreement the parties have come to in the matter.

AGRA AKHBAR,
21st May, 1906.

An appeal to Musalmans to keep themselves aloof from all kind of political agitations.

3. A Musalman correspondent of the Agra Akhbár of the 21st May, referring to the present state of unrest and disquiet in Bengal and elsewhere, and observing that the Bengali leaders have now begun to openly oppose the Government and to use in their speeches and writings such expressions against it as are not only libellous but border on sedition, warns his co-religionists to maintain their attitude of strict aloofness from all political agitations and from the present action of the Bengalis against the authorities, lest they should have to bear the brunt of Government wrath along with others, as they did in the Mutiny of 1857.

NASIM-I-AGRA
11th May 1906.

A suggestion that Government should pay travelling expenses to under-trial prisoners who are acquitted after having been brought for trial from a distance.

4. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 11th May, says that as all convict prisoners in Indian jails are on their release sent to their homes by Government at the public expense, the same concession ought to be extended to under trial prisoners who have been brought to a court for trial from a distance and have been acquitted. Such men have at present either to beg or steal to provide themselves with money to enable them to return home. This is very unsatisfactory and demoralizing. Lately a British soldier, named Emerson, who was called from England for trial in Madras, was, on his acquittal, not only paid his passage money home, but also a sum of Rs. 50 for contingent expenses; and there is no reason why an Indian under-trial prisoner should not be treated in the same generous way in similar circumstances.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th May, 1906.

Treatment of under-trial prisoners.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th May, says:—The Nizámat Adálat of 1805 seemed to have been more keen about the treatment of under-trial prisoners than the High Court of 1905. The Registrar of that court in communicating the orders of the Adálat wrote to the courts of circuit, under date January 4, 1805, that it was the evident intention of the regulations that no prisoner, before he is brought to trial, should suffer more corporal restraint or personal ignominy than may be unavoidable for his safe custody and appearance at the time of the trial, that the courts of circuit were required to be careful in observing this principle; and consequently they were not to confine in fetters any person for trial before the court of circuit who may be charged with a bailable offence and committed to prison from inability to find bail, or who, though not admitted to bail, may not have been charged with a heinous offence such as from the nature and circumstance of the case, considered with the prisoner's condition of life, may appear to render the use of irons indispensably requisite for his secure custody.

AL AZIZ,
21st May, 1906.

Hard lot of prisoners in Indian jails.

6. Al Aziz (Agra), of the 21st May, lamenting the hard lot of prisoners in India, as contrasted with the far better treatment accorded to their confreres in America and other civilized countries, regrets that the Committee, which was formed at Lucknow some years ago to help released prisoners and save them from becoming habitual offenders, proved a failure owing to the apathy of the general public in the matter.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th May, 1906.

The question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

7. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th May, referring to the question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, says that, as Lucknow occupies a more central position and enjoys a more salubrious climate than any other place in the United Provinces, the major portion of the inhabitants of these Provinces are sure to be in favour of the transfer of the High Court to the latter town. Government should therefore, the editor urges, carry out the long deferred measure, paying no heed to the unreasonable protest of the Allahabad people against it.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL,
16th May, 1906.

Revival of the proposal to transfer the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

8. The Allahabad Law Journal (Allahabad), of the 16th May, referring to the revival of the proposal to transfer the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, says:—What are the grounds for the proposal that some people seem to have so much at heart? The two Courts should be amalgamated. Granted, but why should not the amalgamation be effected at Allahabad? Lucknow is a beautiful and historic city with its ruins and mausoleums and parks, with its romantic associations of oriental pomp and its yet unfaded memories of Nawábi pleasance. It is patronised by the taluqdars of Oudh, it has a large cantonment,—and also, let us admit, a large Eurasian population. It is true the society in Allahabad may not be so bright, but who can deny that it has had a historic past too,—a more ancient one, in fact,—and that its situation at the confluence of two of the mightiest streams in this part of the world, and guarded by an exceptionally strong fort built in Emperor Akbar's time, is of the best? Its climate in point of general dryness and healthiness yields to that of no other city in the United Provinces and is certainly much superior to that of Lucknow: it has a beautiful civil station, and it is now connected by a network of railways with the rest of the province. It has to be noted that the N.-W. P. High Court being principally an appellate court, it is not necessary that an absolutely central spot should be found for its location, but when we remember that it exercises some jurisdiction not only over Kumaun and Rajputana, but also over a portion of the Central Provinces, Central India and Ajmere, it becomes abundantly plain that it is at present as centrally located as it well could be. It has been suggested that a commercial court should be established in Lucknow. By this we believe it is meant that there should be a separate court for the determination of causes in which tradesmen generally, or members of bodies like the Chamber of Commerce specially, are interested in their personal capacity. For in these provinces commercial causes in the true sense of the term, that is, causes which involve questions, say, of the law merchant, are fewer even than the proverbial angel's visits. Now we do not see that there is any need for a separate court presided over by a special Judge for the determination of such causes, and, even if there were, we are not satisfied that proper arrangements for their determination could not be made at Allahabad.

We mean no disparagement to the Judicial Commissioner's Court or its bar, but we think that as to the tone of the Allahabad bar or the efficiency of the Allahabad court there is not much room for difference of opinion, and we do not see why the general law of nature should not apply and the larger body be left to attract and absorb the smaller.

It is clear that the removal of the High Court from Allahabad will mean the ruin of this station. Agra was ruined in this way 38 years ago, and when it is recollected that the civil station of Allahabad was built upon an assurance then given by the local authorities that there would be no further change, it may be seriously doubted whether the Provincial Government is now entitled to bring forward this "change to Lucknow" scheme. The carrying out of the scheme, it is further understood, will involve an expenditure of 80 lakhs of rupees. Is it right that the Indian tax-payer in these days of famine and pestilence should be called upon to find this enormous sum of money for the gratification of the whim or hobby of one or more officers in power? The people do not want the change, the administration of justice will in no way be benefited by it, and the Government of India deliberately vetoed it only a short while ago. It has not been yet suggested that the seat of Government or the University should be removed from Allahabad to Lucknow. For the re-opening of a settled, and rightly settled question, therefore, we can see absolutely no justification. The zeal and perseverance, with which the attempt to effect such a re-opening is being supported on the part of some persons, are surely worthy of a better cause, and we can only express our regret that there should be so much misdirected energy in the world.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th May, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th May, referring to the revival of the question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, says :—With regard to the absolute need of publicity the feeling at Allahabad and Lucknow is happily the same. If there is any proposal for transfer, why is it not put before the public?

* * * * * * * *

An appeal to Government to publish the papers will be vain, because the Local Government has not gone about the matter in an open and straightforward fashion. But is there no means of attempting to uplift the veil of mystery that overhangs this important question in which the public is vitally interested? Let the agitators and counter-agitators cogitate and ponder over the matter and find some way, if possible, for publicity is desirable in the interests of all.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th May, 1906.

Press communique regarding the question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th May, says :—On the 10th of this month we made a suggestion that the great uncertainty and uneasiness prevailing in consequence of the rumour that the High Court of Allahabad would be transferred to Lucknow might be set at rest by a press communique issued by the Local Government stating the facts. On the 16th the Local Government issued a communication, which has been published in all local papers on the subject. We desire in the first place to withdraw and to express regret for the statement we made that the Local Government was keeping the facts from the public. Next we shall have not the presumption to say that the communique has been issued at our suggestion, neither do we believe the omission to send us a copy is intentional.

* * * * * * *

If the future location of the enlarged single High Court is in doubt, the future location of the University should be also in doubt. The Judicial Commissioner's Court at Lucknow is to be raised to a High Court, and must naturally be merged with the Allahabad High Court.

OUDH AKHBAR,
24th May, 1906.

The question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

11. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 24th May, referring to the press communique issued by the Local Government regarding the question of transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, says that as it is desirable to have only one High Court of Judicature for the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, and as the question of its location is to be finally settled, the authorities cannot find a more suitable place for the location of such a court than Lucknow, which, besides occupying a central position and enjoying a more salubrious climate, is also one of the important historical and picturesque towns in the country. Again, there are vast outlying plains in Lucknow, which will afford ample accommodation for construction of the court and other buildings, while Allahabad, being already overcrowded, can hardly admit of any large new building being constructed there. Besides, Lucknow is already the headquarters of the Medical, Jail, Post-office and Land Records Departments, and it should therefore be advantageously made the seat of the High Court also. On the other hand, the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad, far from causing any injury, will prove rather a blessing to it, inasmuch as it will afford the University ample room for its development and expansion and enable the local authorities, no more trammelled by overcrowding, to improve its sanitation and thereby make it a more healthy place for pilgrims who visit it from all parts of the country than it is at present.

The same paper in its issue of the next day, the 25th May, recapitulating its arguments in favour of the location of the High Court at Lucknow, adds that it is only the Allahabad vakils who from interested motives are opposed to the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow; otherwise the editor believes that the great majority of the people will be glad to have the one High Court of Judicature for the United Provinces located at Lucknow, and not at Allahabad.

ADVOCATE,

A criminal suit against the tahsildar of Bansi, district Basti.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th May, says:—One Nur-ul-Haq of Basti has brought a criminal suit against Munshi Abdul Razzáq, tahsildar of Bansi, district Basti, on a rather curious charge, which was that the complainant's cousin and the accused's son had a quarrel when playing together. The tahsildar is said to have seized the former, to have made him sit in the sun and to have had him shoe beaten by his peon from the effects of which he became senseless, and that after this he abused the complainant and his female relations.

ARYA MITRA,

Murder of Indians by Europeans.

13. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th May, observing that as Europeans are either not punished at all or punished only nominally for murdering natives, they have not the least scruple about killing a native. A British soldier lately shot a sodawater seller in his abdomen at the toll-bar near Simla, because the latter asked him for payment of the price of the sodawater he had taken from him. The poor sodawater seller now lies in a precarious state in hospital. Similarly another British soldier shot dead a sweeper's boy last week in Jullundur cantonment.

The Kotwál and hawkers at Moradabad.

14. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st May, complains that the Kotwál of Moradabad has for some time past been arresting hawkers found selling their articles in the public streets, which has caused much dissatisfaction among the people. The local authorities should see to the matter.

ADVOCATE,
24th May, 1906.

A daring dakaiti at a village in the Bijnor district.

15. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th May, says:—A daring dakaiti was committed in a house in a village some miles from Bijnor on or about the 23rd April. The robbers were armed. They somehow entered the house in the early part of the night and when all was quiet they began to beat the occupants. When the alarm was given the villagers assembled and surrounded the house. On this the dakaits fired, and several persons were wounded. The villagers were frightened, as they had no arms, and desisted from offering resistance to the dakaits so that the latter were able to obtain all the property by torturing the owner of the house and to carry away without opposition nearly thirteen thousand rupees worth of cash and ornaments. The police are making inquiries, but up to now no clue has been found.

ADVOCATE,
24th May, 1906.

A case of Sati in the Bijnor district.

16. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th May, says :— A Bania, aged over 50 years, was suffering from bubonic plague for some days. When he lost all hopes of recovery, he informed his wife, who was nearly 23 years old, of his imminent death. The woman, on hearing these sad words, made no reply. Then though she had fasted the previous day, she took no food, and engaged herself in dressing carefully. After this she secretly stocked some fuel on the roof of her house and sprinkled oil over it. In the night she sat on the pyre and set fire to it without being seen by any one. When the fire rose, other persons ran to the roof but too late as life was extinct. Next morning after the usual police enquiry was made she was again burnt on the burning-ground. She was a woman of the strict Hindu type. Her husband also died some days after her death.

Need for lighting a certain public road at Benares.

18. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 21st May, complains that as no municipal light is put up on the road leading from Sonárpura to the Bhelupur police station at Benares there is great danger of pedestrians being run over by ekkas, or of the latter running against one another, especially on Tuesdays when the road is much used by people going that way to visit the temple of Durgaji. On Tuesday last a collision actually took place between two ekkas on the road at night on account of the darkness. The Municipal Board would do well to arrange for properly lighting this road.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th May, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement and its connection with the Partition of Bengal.

19. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th May, says that the Swadeshi movement, if rightly conducted and persevered in, is no doubt calculated to promote the well-being of India, but that there can be no denying the fact that the Bengalis have set it on foot in their resentment against the Partition of Bengal, and not from any really patriotic motives. For it is absurd for the Bengalis to reject English goods, while they have no objection to using American, Japanese and even German articles.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th May, 1906.

An Englishman on the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath at Barisal.

20. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th May, says that referring to the recent arrest and fine of Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji, and its effect upon orthodox Hindu opinion and sentiment, an Englishman, long resident in Calcutta, writes :—" Mr. Banerji is a Brahmin of the highest caste, a past President of the National Congress, an orator and a statesman, a leading journalist, whose unpardonable fault in official eyes is his fearless denunciation and exposure of all acts of the administration which, in his judgment, are detrimental to the welfare and happiness of the people.

As a Brahmin he enjoys, also, a religious and social eminence among his countrymen which has no counterpart in European countries. The arrest and fine of such a man is a public outrage, and is calculated to produce much the same effect on the public mind in Bengal as would be produced in Anglican religious circles in this country were the Archbishop of Canterbury to be brought up before a Metropolitan Police magistrate on a charge of street brawling and to be fined, with the alternative of being sent to jail"

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th May, 1906.

The late Barisal affairs.

21. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th May, says:—Let the situation be surveyed calmly. Let the talk about sedition and disloyalty cease, and let us speak out frankly. Who can possibly doubt that if things go on as they are doing in East Bengal, if other Local Governments follow the brilliant example of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, sedition and disloyalty must be the result? As long as the constitutional character of the Government remains unchanged, there need not be any apprehension of disloyalty and sedition, but no one can for a moment suggest that the Government may establish an era of misrule without the danger of a popular rising.

* * * * * * * *

In East Bengal meetings are being held everywhere where Bande Mátaram is being shouted every day. A local Anglo-Indian paper of Allahabad said that the words themselves may be innocent, but everything depends upon the spirit in which they are uttered. Let it be conceded at once that the words are uttered in a most truculent spirit. How are they to be put down?

* * * * * * * *

One of the most common accusations against the educated classes of India is that they are not in touch with the mass of the population. True, but has any one taken the trouble of inquiring why these classes are out of touch with the people? Simply because they have tried all these years to be in touch with the Government. The Government is not in touch with the people and those who strive to keep in touch with the Government are out of touch with the people. Even those who criticise the Government strive to keep in touch with it. Otherwise, will there be any difficulty for the educated classes to keep in touch with the mass of the people?

* * * * * * * *

How were Swadeshi vows taken and the boycott of foreign goods enforced in village and hamlet if the educated classes were out of touch with the mass of the population.

* * * * * * * *

If Sir Bampfylde Fuller cannot put down the shouting of Bande Mátaram, he will be defeated, and he is even now face to face with such a defeat. The much abused educated classes are working among the people and getting into touch with them. Will the Government simply look on and let things take their course, confident in its superior strength, or will it try to divert the constant drip of water from the rock?

TOHFA-I-HIND,
18th May, 1906.

The Tohfa-i-Hind on the recent Barisal incidents.

22. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th May, referring to the recent Barisal incidents, and giving an Urdu translation of an article published by Mr. Romesh Chandra Datta in the Statesman, agrees with him in thinking that if some (less passionate) officer other than Sir Bampfylde Fuller, who had already acquired a reputation for his severities in other places, had been appointed to the Lieutenant-Governorship of Eastern Bengal, he would have, by his forbearance and conciliatory policy, checked the excitement which the partition of Bengal has created among the Bengalis. It is much to be regretted that the local authorities should have adopted the harsh measures they did in stopping the procession to the Pandal of the Bengal Provincial Conference. It would be difficult to find a parallel to such conduct of British officers on a similar occasion in the history of British rule in India. If the Conference could be dispersed by a mere verbal order of the District Superintendent of Police, why could not the procession too be broken up by a similar order, and what need had the police for attacking the respectable delegates with láthis? Again, the local authorities can adduce no good argument to support their statement that if the procession and the Conference were not dispersed, there was danger of a breach of the peace. The delegates quietly bore the ill-treatment of the police, and put up with the arrest of Babu Surendra Nath, without offering the least resistance. In the face of such peaceful conduct on the part of the people, it hardly sounds well for the authorities to seek to justify their conduct by their alleged anxiety to keep the peace which was in no way threatened. It is to be hoped that the Secretary of State for India will, after duly considering the whole affair, issue such orders as will remove the unrest and disquiet now prevailing in Eastern Bengal.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th May, 1906.

Withdrawal of the Government circular prohibiting the shouting of Bande Mátaram in Eastern Bengal.

23. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th May, says :—To describe the second circular of the Government of East Bengal, dated the 12th instant, withdrawing the first circular prohibiting the crying of Bande Mátaram, as a process of climbing down would be inaccurate, for it bears all the signs of an involuntary movement and an irresistible propulsion from above. The first circular was malignant, vengeful and arbitrary; the second is graceless, precipitate and half-apologetic. No reasonable person will believe that the second circular has been issued at the instance of the Government of East Bengal. It is a tumbling down all in a heap, with heels in air and head to the ground. It is the first turn of the screw on the back of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. The occasion of the second circular, it is said, is 'the self-restraint generally displayed by the people of this province on the occasion of the recent regrettable occurrence at Barisal.' Did the self-restraint consist in not retaliating when the police assaulted the delegates without provocation, or in not shouting Bande Mátaram till the assault was committed? And from what point of view was the occurrence at Barisal regrettable? Was the conduct of the magistrate and police regrettable, or was it the forbearance of the delegates that was regrettable? The test case has been decided before it has been put to the test, for the question was the legality of the first circular, and the circular itself has been withdrawn without waiting for the issue of the several cases. The public has now witnessed the first instalment of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's humiliation. Whether he will himself realize it is more than doubtful, for a man of his stamp will not resign under any circumstances unless compelled to do so.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th May, 1906.

Withdrawal of the Bande Mátaram circular in Eastern Bengal.

24. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th May, says :—Sir Bampfylde Fuller is reputed to be a good Persian scholar. We presume he knows the well-known Persian couplet which says, 'What the wise man does, the unwise man also does, but not till he has heaped upon himself a thousand disgraces.' It is impossible not to think of this couplet now that the Bande Mátaram circular has been withdrawn, but perhaps administrators have short memories, and it is not unlikely that Sir Bampfylde Fuller forgot this little couplet in the midst of his many duties. Anyhow, it is never too late to learn, or to be reminded of your early lessons. The only unfortunate part of it all, however, is that the lesson in the present case has been too dearly learnt. The Bengali, it is said, is a noisy creature and not long ago the Pioneer remarked that Mr. Morley did not know his Bengali. Whether Mr. Morley knows or does not know the Bengali, it is certain that the latter knows John Bull too well to forget that he is very slow to move, and that when the still small voice fails the only force which can move him is noise and clamour.

BHARAT JIWAN,
21st May, 1906.

Prohibitory order regarding the cry of Bande Mátaram withdrawn in Eastern Bengal.

25. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 21st May, rejoices at the issue of a circular by the Government of Eastern Bengal, withdrawing its previous order prohibiting the shouting of Bande Mátaram in public streets, though with the uncalled for proviso that the cry should not be raised in quarters inhabited by Muhammadans to avoid giving offence to the latter. The editor is at a loss to understand why the cry should be supposed to cause annoyance to Muhammadans when many of them have gladly adopted it as a complimentary address to one's motherland, slightly changing it into Bande Mádaram (I am servant to mother, i. e., motherland).

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th May, 1906.

Performance of a native play stopped at Bombay because it contained the expression Bande Mátaram.

26. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 19th May, observes that Bande Mátaram, though a perfectly harmless expression, has, strange to say, come to be dreaded by Government officers, especially the police, not only in Bengal but in other provinces also. Lately a play, entitled the Jágran, was to be performed at Bombay, and the Commissioner of Police had already given permission for its performance. But because the expression Bande Mátaram happened to occur in the play, the District Superintendent of Police was so upset by it that he at once took steps to stop its performance. It is a great pity indeed that British officers, carried away by imaginary fears, should be led to interfere in this arbitrary way in ordinary matters, and thereby embitter the feelings of the ruled against the rulers.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th May, 1906.

The late Barisal incidents, and the present relations between the rulers and the ruled.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th May, says :— A change seems now to have come over the spirit of our rulers, and it has resulted in a change in the spirit of the ruled too. What is the nature of this change in the spirit of the rulers? The spirit you may now call either Imperial or despotic; there is a clear intention on the part of present-day administrators to rule according to their own lights quite irrespective of the wishes and sentiments of the people. And to achieve this end some administrators have even descended to the mean, if old, trick of setting class against class and fomenting internal dissensions among the people. Why they have done so is more than we can tell. But it is for us to take note of facts. Now among these facts the most important to note is the growth of a national feeling in the country. It is all very well to talk of India as a country of many peoples, and to sneer at the educated Indians as a microscopic and discontented minority. The country is at last asserting its claim upon the children of its soil, and they are awaking to respond to the call of their natural leaders. For who can be the leaders of the children of the soil? Surely only those who are of them, flesh of their flesh and bone of their bone, who live and toil with them, who feel and think with them, but who by reason of education and culture, of training and experience, have learnt to voice their hopes and aspirations and to formulate their grievances. It is the best and brightest sons of these children of the soil who receive the benefits of education and subsequently become their mouth-piece, and they, and through them their parents, are every day coming better and better to realize that their country is one and the cause of that country is one. It is for this reason that we find that the cry of Bande Mátaram, first raised in Bengal, has been enthusiastically taken up from one end of the country to the other, and there has been a general upheaval of patriotic feeling the like of which had not been seen for centuries in India. Facts cannot be blinked, and it is sheer madness on the part of some of our Anglo-Indian rulers and their organs to shut their eyes obstinately to the coming change, and not face the situation fairly and squarely. The spirit in which the cry of Bande Mátaram is now uttered was never in better evidence than recently at Barisal, when Superintendent Kemp and his constables went on a raid upon the delegates to the Provincial Conference.

* * * * * * * *

Now to see the spirit in which the cry of Bande Mátaram was uttered by these delegates we will examine a typical case, viz. that of the Bengali boy who was mercilessly thrashed with regulation láthis and pushed back into a tank and would have died but for the timely intervention of a policeman more sensible than others. At each blow of the láthi (and be it noted in passing that the Allahabad High Court holds a láthi like this to be a murderous weapon) the boy cried Bande Mátaram. It was a meek submission to duty's call. If he was to be beaten in his country's cause he did not complain, he would not run away, but he called with the greater fervency upon his mother-country and readily bared his little frame to the tribulation that his was the fate and the glory to endure. The only parallel that we can think of is the case of little Hugh of Lincoln, whose story Chaucer has commemorated in the Canterbury Tales, and whom the Christians regard as a martyr.

* * * * * * * *

It behoves our rulers to come closer to the subject people they rule and to understand them better. It is most regrettable that every day the breach between the Anglo-Indians and the "Indo-Anglicans" is widening. (By Indo-Anglicans we mean all English-educated Indians, whether they have visited Europe or not). So long as the Anglo-Indians prefer to form a caste by themselves apart from the people, exclusive, disdainful and repellant, no better understanding between the rulers and the ruled can be brought about. The Anglo-Indian of to-day is like a bird of passage in the country, who has a supreme contempt for the children of the soil and never admits them into his proximity 'except on business.' It is this noli me tangere attitude that, we believe, is responsible for the grievous political blunders that have within the course of one year convulsed the country. The truth of the matter is that the Anglo-Indian does not care to know the Indo-Anglican, he has no respect or sympathy for him, he does not wish to cultivate friendly relations with him, he does not read his papers or publications, he does not try to look at things from his stand-point. The result is a hopeless misunderstanding, which inevitably causes grave injustice at every step. The Anglo-Indian should know that genuine feeling, even if unreasonable to his mind, deserves not to be disregarded and must not be outraged. There is a limit to endurance. Embittered feelings lead to violent courses, resentment breeds fixity of resolve and then physical suffering ceases to have any terrors.

Rumour regarding the appointment of Sir Bampfylde Fuller as next Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 20th May, 1906.

28. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th May, says:—There was a rumour abroad that Sir Bampfylde Fuller would be appointed to succeed Sir James Digges LaTouche as Lieutenant-Governor of these Provinces. Much as we sympathise with our countrymen of East Bengal we cannot say that we regard such a prospect with equanimity. If Sir Bampfylde Fuller has proved unfit to be the Lieutenant-Governor of the new Province, he is still more so to rule these Provinces. If, however, there is a proposal to appoint him Governor of the Andaman Islands and the penal settlement of Port Blair, we shall unreservedly wish him joy, though at the same time we must confess to a feeling of lurking sympathy for the convicts.

Mr. Morley on the administration of Eastern Bengal by Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 20th May, 1906.

29. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th May, says:—The enigmatic statement of Mr. Morley that it is the wish of the Local and Indian Government to act in a sympathetic and considerate spirit is almost annoying. Who in the world will believe that Sir Bampfylde Fuller has ever had the wish to act in a sympathetic and considerate spirit, when he went about proclaiming that he would recall the days of Shaista Khan? And now it is added the prosecution of boys will be put a stop to—also by higher authority. The truth is that the desire to deal liberally with India is diminishing with all Governments in England.

An appeal to Indians to use Swadeshi articles exclusively.

MURAQQA-I-TASAWWUR, 21st May, 1906.

30. The Muraqqa-i-Tasawwur (Fatehpur), of the 21st May, regrets that while the so-called Indian patriots talk much of the need for encouraging and improving the Indian arts and industries, they themselves freely use foreign articles, disliking country-made goods, and appeals to Indians to make a point of using nothing but Indian goods, if they sincerely desire to bring about a regeneration of their country.

The Bengalis throwing up Honorary Magistracies in resentment against the late Barisal incidents.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 23rd May, 1906.

31. The Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), of the 23rd May, referring to the Barisal incidents, asks why the Bengalis should have courted the treatment they received at Barisal by defying the Local Government's circular prohibiting the shouting of Bande Mátaram in the public streets. They could have been loser in no way if the Bengalis had abstained from raising the cry in obedience to the Government circular, but having acted against it they are now committing another folly of throwing up honorary magistracies as if they could thereby change the policy of Government. It is a great pity that the Bengalis have not of late been guided by wisdom in their actions.

A procession and a meeting at Barisal.

ADVOCATE, 24th May, 1906.

32. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th May, contains the following:—An unprecedented procession of Hindus and Muhammadans, numbering over ten thousand souls, singing national songs and crying "Bande-Mátaram" and "Momin-Allaho-Akbar," went out of Babu Dina Bandhu Sen's house and passed through the main streets of the town at Barisal headed by Babu Aswini Kumar, Mr. Saiyid Motahhar Husain, Chowdhary, Barrister-at-Law of Shaistabad, and Mr. Musharraf Husain, zamindar of Charamandi.

* * * * * * *

The large assembly met at Raja Bahadur's Haveli which was transformed into a surging mass of humanity. There Babu Aswini Kumar rose amidst deafening cheers of "Bande Mátaram" and delivered a fiery speech saying that the withdrawal of the circular was not the grant of a favour. It was really extorted from the authorities by the little bit of manliness that was exhibited by the people. He referred to Mr. Morley's reply to show how they had (?) won by perseverance in the agitation, and exhorted the vast audience, amidst repeated cries of "Bande Mátaram" to continue the agitation and work out the Swadeshi vow with redoubled vigour and never to cease until they had won Home Rule in India like that given to the Colonies.

He proposed and Babu Behary Ram was voted to the chair.

Maulvi Motahhar Husain moved a resolution expressing, on behalf of the residents of Barisal, a profound sense of gratitude to the gentlemen and Associations in different parts of India and the world, who have expressed their sympathy with the Barisal Conference in their troubles. Babu Nibaran Chandra Das seconded the motion and accentuated the given determination of the assembly to persevere in the Swadeshi cause. Chowdhary Mossalar Musharraf Husain supported the resolution. Several other gentlemen also addressed the meeting.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th May, 1906.

The Muhammadan riots at Mymensingh, and a suggestion for the recall of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

33. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th May, says:—Even while the Lieutenant-Governor was complacently talking of the self-restraint of the people of East Bengal, the lower classes of Muhammadans in the Mymensingh district were proving their power of self-restraint by organised acts of hooliganism, and plundering and raiding Hindus. We have not the least doubt that Sir Bampfylde Fuller will attempt to attribute this outbreak of lawlessness to the Swadeshi movement and Bande Mátaram. But the fact is clear as day that the trouble is entirely due to the foolish speeches of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, his announcement that he was an incarnation of Shaista Khan, his senseless talk of a Hindu and Muhammadan wife, and his systematic persecution of Hindus. Wherever he went he tried to set the Muhammadans against the Hindus, and his officers took their cue from him. At Mymensingh it is alleged a number of Maulvis actually excited the lower order of Muhammadans against the Hindus, saying that the authorities and the Government would support them. Seeing what the Government and the authorities were doing the Muhammadan roughs naturally thought they might go a step further and do a little looting on their own account. If the Government of India and the Ministry are wise, they will at once recall the first Lieutenant-Governor of East Bengal—the most unfortunate selection ever made—and replace him by a safer and wiser man.

MOHINI,
18th May,
1906.

The alleged Muhammadan atrocities at Mymensingh.

34. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 18th May, referring to the news regarding the atrocities said to have been recently committed by the Musalman rabble on the Hindus at Mymensingh, says that the rumour could not be true that certain local officers themselves had lately been instigating the Musalmans to set upon the Hindus, with a view to stopping their Swadeshi agitation. But it is very surprising that the dire events as reported should have occurred in broad daylight. It is, however, to be hoped that Government will, after making a thorough inquiry into the matter, have the offenders severely punished according to the gravity of the crime they have committed.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th May, 1906.

The reported Muhammadan riots at Mymensingh.

35. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 20th May, referring to the reported plunder of certain Hindu houses and bazars by Muhammadans in Mymensingh, indignantly repudiates the allegation made by certain Congress papers that some Muhammadan papers in the United Provinces had instigated the Maulvis of those provinces to go to Eastern Bengal and excite the Muhammadan population there against the Hindus. When even the educated classes in Eastern Bengal are unwilling to obey Government orders and readily defy them at present, there is no wonder that the masses there should be led to commit atrocities in a moment of excitement.

ADVOCATE,
20th May, 1906.

The Mymensingh disturbances.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th May, says:—"An eye-witness" writes to us from Barahit, Iswarganj, under date May 7th:—The invisible hands which have been pulling the string from behind the screen to promote a racial discord between Hindus and Muhammadans, have attained a most barbarous success in our part of the province. Indeed, the success of these designing men in exciting the local Muhammadans against their Hindu brethren has been so complete here that the honour, life as well as the property of the Hindu community at large have been seriously jeopardized. Hitherto, the Hindu and the Musalman in this part of the country, as elsewhere, were living side by side in amity and peace, each sympathising with the other in his weal and woe, but thanks to these designing men, the Musalman has turned false to his peace-loving Hindu brother and he is now his implacable foe. There are, of course, some honourable exceptions. Anyhow, the manner in which some Muhammadans express their hatred against the Hindus is at once anarchical and unprecedented in the annals of British India. Thousands of unmeaning false promises have, it is said, been held out by designing men to these ignorant Muhammadans and they have been led to believe that Government has actually outlawed the Hindus and no amount of lawlessness and ferocity against them would be criminal. Every ignorant Musalman in this part of the country now considers himself a Sir Bampfylde Fuller. This conviction has gained ground with them for the further reason that since their outbreak, the cry of the suffering people for police help has been met with a very weak response, and ignorant men have been thus led to believe that Government would not come to the rescue of the aggrieved.

The ostensible mission of these designing men is to snatch away Muhammadan menials from Hindu households, and to cut off all communications with the Hindus and if possible to make converts of them. If it is to be admitted that in these days there is nothing very objectionable in these things, yet it may be safely said that the measures, to which they have invariably been resorting to effect their purpose, are simply alarming and audacious enough to try the patience of a responsible constitutional Government. They appoint a day for assault under the cover of " Wáz" (so they call it), announce it, in broad daylight, by beat of drums in the surrounding bazars and assemble in several thousands. The offensive weapons which they generally wield are spears, spikes, large bamboo clubs (admirable imitations of police regulation láthis) missiles, brickbats, etc., etc. They forcibly enter the houses of innocent men, intimidate them, insult them, and do a thousand other things in which a lawless unruly mob diabolically delights.

Since their outbreak they have carried on their depredations in the neighbouring villages of Khanpur, Ghagrapara, Maliaty, Purahata, Khalbeda, Purail, under the ringleadership of a so-called Maulvi and a newly converted Muhammadan.

It is impossible to give a detailed account of all their depredations in their wild enormities, but the one which took place yesterday in the village of Purail deserves special mention, as it surpasses all their previous achievements, both in its intensity and extent. Babu Kasi Nath Sircar is a respectable and well-to-do taluqdar of that village. For reasons best known to themselves, he has been picked out as a fit object for their assault and has hitherto been twice assaulted in his own house. The first assault was made on the 13th of Baisakh last, by several hundreds of regularly armed men and led by the new convert. They began by snatching away a Muhammadan servant of Kasi Babu, but the fellow managed somehow to escape though not unhurt, from their clutches, and came back to his master. The ruffians broke into the house, peremptorily demanded the restoration of the fugitive and grossly abused the master, and, but for the intervention of several heroic spirits, things would have ended very seriously. That day, however, they had to go away unsuccessful, but only to come back again with redoubled energy and force. They proclaimed their object as usual, invited Muhammadans from all quarters by beat of drums to assemble on the 23rd of Baisakh in the maidan before the house of Kasi Babu. This premeditated, preorganised second assault was accordingly made yesterday, and was solely in the spirit of retaliation. From about 1 P. M. the Muhammadans began to pour in from various quarters and from as far off as 10 to 12 miles, those, from places at a still greater distance, having found their abode in the adjoining Muhammadan houses during the previous night. In about 2 or 3 hours they numbered about 6,000 strong, all armed with weapons as enumerated above. The brandishing of the láthis and spears and the sky-rending cries of 5,000 persons were, in themselves, sufficient to strike terror into the hearts of a regularly disciplined police force, not to speak of lay persons. This time too the assailants took the initiative by asking Kasi Babu to restore to "them the servant and ask pardon for his past misdeeds" under the penalty of having his houses demolished and the members of his family outraged. But Kasi Babu was not the man to be so easily intimidated and he turned a deaf ear to their peremptory demand. But the result of such a course was only too obvious. Thousands of men at once mounted the banks of the tank in front and began to brandish their láthis and spears and to throw stones in torrents, and many of them began to rush into the house. The assailants were led by both their ringleaders. This time Babu Harimohan Das, Inspector of police, with the Sub-Inspector of Iswarganj, a Head constable and several constables, dafadars and chowkidars, was on the spot, but in their attempt to stop the assailants the police were mercilessly beaten and stoned. Two of the chowkidars were stoned almost to death. Several gentlemen of the neighbourhood came to the help of the police, and it was through their combined efforts and the agency of a gun which had to be fired (happily without injury to life) that the ruffians could be made to take to their heels and disperse in various directions. On their way back they demolished several huts and several houses of prostitutes in Haruabazar, and there beat with its keeper, an elephant of Babu Madan Mohan Dutt, B. L., Pleader, Iswarganj. To-day they have looted Dhitpur Bazar. Thus every day brings to light fresh cases of their oppression, and from the wide field of their operations and the multiplicity of their missions, it appears that they have declared a regular crusade against the Hindus.

It is now known to all how the other day a ruffianly Muhammadan mob, in the very thana house of Iswarganj, and before the very eyes of the police authorities overawed, by criminal force, the voters in the recent Local Board Election, and compelled them, by every kind of maltreatment, to vote for the single Muhammadan candidate.

It is to be feared that the reader will pause a moment before he is able to bring his mind to believe this account, but it is no exaggeration and it is our lot to live in such hard times. We know that Sir Bampfylde has police and Gurkhas enough to repress the formidable schoolboy and the refractory Swadeshi leader; but may we not crave his indulgence to spare some of them to check these unruly ruffians and thus stretch his protecting hand to a portion of his Majesty's subjects, who, if the truth must be told, deserve well of Government?

CITIZEN,
21st May, 1906.

The Muhammadan disturbances at Mymensingh.

37. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 21st May, says:—In a land, where the very first principles of the constitution are violated without any decency by the authorities themselves, it is no wonder that riot is the order of the day. The cases of lawlessness that reach us from Mymensingh are simply appalling. The local daily has of course lost no time in giving it out that they are due to the Hindu boycott of English goods; forgetful that Hindus and Musalmans, so far as the Swadeshi work is concerned, have been in most places working hand in hand, and, if the Musalmans were opposed to boycotting, they would not attack the police. Our readers may remember that "Sir Fuller Khan" declared not long ago that, after the oriental despot, he had taken to polygamy and that the Musalman was his favourite wife. This declaration and the high-handed proceedings of the authorities have given rise to the notion that the Hindus have been outlawed by the Government so that the Musalmans may molest and oppress them with impunity.

ADVOCATE,
20th May, 1906.

Strike of the students of the Medical School at Lahore.

38. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th May, says—The grievances of the students of the Hospital Assistant class at Lahore have not yet been redressed and their strike continues. The Inspector-General referred the students for redress to their Principal, Colonel Perry, who instead of redressing the grievances has expelled all the students from the college and ordered them to vacate the boarding-house within 48 hours. Great indignation prevails against this order. It is very difficult for 200 students to find accommodation elsewhere. The students have again wired to the Inspector-General.

BHARAT JIWAN,
21st May, 1906.

Strike of the students of the Medical School at Lahore.

39. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 21st May, referring to the strike of the students of the Medical School at Lahore, says that the complaint of the students was that they were put to menial tasks in the hospital, and that, failing to obtain any hearing to their representation on the subject, they have refused to do work. The patients in the hospital have to endure much inconvenience owing to the strike of the students, and the latter had better be conciliated soon.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
16th May, 1906.

Government officers going out on tour during winter.

40. A correspondent of the Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 16th May, insisting that the tour of Government officers generally causes much trouble, inconvenience and expense to suitors and others, urges that if instead of several officers of a district going out on tour into the interior during winter, only one of them were deputed to do the touring and inspection duty all the year round, while the rest stayed at headquarters, and dealt with cases there, the majority of suitors would be saved the trouble of attending the camps of officers on tour which they have to endure under the present system. Commenting upon the above, the editor holds that it all depends on the conduct and disposition of Government officers whether their tour in the interior of a district will prove beneficial to the people or a source of trouble and expense to them, the object of Government in sending out its officers on tour being that they should hear the grievances of the people and redress them on the spot, get an insight into their condition, and so forth.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th May, 1906.

Goraits* in the Gorakhpur district.

41. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th May, says that every zamindar, whether small or great, in the districts of Basti, Azamgarh and Gorakhpur was formerly required to grant five bighas of land each for the maintenance of goraits (watchmen) in every village. This practice was abolished in the first two districts some years ago, but not yet in the last district also, which is not fair. The Government of Sir James Digges LaTouche would therefore do well to relieve the zamindars of Gorakhpur as well of the obligation of making a grant of land for goraits who hardly render any service to them.

EXPRESS,
17th May, 1906.

Present relations between the Hindus and Musalmans.

42. The Express (Lucknow), of the 17th May, says:—All are agreed in deploring the ever-widening breach between the Hindu and Muhammadan populations of India.

* * * * * * * *

Forces stronger than man can resist are no doubt at work; and we must realize once for all that sooner or later a different state of things shall evolve out of the existing condition of affairs. Either we shall be driven to perfect chaos, and the dreams of a united Indian nation will vanish before the reality of complete national ruin, or these forces will weld the Hindus and Muhammadans into one homogeneous whole and a better and a happier chapter will open in our history.

* * * * * * * *

In connection with the above, we hold that no one, who has studied the question impartially and from the standpoint of an outsider, can blame the Muhammadans. The Muslims have never adopted a policy of narrow exclusiveness towards the Hindus; they do not hate them or treat them contemptuously. They have never objected to dining with them or to observing the ordinary amenities of social life. On the other hand, what is the attitude of Hindus towards them? In spite of what their leaders may say, the fact is incontrovertible that the Hindus have never extended to the Musalmans a treatment of equality with the members of their own community. The tidiest of Musalmans is in their eyes dirtier than the dirtiest of Hindus. Their very touch breeds pollution. Inter-dining with them is a heinous offence.

Is that the way to bring about union? No one, we feel sure, can answer this question in the affirmative.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th May, 1906.

Refusal of a District Magistrate to grant a rais in the United Provinces a license for a breech-loader in offensive language.

43. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th May, says:—In a certain district in this Province a rais recently applied for a license for a breech-loading shot gun. The Magistrate of the district, sitting in open court, remarked that breech-loaders were not intended for kála ádmis, and rejected the application. He should have, however, slightly qualified his statement by adding that breech-loading rifles may be supplied to common sepoys in the army and even the military police, but that the question is different when a gentleman and a rais applies for a shot gun for shooting small game.

BHARAT JIWAN,
21st May, 1906.

A celebration held in honour of Shivaji at Benares.

44. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 21st May, gives a brief account of a meeting held, on the 25th April last, in Bishweshar Theatre Hall, Benares, to celebrate the birth anniversary of Shivaji. The chair was taken by one Babu Shyam Sundar Das, B.A., and speeches were made giving an account of the life of Shivaji, and on the need of holding such celebrations. Some proposals were also made on the occasion ; one of them being that a cow-protection society should be established at Benares, and another that a statue of Shivaji should be put up at some place in that town. The chairman brought the meeting to a close with a speech in which he pointed out that as annual celebrations in honour of Washington, Nelson and other great men were held in their native countries there was no reason why similar celebrations should not be held to preserve the memory of Maharaja Shivaji and other Indian great men in this country. From the lives of such personages, the speaker concluded, Indians should learn the lessons of self-sacrifice, patriotism and devotion to their mother country.

OUDH AKHBAR,
21st May, 1906.

The lot of native soldiers in India.

45. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 21st May, observing that Mr. Morley was perfectly right in stating in Parliament that there was no dissatisfaction or unrest caused in the native army in India by the army reorganization scheme of Lord Kitchener, asks why the native soldiers whose loyalty and bravery have been tried again and again, and who fight as valiantly as British soldiers, are so poorly paid and so little cared for. While British soldiers receive high salaries, are fed sumptuously and provided with splendid barracks to live in, the native soldiers are not even paid half so much or provided with half the comforts enjoyed by their British confreres. The native soldiers are also very unfortunate in the matter of promotion, all the higher posts in the army being closed to them.

ZUL QARNAIN,
21st May, 1906

A suggestion to Government for changing the name of the holiday Bara Wafát to Id-i-waládat.

46. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st May, stating that the Muhammadan festival Bára Wafát, which is recognized by Government as a public holiday throughout India, is observed by the Musalmans as the day of the prophet's birth and not as that of his death, though both the events are said to have occurred on the same date, says that Government would do well to change the name Bára Wafát, "the 12th of (the prophet's) death" to Id-i-Waládat "the birthday festival," which will be a more appropriate name than the former.

ARYA MITRA,
24th May, 1906.

Suggestion for prohibiting the use of deleterious intoxicating drugs and preventing small boys from becoming Sadhus.

47. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th May, referring to the sentence of transportation for life passed on a Sádhu for wilfully murdering a child at Allahabad at the late Kumb Mela under the influence of some intoxicating drug, does not understand why Government should not enact a law prohibiting the use of deleterious drugs which demoralise, and ruin the health of those addicted to it, and another preventing minor boys from becoming or being made Sádhus, who instead of devoting themselves to improving the spiritual side of their being simply learn to smoke ganja and charas and contract other bad habits, ruining thereby themselves and others who come in contact with them.

VI.—RAILWAY.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th May, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the licensed vendors of articles at the stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

48. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th May, complains that the agents of the licensed vendors of articles at the Jaunpur railway station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway weigh out their articles to passengers with a kachcha (Government) seer which is equal to only three-fourths of the pakka (old Indian) weight generally used in the Jaunpur city. Again, these licensed vendors, who have their mercantile shops at Lucknow, often import goods from Cawnpore, Benares, Delhi, &c., by the railway without paying any railway freight. They also allow their friends and others to travel on the line free by using the "card" passes issued for their own or for their lawful agents' use only. The arrangement for the supply of coolies at the Kotdwara and other stations is extremely unsatisfactory, only sweepers being as a rule available or coolies.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st May, 1906.

A complaint regarding the unsuitability of the present waiting-room provided for Indian female passengers at the Bareilly junction on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

49. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st May, complains that the waiting room provided at present for Indian female passengers near the new 3rd class booking office at the Bareilly junction is quite unsuitable for pardanashín women who are much inconvenienced in having to walk from there to the platform. The Traffic Superintendent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway had better allow female passengers to wait in the room on the platform in which they were allowed to do formerly.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st May, 1906.

A complaint against the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway closing the entrance to a mosque from the side of the Budaun Railway Station, by erecting a wall in front thereof.

50. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st May, states that a mosque was lately erected near the railway station at Budaun for the use of passengers. In front of the entrance to this mosque the railway authorities have recently put up a wall along a portion of their road leading from the station to the city, so that a passenger cannot go to the mosque direct from the station. The Government would do well to call upon the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway authorities to remove the complaint.

HINDOSTHAN, 24th May, 1906.

Certain railway complaints.

51. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 24th May, while admitting that the railway authorities have for some years past been doing much to add to the comfort of third class passengers, complains (1) that all third class carriages have not yet been provided with privies, (2) that on the occasion of fairs third class passengers still continue to be hustled together in carriages like so many sheep, and (3) that drinking water is not readily supplied to passengers at small stations.

Complaint against certain Musalman zealots at Agra.

52. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of the 20th May, complaining against the misbehaviour of certain Musalman zealots who have lately arrived at Agra, and seek to compel Musalmans to live strictly in accordance with their religion (vide article No. 43, on page 301 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), observes that as this high-handed interference on the part of fanatics in other men's business, is apprehended to cause a breach of the peace, the local authorities had better order them to leave the city at once.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th May, 1906.

The Anglo-Turkish dispute over the Egyptian frontier territory.

1. THE Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th May, referring to the temporary settlement of the Anglo-Turkish dispute regarding the Egyptian frontier territory, says that in future the Sublime Porte would do well to consider seriously beforehand what would be the ultimate result of any action it took in opposition to a European Power, it not being a good policy to be the aggressor first and then give way afterwards. England is the greatest Naval Power in Europe, and the editor does not know of any Power that would wilfully seek a war with her and thereby court its own ruin. The same paper, in its issue of the 28th May expresses the opinion that England decided to settle the Egyptian frontier dispute in an amicable manner probably from her regard for the feelings of her Muhammadan subjects, who were anxious that there should not be war with Turkey.

UNION GAZETTE,
28th May, 1906.

The Indian Musalmans and Turkey.

2. A Muhammadan correspondent of the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th May, pointedly asks what the Sultan of Turkey has ever done for the Indian Musalmans that they should always be so ready to express their sympathy for him whenever he becomes involved in trouble with any Power, especially if it be England. Does the Sultan give appointments to educated Indian Musalmans in his empire? Has he made any grant of money for the relief of poor Musalmans in India? Has he made any special arrangements for the protection of helpless Indian pilgrims to Mecca from the hands of ruffianly Bedouins, or has he constructed any sarais or alms-houses at Mecca for their benefit? Has he reduced any of the taxes that the Indian Musalmans have to pay in connection with their pilgrimage to Mecca? In short, what special facilities has he afforded to Indian Musalmans in the performance of their religious duties? The preservation of the Muhammadan religion does not depend on the preservation of any Musalman Power: the prophet announced and promulgated his religion in a group of only forty persons, and now Muhammadanism counts nine crores of souls among its followers. The writer, while referring to the benefits of education, religious toleration and other blessings of the British Government which the Musalmans enjoy in India, adds that the Turks themselves, who are of the same race as the Sultan, are not orthodox Musalmans nor invariably faithful to their sovereign, as many instance have occurred in the great wars they have engaged in of men turning traitors to their country and ruler. Again the Turks owing to their preoccupation in pursuit of pleasure, have been losing their provinces one after another; so that when they themselves have no regard for Islam, and are preparing their own ruin, it is useless for Indian Musalmans to affect sympathy and interest in them.

OUDH AKHBAR,
30th May, 1906.

The Indian Musalmans and Turkey,

3. A Muhammadan correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 30th May, in a long article, referring to the telegram which certain Aligarh Musalmans lately sent to the Viceroy regarding the Egyptian boundary dispute, says that though it is an undeniable fact that Musalmans have deep religious sympathy with the Sultan of Turkey, yet the Musalmans in question had no business to advise the British Government in an international matter. But the action of another set of Musalmans at Aligarh, who belong to the College party there and affect to be the leaders of the entire Muhammadan population of India, in denying the representative character of the authors of the telegram and declaring that it was despatched at the instance of the local Muhammadan Secretary of the Indian National Congress, and that the Musalman community of Aligarh as a whole had nothing to do with it, was quite uncalled for. It exposed their flattering nature, and also showed that they wanted to represent the National Congress to be ill-disposed towards the British Government. The British Government knows well what feelings the Muhammadans generally entertain towards the Sultan, and it does not disapprove of the Congress constitutionally making representations to it. The Sultan is practically considered to be their Khalifa by the Musalmans, and the latter fervently desire the preservation of Turkey, for they believe that the glory of Islam is bound up with that empire; so that if the one goes the other will follow suit. But the Musalmans are loyal subjects of the British Government at the same time, and hence all that they can do, in the circumstances in which they are placed, is to pray to God that England and Turkey may always be on the best of terms. As regards the Congress movement the Musalmans, if they desire to improve their position, should gladly join and co-operate with it, bearing well in mind that flatterers never prosper.

(b).—Home.

URDU-I-MUALLA, May, 1906.

The Musalmans and the National Congress.

4. A correspondent of the Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for May, referring to the long article which one Haji Muhammad Musa Khan of Datáoli in the Aligarh district published in its combined issue for last March and April, (vide article No. 4, pages 256-257 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), as to the expediency or otherwise of the Musalmans joining the Congress movement, says that the substance of the Haji's disquisition was that so long as provisions were not made for safeguarding the special interests of the Musalmans, the latter's participation in the Congress would be detrimental to them. Before he would let the Muhammadans join the Congress, he has, for instance, the presumption to demand that Hindu Congressists should enable Musalmans to secure seats on the Legislative Councils by their votes, and help them to obtain higher appointments in the administration of the country in the proportion of their population, though they and their organs might all the time be abusing the Congressists and representing them to be disloyal to Government. Members of the Councils need special qualifications in order to comprehend and discuss politics and political economy, and for this special previous training is needed. There may be now a sufficient number of educated Musalmans who will be able to represent their community on the Councils, but, unless they have mastered politics and learned to discuss it in an efficient manner, they cannot discharge their duties to the advantage of the nation. Such training they can obtain only by joining and working zealously in a political organisation. The objection of the Musalmans to joining the Congress on the ground of their not being able to hold their own in that body's deliberations owing to their being in the minority is absurd. The numerical strength of the Parsis is very small, but in virtue of their great merits and qualifications they occupy the foremost place in the Congress camp, and Messrs. Dadabhai Naoroji, Pheroz Shah Mehta and Wacha are regarded by Hindus as their most revered leaders? If the Muhammadans are now anxious to recover their lost position in Indian politics they can do it only by showing moral courage in boldly joining and co-operating with the other communities in India in constitutional political agitation, and by ceasing to be guided by the short-sighted views of the editors of such papers as Al Bashír, the Wakíl, the Watan and the Riyáz-ul-Ákhbár, who have neither the ability nor the learning to grasp or express views on important political questions of the day, but who fill column after column of their papers with the news of the conversion of a few Musalmans to the Arya Samáj or of that of some Hindus to Muhammadanism.

ADVOCATE, 27th May, 1906.

The Muhammadans and politics.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th May, publishes an open letter to the students in the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, as follows:—Brothers,—It is a happy sign of the times that you, the present students in the Aligarh college, are unmistakably showing signs of a desire to take your legitimate share in the political activities of your country. Your debates in the College Union and the overwhelming majorities by which you carry resolutions advocating the necessity of the Hindus and Muhammadans making common cause in political matters, fill one with hope for the future of this country. Your discussions at present are academic no doubt, but in them are hidden potentialities of bringing about beneficient results in the near future. You are the students of to-day but the citizens of to-morrow, and much will depend on the convictions you carry away from your alma mater. I have therefore ventured to address to you a few words by way of congratulation and brotherly greeting in the hope that they may, perchance, gladden and strengthen the hearts of some of you who are striving with your might and main to create a healthy public opinion in your college regarding political questions.

You are of course aware of the great influence which the Aligarh school of thought exercises over the minds of a section of your co-religionists. Should not this consciousness awaken in you a sense of grave responsibility which you owe to your people and to your country? Is not the present antipathy of a large number of Musalmans to politics, specially in this part of the country, mainly due to the teachings of the Aligarh leaders, whose well-cherished and much-flaunted creed is political abstinence? Have you ever paused to consider how this policy of your leaders has retarded the progress of the Muslim community? It has no doubt secured for you the patronage of some Anglo-Indian officials. But alas! are we to sacrifice the best and ever-abiding interests of our community and country for the sake of official favours and smiles? Are we to look to immediate little gains and lose sight of great and lasting benefits? Remember the destiny of our country lies in our own hands. Remember also that if we desire to rise in the scale of nations, we shall have to rely on our own efforts. Nations are made by themselves. Away then with this policy of weakness and short-sightedness and let its place be taken by a policy of manliness, self-reliance and far-sightedness.

There was a time when your leaders proclaimed a crusade against political agitation in general, but subsequently some of them discovered their mistake, and, in the light of experience gained, reconsidered their former position. Their advice to you now is to have a political movement quite separate and distinct from the National Congress in order to safeguard Muhammadan interests. By some of your co-religionists it is considered to be a counsel of perfection, but it will not bear even a moment's careful examination. Are there in reality any interests either Hindu or Muhammadan in their nature? Does there exist any conflict between your interests and ours? Are we not living under the same laws, enjoying the same rights and labouring under the same disabilities? Are you not as much the children of mother India as are her Hindu sons? Born in India, living in India, for whom else will you work but for India? Is there any prospect of your migrating in a body to Arabia or Turkey leaving old India to her Hindu sons? Why should not the Hindus and Musalmans clasp hands in brotherly affection and work harmoniously together for their common salvation?

We hear a good deal these days of the differences that are keeping the two communities apart. This is perhaps true of the English-knowing Hindus and Muhammadans in this part of the country, who have begun to dabble in politics, but the majority of our people, Hindus as well as Musalmans, in blissful ignorance of our fancied causes of quarrel, are living together in as happy and neighbourly a fashion as they used to do before the days of the Congress and your great leader, the late deeply lamented Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan. I shall most earnestly beg you as well as my own co-religionists to draw a veil over the past. It is my deliberate conviction that both the communities have been at fault in this matter. But assuming that the fault has been entirely ours, should you not forget it and say, 'Lord forgive them for they know not what to do.' The conditions of life in this country are such that the Hindus and Musalmans either rise or fall together. The rise of one without the corresponding rise of the other is an impossibility. If you rise and leave us in the cold shade of neglect, rest assured we shall serve like a halter round your necks and drag you down to our own level. If there be two horses in a carriage, it is impossible for the one to drag the carriage leaving the other to his fate. Dismiss from your minds, therefore, the chimera of Musalman advancement as distinct and apart from Hindu advancement.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th May, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

6. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th May, again urges that Lucknow occupies a central position in the United Provinces, and that consequently the great majority of the population of those provinces must naturally desire that the High Court combined with the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court should be located at Lucknow. But wire-pullers are already at work, and letters have been sent out to the various districts to induce the people to sign a memorial for the location of the combined Court at Allahabad. The present High Court building is not capacious enough to afford accommodation for the nine Judges that are to compose the combined Court, and considering that the Taluqdárs of Oudh most earnestly desire to have the Court at Lucknow, Government would be well advised if, instead of spending money in erecting another building at Allahabad, it did so at Lucknow, and thereby not only gratified the Oudh Taluqdárs, but also the greater number of the people of the United Provinces as well. The same paper, in its issue of the 28th May, adds that with the removal of the High Court to Lucknow, the Lieutenant-Governor will have little difficulty in transferring the seat of his Government also to that town, the climate of which is far superior to that of Allahabad. While foreign travellers invariably visit Lucknow in the course of their tour in this country, few of them ever go to Allahabad, on account of its being an altogether unattractive town: even the Prince of Wales did not consider it worth his while to visit Allahabad during his late tour. Such being the case it is a great pity that the Lieutenant-Governor should have to keep his capital along with the High Court at Allahabad.

The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 23rd May, says that, so far as European Government officers and merchants are concerned, they are in favour of the location of the combined Court at Lucknow. This measure if carried out will of course entail a serious loss to house-owners at Allahabad; but the question of the removal of the High Court to Lucknow is not a local question, as it concerns the entire population of the United Provinces, so that the decision of the matter should mainly depend on the opinions of the people of the Agra, Meerut, Benares and Gorakhpur divisions.

A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 26th May, urging the above arguments, suggests that not only the High Court, but the other Government Head Offices at Allahabad might also be transferred, with advantage, to Lucknow where there is ample room for the accommodation of them all.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th May, 1906.

Village Munsifs in the United Provinces.

7. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th May, complains that, since the gentlemen appointed as Village Munsifs are as a rule men of little education and in other ways incompetent for the post, the system of appointing Village Munsifs far from proving a blessing to the peasantry, as it was expected to be, has proved simply a source of oppression. The authority which the incompetent Village Munsifs have been given has turned their heads, and they frequently cause property to be sold merely on verbal orders, of which they keep no record whatever and resort to other similarly illegal measures. Government had better make a secret enquiry regarding the qualifications and conduct of the present Village Munsifs, and see that in future only qualified men are appointed to the post, so that they may be able to afford real facilities to villagers in the settlement of their petty disputes, and not harass them by arbitrary proceedings as the present Village Munsifs generally do.

MUSAFIR,
30th May, 1906.

Murder of natives by British soldiers.

8. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 30th May, referring to the recent case in which a native was shot by a British soldier who had bought ice from him on the tonga road to Simla, observes that as offenders in such cases are invariably acquitted, Europeans have taken to shoot defenceless natives with perfect impunity. There is no record of a European having been hanged for the murder of a native. If native editors pointedly call attention to miscarriages of justice in such cases, they are described as disloyal and seditious.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th May, 1906.

Entries in Police Register No. 10.

9. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th May, referring to the complaint, made by an Allahabad correspondent in the Amrit Bazár Patrika, that the number of badmáshi cases in the United Provinces has steadily increased, says that if a person refuses to give evidence in a case in which the police desire to secure conviction, the latter at once enter his name in Register No. 10, and thenceforth continue to make unfounded entries against him, till one day, when it suits them, they send him up for trial under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This arbitrary entering of the name of a person in Register No. 10 is a very unjust and oppressive proceeding on the part of the police; and the editor would suggest that the entries in question should in future be made only after a thorough enquiry by the Superintendent of Police or by the District Magistrate himself, and not by subordinate police officials as is done at present.

Prostitutes at Benares.

10. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th May, urging that the public prostitutes, who are allowed to take their residence in the bazars at Benares, spread filthy diseases and promote serious crimes among the people, suggests that these pests of society had better be located somewhere outside the town, or a committee, composed of the leading Government officers and Indian leaders in the town, be formed to consider how best to save young men from the baneful influence of the women in question.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
24th May, 1906.

Supply of pipe-water at Agra.

11. The Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 24th May, observing that the Secretary to the Municipal Board, Agra, continues to administer the Municipal affairs in his own arbitrary fashion without let or hindrance, says that notwithstanding the general complaint that the supply of pipe-water is very scanty at present, no attention is paid to their grievance. The drains also continue to be flushed only once in three days, according to the recent orders of the Secretary, and the result is that the town generally is filthy and ill-smelling!

The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 27th May, also complains of the inadequate supply of pipe-water at Agra.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
31st May, 1906.

Certain Municipal complaints at Agra.

12. A correspondent of the Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 31st May, complains (1) that pipe water at Agra is not supplied to the public at a sufficient pressure; (2) that the drains are flushed only once in three days and not every day as was done before; and (3) that the sweepers do not finish sweeping the public streets till 8 A. M. All this is very unsatisfactory, especially as cholera has already made its appearance in the town. The District Magistrate and the Sanitary Commissioner of the United Provinces had better pay a surprise visit to the interior of the town some day, and satisfy themselves as to its present insanitary condition.

(e).—Education.

ITTIHAD,
16th March, 1906.

Alleged paucity of Musalman teachers in the Government schools in Oudh.

13. The Ittihád (Lucknow), of the 16th March, received on the 30th May, complains that the number of Musalman employés in the Education Department of these Provinces is only 6 per cent. of the entire cadre, there being not a single Musalman teacher in some of the Government schools in Oudh, and this is the case even in those places where the Musalman element predominates. Hindu teachers, though they may not be disposed to cause injury to Musalman boys, cannot be expected to sympathise with them. The authorities would do well to see that in future school teachers for a place are selected with due regard to the community that predominates there.

ITTIHAD,
1st April, 1906.

Certain complaints against the Husainabad High School at Lucknow.

14. The Ittihád (Lucknow), of the 1st April, received on the 30th May, deploring the growing discord between the Sunnis and Shias at Lucknow, complains that even the authorities of the Husaindbád High School there are not free from the infection. If a Shia teacher is not available for the school, a Hindu is preferred to a Sunni. As regards the scholarships, endeavours are always made to secure them to Shia students to the entire exclusion of Sunnis.

HINDUSTANI,
30th May, 1906.

Alleged need for lightening the assessments of land revenue and for increasing the sources of income for the people in order to prevent land passing from the possession of agricultural classes.

15. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 30th May, says that so long as the assessments of land revenue are not lightened, and the cost of agrarian suits lessened, no Land Alienation Act is expected to effectually prevent the constant transfer of land from agriculturists to other classes. As regards the desire of money-lending classes to possess land, if Government were to help in promoting industries and trades from which they could derive greater profit than they can do from agriculture, they would seldom care to become landowners, and land would in that case remain in the possession of the agricultural classes. In this way the great need of the present time is to multiply the sources of income for the people, and the agrarian problem will solve itself without the need of the help of the legislature.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
March, 1906.

Criticism of Mr. Morley's grounds of refusal to interfere with the partition of Bengal.

16. The Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for March, criticising Mr. Morley's grounds for refusing to interfere with the partition of Bengal, says:—What has Mr. Morley got to say to the bullying of the leaders of the public opinion at Barisal, to the persecution of helpless young boys for no more heinous offence than of crying Bande Mátaram, to the prohibition of public meetings, to the high-handed methods employed for suppressing the Swadeshi movement and to the chartered oppression practised by the Gurkha soldiery at Barisal and other places? If people agitate, they are told that they are disloyal, and persecuted in many imaginable, if not always mentionable, ways. If they do not agitate, why, then there is no public feeling against the measure and it need not be set aside!

* * * * * * *

There is still an important reason, Mr. Morley would say, why he should let things alone. After seven years of Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty, India badly needs rest and quiet.

* * * * * * *

We fear we are not mistaken in understanding Mr. Morley to mean that this end is best compassed by a policy of do-nothing.

* * * * * * *

A policy of do-nothing will no more give rest to India than severely letting alone, without medical treatment, will heal the wounds of an injured patient. Lord Curzon has wronged the people of India in more directions than one, and at least the more flagrant of them must be removed by a wise and sympathetic statesmanship before the troubled, the agonising minds of educated India will know any peaceful and contented repose.

* * * * * * *

Already a party is growing strong in India which proclaims want of faith in the high purpose of British rule, and disdains constitutional methods of representing popular grievances to constituted authority. This party will gain infinitely in strength and in numbers even though John Morley succumbs to the unwholesome influences of the bureaucracy, and refuses to rectify a wrong against which people have declaimed in the manner in which Bengalis have done against the Partition, and the moderate constitutional party which has controlled the course of public life in India up to the present time will find its occupation gone.

We write with sincere reluctance, a full sense of responsibility and unaffected respect for Mr. Morley's many distinguished qualities, when we express the hope that by failing to grasp the situation aright, and before concession will be spoiled of its grace by being delayed too long, he will not make it possible to say of him anything like what he himself said of the French historian and statesman Guizot :—

> Guizot had undergone years of patient historic study ; nobody of his time had reflected more carefully on the causes and forces of great movements. He had more of what is called the calm philosophic mind than any one then eminent in literature ; he overflowed with this highest kind of wisdom ; his moral pretensions were austere, lofty and unbending to a fault. No man of any time would seem to have been better entitled to a place among the wise and the good, whom nations ought to seek out to rule over them. Yet this great man was one of the very worst statesmen that ever governed France. The severe morality of the student was cast behind him by the minister. He did not even shrink from defending, from considerations of political convenience, the malversations of a colleague . . . . Finally, this famous professor of political science possessed so little skill in political practice, that a few years of his policy wrecked a constitution and brought a dynasty to the ground.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th May, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement, and need for its dissociation from the anti-Bengal Partition agitation.

17. The Nizám-ul-mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th May, observes that the Swadeshi movement, if carried on in the right spirit, is sure to bring about an improvement in Indian arts and industries, and thereby lessen the poverty of the country. The Government of India and even that of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, far from being opposed to Swadeshism, are ready to help it forward in every way. But the movement which was quietly carried on in the country long before the Bengal Partition scheme was broached, should be dissociated from the anti-Bengal Partition agitation, if full benefit of the friendly attitude of Government towards Swadeshism is to be derived.

RAHBAR,
28th May, 1906.

An appeal to Indians to promote Swadeshism.

18. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th May, states that in ancient Rome the Plebeians, growing weary of the oppression of the Patricians, took a solemn vow to boycott the latter in every way, until these accorded them a better treatment. The Indians too will ameliorate their condition considerably if they pledge themselves to use only Swadeshi articles.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th May, 1906.

Protest against the language used by certain Hindu papers in criticising the action of the local authorities in the late Barisal incident.

19. A correspondent of the Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 28th May, quoting certain passages from the Swadeshi Parchárak (Lahore), the Telegram (Calcutta) and the Saddharm Parchárak (Jullundur), and from a speech lately delivered by Lala Lájpat Rai, re the arrest of Mr. Surendra Nath at Barisal, says that the language used in the passages in question is quite seditious, and that, though it can do no harm to Government, it is calculated to produce a bad effect on the minds of the people. Government had therefore better take immediate steps to silence the agitators of the type of the authors of the passages referred to above, by instituting legal proceedings against them, and thereby prevent disaffection from spreading in the country.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th May, 1906.

Alleged misappropriation of large sums of Government money every year in an unnamed department.

20. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th May, states that the editor is in a position to point out how Government is annually cheated of lakhs of rupees by certain persons in a certain department. But he is afraid to give out the matter in print, for on a previous occasion when he published a case of embezzlement by a public official, instead of getting the latter punished, he himself was convicted of the offence of libel and fined Rs. 500. But as any loss which Government suffers is a loss of the public, the editor is prepared to disclose the affair to a responsible official whom Government may be pleased to depute for the purpose, so that if he finds satisfactory evidence as to the misappropriation of public money, he may advise Government to institute criminal proceedings against the guilty parties, without requiring the former to have any further concern in the matter.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th May, 1906.

Adulteration with lime of flour used in the bread prepared for prisoners in the District jail Mainpuri.

21. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 26th May, has heard that his suspicion being aroused that lime was mixed in the flour used in the bread prepared for prisoners in the district jail, Mainpuri, the Superintendent of the jail made an enquiry into the matter, and found his suspicion to have been well founded. If this is true, the persons concerned in the adulteration of the flour should receive severe punishment; for it is due to the use of adulterated flour in jails that much sickness generally prevails among the prisoners.

MOHINI,
29th May, 1906.

Prohibition of the sale of liquor to boys and girls below 14 in the Madras Presidency.

22. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 29th May, states that the Local Government has prohibited the sale of liquor to boys and girls below the age of 14 years, in the Madras Presidency, and suggests that this good rule should be introduced in the other provinces as well.

OUDH AKHBAR,
1st June, 1906.

A suggestion to memorialize the Government of India for extension of Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces, or to establish a glass factory as a memorial to him.

23. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 1st June, regrets that though the régime of Sir James Digges LaTouche has proved a blessing to these provinces, the people do not seem to have taken any steps yet to memorialize the Government of India for getting the term of His Honour's Lieutenant-Governorship extended. Sir James has recently given a fresh proof of his benevolent rule in arranging for the establishment of a Medical College at Lucknow, and it would be but proper that he should continue at the helm of the United Provinces Government till at least the college buildings were erected. The people of these Provinces, and especially the taluqdars of Oudh, would therefore do well to lose no further time in applying for His Honour's extension of service, failing which they should found some useful institution, like a glass factory in his name, and thereby perpetuate his memory in these provinces.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th May, 1906.

A complaint against a Eurasian female ticket-collector at Moradabad.

24. The Nizám-ul-mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th May, observing that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway has become a preserve for the employment of Eurasians, says that the conduct of these Eurasian employés is, as a rule, very insolent towards Indian passengers. Lately a tall and loud talking Eurasian female ticket-collector entered a female compartment of a train at Moradabad with a whip in her hand and "whipped" all the female passengers out, on the ground that they were making the compartment dirty. The Traffic Superintendent would surely do well to impress on female ticket collectors the need for treating Indian female passengers with a little more consideration and courtesy than they seem to do at present. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th May, corroborates the above complaint.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th May, 1906.

Need for metalling the road from the Nigohan station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to Nagraon in the Lucknow district.

25. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th May, complains that as the road from the Nigohan station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to Nagraon is not metalled, the people of Nagraon and adjacent villages have to send their articles of trade to Lucknow and Cawnpore through agencies other than that of the railway, which not only causes them much inconvenience, but also entails a loss of revenue to the railway.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
25th May, 1906.

Overcrowding of third class carriages on Indian railways.

26. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th May, complaining that third class carriages on Indian railways are generally overcrowded, says that when tickets are issued to passengers at a station for a coming train, no thought is taken as to whether there is sufficient accommodation for them all in the train or not. The railway officials do not help the passengers to entering into or to get down from the carriages, nor do they see that not more than the prescribed number of passengers get into a compartment. While more than a sufficient number of first and second class carriages are attached to every train, all of which are seldom occupied, the number of third class carriages in a train is generally insufficient. The Government and the railway authorities would therefore do well to issue orders in future, (1) that a larger number of third class carriages be attached to every train, and that a reserve stock of third class carriages be always kept at all important stations to meet a sudden demand; (2) that extra trains be run during the Hindu marriage seasons as is done on the occasion of fairs; (3) that the guard of every train be required to wire to the next station not to issue tickets there if he finds the train already full; (4) that the railway police be directed to see that not more than the fixed number of passengers are in a compartment; and (5) that a Government officer be deputed to travel in every train whose duty it will be to bring any case of high-handedness or neglect on the part of the railway employés to the notice of the Government or of the railway authorities.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 28th May, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the Bengal and North-Western Railway.

27. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 28th May, complains that as there are no waiting rooms, and articles of food are not available at the stations on the Uska Bazar branch of the Bengal and North-Western Railway, passengers are put to great inconvenience. Third class carriages continue to be overcrowded on the occasion of fairs on this line.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th May, 1906.

A complaint against the executive officials of the Muhammadan shrine at Ajmere.

28. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th May, says that about a year ago a notice was sent by a number of Musalmans from certain towns, to the members of the managing committee of the Muhammadan shrine at Ajmere, complaining that the deputy trustee was misappropriating and extravagantly spending the income of the shrine, and that money is freely extorted from visitors to that holy place by the servants at the shrine, but that no steps seem to have yet been taken to stop the evils complained of. The managing authorities of the shrine are not well-advised to neglect their duty of exercising due control over the executive officials of the shrine, and it may become necessary for Government to take notice of their faulty management.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
23rd and 30th May, 1906.

The Indian Musalmans and the Sultan of Turkey.

1. THE Aligarh Institute Gazette in its combined issue of the 23rd and 30th May, publishes a long article from Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, Honorary Secretary to the Muhammadan College at Aligarh. In this article, the Nawab quotes a passage from the Vakīl (Amritsar) which says that it was weak-minded on the part of the trustees of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh to publish a message in the Pioneer that their college had nothing to do with the Muhammadan meeting lately held at that town, which had wired to the Government of India suggesting an amicable settlement of the Anglo-Turkish dispute in Egypt, to avoid causing pain to Indian Musalmans. Commenting upon the above indictment of the Aligarh College trustees by the Vakil, the Nawab says that neither he, the Secretary, nor Khan Bahadur Muzammil Ullah Khan the Joint Secretary of the College, were aware of any action having been taken on behalf of the College trustees in the matter, both of them having been away from Aligarh at the time. The telegram in the Pioneer to which the Vakīl takes objection was published by Shaikh Abdulla, a vakīl and a trustee of the College, in his own private capacity. No meeting of the trustees was held nor was their sanction obtained in any other way for the despatch of the telegram in question, and any action taken by a trustee of the Aligarh College in his private capacity cannot and should not be binding on the trustees of the College as a body. As regards the general question of sympathy of the Indian Musalmans with the Sultan of Turkey, the Nawab quotes passages from the writings of the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan to show that the Sultan cannot in any way be called to be the Khalifa of Musalmans. But it cannot be denied, he admits, that owing to the religious and racial connection with the Sultan, Indian Musalmans have natural sympathy with him, so that they cannot but share both in his joy and trouble. Indian Musalmans, by reason of religious community, would feel pain at any injury occurring, to any Muhammadan country whatever, whether it be Turkey, Persia, Morocco, or Afghanistan, even though the injury might be brought on by the folly, imprudence or mal-administration of the rulers themselves of those countries. But side by side with this religious fellow-feeling, Indian Musalmans owe the political duty of obedience and loyalty to the British Government whose subjects they are, so that in the case of any complication arising between England and Turkey or any other Muhammadan power they cannot do anything against the British Government: the only thing that they could possibly do in the circumstances would be to pray to God for the continuance of good relations between the two Governments. In another article the Nawab, quoting largely from Muhammadan religious books, endeavours to show that the Sultan of Turkey can in no sense be said to be the Khalifa of Indian Musalmans, but that this does not mean that they do not love him or care for the preservation of his Empire. Turkey is the greatest Muhammadan Empire at the present time, and the Musalmans all over the world naturally desire that it should remain uninjured. Any Indian Muhammadan, who denies this goodwill for the Sultan, is either a mean flatterer of the British Government, or has nothing of Islam in him.

AL BASHIR,
5th June, 1906.

Indian Musalmans and the Sultan of Turkey.

2. Al Bashīr (Etawah), of the 5th June, quoting some instances of Musalmans during the time of the prophet who, though subjected to severe tortures, refused to renounce their new faith, regrets that the Musalmans of the present day are so utterly destitute of moral courage and self-respect that they would not hesitate to tell an egregious lie from greed or from fear. Some Indian Musalmans would not scruple to announce that they have no sympathy with the Sultan of Turkey, in order to prevent the British Government from mistrusting them. There are probably a number of Musalmans who, if they were given the hope of obtaining a title, a seat in a darbar, an appointment under Government, or even only the honour of being allowed to shake hands with a Lieutenant-Governor, would not hesitate at cutting off the head of the Sultan; for did not the slayers of Imam Husain, a grandson of the prophet, call themselves Musalmans? But the fact remains that Indian Musalmans generally have sympathy not only with the Sultan of Turkey but with all the Muhammadan rulers on the face of the earth, and are anxious for the preservation of all the existing Muhammadan powers; so that whenever they learn that a Muhammadan power is in trouble they are distressed. If any friction arises between England and Turkey the Indian Musalmans are naturally pained to hear of it, but as they are well-wishers of the British Government, they only pray to God for the continuance of good relations between the two countries. Such being the real state of the feeling of the Indian Musalmans, those of them who assure the Government that they have no sympathy with the Sultan are downright sycophants, while those who wire to Government not to break with Turkey are fools, as the Government itself does not require their advice.

QULQUL,
28th May, 1906.

Musalmans and politics.

3. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 28th May, publishing a translation of a portion of the speech which Mr. A Rasul delivered, as President, at the late Bengal Provincial Conference at Barisal, says that though it agrees with him in holding that the Musalmans cannot be expected to improve their position so long as they adhere to their present policy of political abstinence, yet it does not think that the Musalmans will gain anything by joining the political organization of the Hindus, who wish only to make a cat's paw of them in securing their own ends. Indian Musalmans have long been accustomed to depend for the improvement of their condition upon the favour of the powers that be, and have never tried to win their way in the struggles of the world by their own exertions. So that unless they give up their sloth and desire for slight temporary gains, and learn to be independent, there is little chance of their improvement.

HINDI PRADIP,
June 1906.

Indians under British rule.

4. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for June, in a long article endeavours to show that it is due to the utter helplessness of Indians that the British rulers, having nothing to fear from them, deny all sorts of rights and privileges to them. Englishmen are quite averse to allowing Indians to acquire any kind of power, lest the latter should get out of their grip. All that they care about the Indians is to see them keep body and soul together, so that they may continue to exact service from them. But this continued distrust of Indians by Englishmen is a mistake. Indians are a most grateful and loyal people, and Englishmen have received positive proof of this fact more than once; but they do not yet give up their sinister policy, which is dictated either by their selfishness, or is owing to their being forewarned of some very serious misfortune which is destined to befall them.

HINDI PRADIP,
June 1906.

Alleged stoppage of almost all the sources of income to Indians under British rule.

5. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for June, laments that Indians are unable to compete with machine-made and gaudy foreign articles and have lost almost all their indigenous industries and trades, so that their only remaining sources of income are agriculture and service. As regards agriculture too, the greater portion of its income is taken by Government as land revenue; and, the balance being too small to enable agriculturists to make both ends meet, the result is that the peasantry are impoverished. With reference to Government service, the lowest posts, which require drudgery, are given to natives, the higher ones being all reserved for Europeans. But while the sources of Indians' incomes are thus stopped in almost all directions, their expenditure in the shape of manifold taxes, subscriptions, donations, presents, darbar expenses, litigation charges, &c., has largely increased under the British Government. Such being the case, the condition of the Indians of the present day is really very pitiable. It is surprising that Indians are still able to drag on their miserable existence at all.

ADVOCATE,
31st May, 1906.

A scandalous procedure alleged to have been adopted by Sir Bampfylde Fuller in the case of a prisoner under sentence of death praying for mercy.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 31st May, says :—One reads with shame and indignation a piece of news that came the other day from far Sylhet. It was to the effect that a prisoner sentenced to death submitted a memorial to Sir J. B. Fuller praying His Honour to exercise the prerogative of mercy, and in case of rejection to transmit it to the Viceroy for the said purpose. Sir J. B. Fuller rejected this prayer for mercy, but forwarded the memorial to the Viceroy, and passed orders for the execution to be carried out on the morning of the 21st May, which was accordingly done. The same evening a telegram was received at Sylhet from the Government of India stopping the execution, if the prisoner had not been already hanged. Who is responsible for this loss of a life? The Lieutenant-Governor ought, in the first instance, to have refrained from fixing a date for execution when he himself had acceded to a part of the prisoner's prayer in forwarding his application to the Viceroy. In the second place, the Indian Government could also easily stay execution in order to consider the case. In either case the postponement would not have turned the world topsy-turvy nor upset the Partition, but could save a life to be of use to somebody.

RIYAZ-UL AKHBAR,
1st June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

7. The Riyáz-ul Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st June, states that efforts are being made by certain influential members of the Allahabad bar to secure signatures of the leading citizens and vakils in the Agra, Benares, Meerut and Gorakhpur Divisions, against the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, with a view to deluding the Government into believing that the people of the whole Province are averse to the change, while the fact is that, with the exception of Allahabad, public opinion in all other places in the United Provinces is in favour of the location of the High Court at Lucknow. The test question in the matter should be whether it would be more convenient for the people of the Meerut, Agra, Benares, and Gorakhpur divisions and of Oudh to attend the court at Lucknow or at Allahabad, and Government should decide the question in accordance with the answer received thereto. The Almora Akhbár of the 31st May, says that if this measure were carried out, the majority of the inhabitants of the United Provinces would find greater facility in attending the court.

TAFRIH,
7th June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

8. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th June, says that as the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow) and the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), as well as public opinion in the United Provinces are in favour of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, it is very probable that the transfer would ultimately be effected. The editor does not understand why some of the members of the Allahabad bar and some Allahabad papers should, in utter disregard of the desire of the people of the whole Province, oppose the measure from purely selfish motives. Allahabad has made no kind of improvement during the time it has been the seat of the High Court, and is not likely to make any in future ; while Lucknow, which was long the capital of an oriental Government and still possesses some valuable industries, bids fair to thrive and prosper still further if the High Court is located there.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd June, 1906.

The Indian Police.

9. The Nasím-i-Agra, of the 3rd June, observes that Government adopted the system of recruiting the police force in this country, mainly from among the children of the soil, probably under the impression that the Indians themselves would be better able to effectively protect the lives and property of their fellow-countrymen. But it is much to be regretted that Government has been sorely disappointed in its expectations in the matter. The whole of the Police force from the lowest constable to the highest Inspector oppress and victimise the people in many ways, either to extort money or to exhibit their prowess: in short their conduct is so disgraceful that it brings the whole Indian nation into discredit, and the Government has for some time been considering how to reform them.

INDIAN PUNCH,
28th May, 1906.

Complaint against certain Municipal employes at Deoband, district Saharanpur.

10. A correspondent of the Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 28th May, complains, on the authority of the Akhbár-i-Ám of Lahore, that a respectable parda-nashin lady was recently put to much trouble and disgrace by certain octroi employés at Deoband, district Saharanpur. Travelling alone by rail, the lady arrived at the railway station, Deoband, and took an ekka to proceed to a village in the neighbourhood. At the octroi barrier near the station her ekka was stopped, and she was asked if she possessed anything dutiable. She replied that excepting wearing apparel she had nothing with her. On this, she was ordered to come down from the ekka, and her luggage was searched. A petticoat was taken out of the luggage, and the lady was asked to pay duty on it. She urged that the garment was a used one. She was thereupon asked to put off the dress she was wearing and to put on the petticoat in question. At first she refused to do so in the open place, but, on being threatened to be sent up to the head octroi office, where she feared she might be subjected to still greater indignities, she most reluctantly did so. The conduct of the Municipal employés concerned was most reprehensible, and Government would do well to punish them.

BHARAT JIWAN,
28th May, 1906.

Prostitutes at Benares.

11. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 28th May, pointing out that the residence of public prostitutes in the streets at Benares not unoften lead to bloodshed, robbery, theft and other serious crimes, and giving some specific instances in which counterfeiters of Government coin were caught red-handed in the houses of certain prostitutes, urges that steps should be taken to locate them somewhere outside the town. The editor further complains that there are a number of secret brothels in the town where ladies of respectable families are decoyed by procuresses and ruined. The houses in which prostitutes live or which are used as brothels generally belong to the raíses of the town, some of whom are members of the Municipal Board. This is probably the reason why the Municipal Board pays little attention to the complaints repeatedly made in the press regarding prostitutes.

ARYA MITRA,
1st June, 1906.

Certain Municipal complaints at Agra.

12. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st June, complains (1) that the force of water at the stand pipes in Agra is very weak; (2) that in the evening the water is turned on at 4, and is stopped at 6 or 6-30; (3) that the water used in watering the roads is taken from the same pumps from which the public receive their supply; and (4) that the lanes, especially the Mansádevi Galli and Hing-ki-Mandi, are as usually filthy. In another place the editor adds that pipe water is not received at all in elevated parts of the town, which exposes the residents to very great inconvenience in these hot days. The drains are not washed for days together, while sickness has broken out in the town. The District Magistrate and the Municipal Board ought to attend to these serious complaints.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd June, 1906.

Supply of pipe-water at Agra.

13. A correspondent of the Nasím-i-Agra, of the 3rd June, states that, since some letters have appeared in the Pioneer complaining against the scanty supply of pipe-water at Agra, there has been a slight increase in the supply; but expresses surprise that while the annual expense of the water-works at Agra is greater than that at Allahabad, Benares, Cawnpore or Meerut, the period for which the water is turned on during the 24 hours at Agra should be much shorter than at any of those places. The consumption of coal too at Agra is greater than or equal to that at other places, but the pressure at which water is supplied in the former town is much less.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th June, 1906.

Water-supply at Agra.

14. A correspondent of the Nasim-i-Agra, of the 7th June, referring to the continuous complaint regarding the shortage of pipe-water at Agra for the last two years, suggests that in order to satisfactorily remove the complaint the Municipal Board, instead of laying down more pipes or increasing the pressure, had better construct a big reservoir for storage of pipe-water from which water may regularly and constantly be supplied to the public, as is done in the cantonment.

ARYA MITRA,
8th June, 1906.

Water supply at Agra.

15. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th June, referring to the shortage of water supply from the pumps at Agra in these days, says that in order to make up for this deficiency, the municipal board has hit upon the plan of sending water-carts round the city, and allowing the people to take as much water for drinking purposes from them as they require. But the poorer classes only can derive benefit from this arrangement, and not the higher classes also.

(e).—Education.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th June, 1906.

Female education in India.

16. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 7th June, referring to the steps which the United Provinces, Bengal and Punjab Governments propose to take for spreading female education in India, says that there is a great need for promoting education among the fair sex in this country, and that no efforts should be spared to further this cause.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR,
May, 1906.

Financial condition of agriculturists in India.

17. The Zamindár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for May, observes that as the debts which the cultivators in a single village owe to mahajans generally amount to thousands of rupees, the establishment of agricultural banks, with small capitals, cannot possibly render any material help to agriculturists, and says that nothing short of the extension of the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act to the whole of India is expected to meet the difficulty of the situation. But even this will be a palliative measure only, and Government would do well to probe the real cause of the poverty of agricultural classes which compels them to borrow money again and again. This cause is not their prodigality or recklessness, as it is alleged to be, but the high rates of the assessments of land revenue in which reduction should be made, if the financial condition of agriculturists is to be permanently improved.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
31st May, 1906.

The withdrawal of the Bande Mátaram circular in Eastern Bengal.

18. The Almora Akhbár, of the 31st May, referring to the withdrawal of the Bande Mátaram circular in Eastern Bengal, says that it is at a loss to understand why the bare utterance of Bande Mátaram should have become so offensive to the British officers in that Province. The steps which the authorities, in their zeal to suppress the cry of Bande Mátaram, were led to take were so atrocious and calculated to so greatly lower the dignity of the British Government in the eyes of the people, that one could scarcely dream of the possibility of their adoption under British rule.

KANYA KUBJ HITKARI,
June, 1906.

Swadeshism.

19. The Kánya Kubj Hitkári (Cawnpore), for June, referring to the Swadeshi movement, says that Kanya Kubj Brahmans should also do their best to patronize India-made articles, urging that where home-made articles are not used by the people, the industrial classes are pauperized, crime increases, and the wealth of the country is continually drained off to foreign lands.

MOHINI,
1st June, 1906.

Strike of the medical students at Lahore.

20. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 1st June, referring to the continuance of the strike of the medical students at Lahore, says that though it is 18 days since it began, no steps seem to have yet been taken to bring it to an end. The Principal of the Medical College is all powerful, and he continues unrelenting. Threats of confiscation of their hereditary estates has been held out to the Kashmir students through the British Resident in that State. The students are not allowed to assemble in any place for consultation. The affair has caused much sensation in the Punjab, and it is high time that the Government of India interfered.

HINDOSTHAN,
2nd June, 1906.

Need for prohibiting the sale of ganja, charas and bhang along with liquor to young boys and girls.

21. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 2nd June, approving of the Madras Government's order prohibiting the sale of liquor to boys and girls below the age of 14, observes that ganja, bhang and charas are also very injurious intoxicants, the number of persons becoming insane by the use of these drugs being, according to the Government annual reports on lunatic asylums, much greater than that of those addicted to liquor. The Government would therefore do well to put these drugs also under a similar ban.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
4th June, 1906.

Need for union between Hindus and Musalmans.

22. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th June, quotes a portion of the speech delivered by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk on the occasion of the last death anniversary of the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan at Aligarh, in which he regretted the widening of the gulf between the Hindus and Musalmans since the mutiny, and urged the need for promoting union and goodwill between the two communities (vide article No. 25, on page 206 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), and observes that so long as the two communities do not join hands in ameliorating their condition, there is no hope of their ever being able to make material progress in any direction. They should not therefore pay heed to the insinuations of those persons among them who by their writings and utterances lose no opportunity to embitter their mutual feelings. Nobody in the world should, for instance, have any objection to the Swadeshi movement in India, but unfortunately there are men in the Musalman community who are doing their best to keep their co-religionists aloof even from this beneficial movement.

V.—LEGISLATION.

RAJPUT,
31st May, 1906.

Alleged need for making modifications in the Agra Tenancy Act.

23. The Rájpút (Agra), of the 31st May, says that, as the Agra Tenancy Act has failed to lessen ejectment suits, as it was intended to do, and has on the contrary led to a large increase in the institution of suits between landlord and tenant, Government would do well to make some necessary modifications in the Act as early as possible.

EXPRESS,
31st May, 1906.

Working of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act.

24. The Express (Lucknow), of the 31st May, in commenting on the last year's report on the working of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act, says :—The representatives of the people pointed out forcibly when the measure was in the bill stage that one result would be contraction of the ryot's credit ; the second, a fall in price of land ; the third, difficulty on the part of the ryot in being financed by the money-lender in times of need, and consequent greater demand for takavi advances. The facts revealed in the report under notice corroborate one and every argument noted above. As to the effect of the Act on credit the Collectors report in no uncertain terms. Mr. Silberrad writes :—" There has undoubtedly been a contraction of credit, but, as remarked in last year's report, the Encumbered Estates Act is at least equally responsible for the result, which has affected mainly the relations of the larger money-lenders to the larger proprietors. Money-lenders are shy of advancing large sums for long terms on landed security."

* * * * * * * *

In Jalaun, where the injury caused by the frost was extremely severe, and where the harvests of the present year have almost completely failed, money-lenders generally appear to have considerably restricted their transaction. Mr. Cooke states :—" The complaint is universal, and I have no doubt that credit has contracted. . . . . The large capitalists have undoubtedly to a large extent ceased lending money on the security of land."

* * * * * * * *

The facts are there, no matter what attempts are made to intervene between the premises and the conclusions naturally to be drawn from them. If loans are hard to obtain, it is not due to want of capital with the lender, but to the sense of insecurity created in his mind by the Act.

* * * * * * * *

The Board of Revenue alludes with apparent pride that a reduction in ceremonial expenditure, due to contraction of credit, is said to be noticeable among the smaller proprietors in the south of Allahabad. . . . . The prosperous condition for the Indian ryot has to be notified to the world by the prevention of the use of luxuries, forced upon the ryot by his state-manufactured inability to get money by hook or by crook. By reducing the credit of the ryot and by asking him to spend less on ceremonial occasions the petty trader is simply stranded. To talk of non-interference with the trade under the circumstances is meaningless.

VI.—Railway.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th June, 1906.

Ill-treatment of a hand-cart driver by the jamadar of railway coolies at the Moradabad Railway station.

25. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 5th June, complains that on the 30th ultimo Ram Autár, jamadar of railway coolies at Moradabad, accompanied by a number of the coolies, stopped one Muhammad Nabi, a hand-cart driver, while the latter was carrying some bundles of betel leaves on his cart from the railway station to the city, and throwing the bundles out of his cart, and beating him with lathis seized the cart, giving out that it was wanted for carrying some luggage of the District Traffic Superintendent. Such high-handed proceedings on the part of railway employés cannot be too strongly condemned.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th June, 1906.

A complaint regarding the shops of Indian articles of food at the railway stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

26. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 5th June, states that when the contract for selling Indian articles of food to passengers at the various railway stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway was in the first instance given to Chunni Lal and Muhammad Husain, a license fee was charged to them for the same. Subsequently at the representation of the vernacular press that it was not fair to tax Indian food at the stations while refreshments supplied to Europeans there were untaxed, the license fee was remitted; but the contractors were required to pay a rent for the shops they opened at the stations at the rate of Rs. 3 each per mensem. The total number of the shops started by the contractors at the various stations at the outset was only 16, but it has now been increased to 46, while the amount of rent paid to the railway continues to be Rs. 48 only per mensem. This entails a clear loss of Rs. 90 a month to the railway, and the editor would like to know why the local railway authorities have not yet brought the fact of the increase in the shops to the notice of the Traffic Superintendent.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th June, 1906.

Publication of a pamphlet by a newly converted Musalman at Delhi, against the Arya Samaj.

27. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th June, in its correspondence columns publishes an article in which the writer, quoting certain passages from a book entitled Árya Samaj ki pol (hollowness of the Arya Samaj) written by one Babu Jagdamba Prasad alias Abdul Azíz at Delhi (vide article No. 47 on page 251 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), says that the passages in question are inflammatory, inducing the Musalmans, and even Hindus, to make short work of the Arya Samajists who, he says, have been causing discord between Hindus and Musalmans. The Musalmans also use most objectionable language in attacking the doctrines of the Arya Samaj in the public streets at Delhi. All this is calculated to excite Musalmans against Arya Samajists, and might lead the former to act towards the latter as the Musalmans have lately behaved towards the Hindus in Mymensingh.

SAHIFA,
5th June, 1906

Complaints against the employés of the Muhammadan shrine at Ajmere.

28. A correspondent of the Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th June, complains that visitors to Ajmere are, as a rule, freely subjected to extortions by the employés of the shrine of Khawja Moin-ud-din Chishti in that town. As soon as a train arrives at the Ajmere station, some forty or fifty underlings of the shrine surround the passengers that get down from the train, and take them to the sarai close by, which is called Chishti Chaman, and belongs to the shrine, and, offering them lodgings there for a small fee, induce them to put up there. A short time after some of these underlings again appear and offer their services as guides in order to pay a visit to the shrine, and there they extort money from them on various pretexts. When a visitor is at last about to depart from the sarai, a new man, other than the one who settled the lodging fee at the time of his arrival, appears on the scene and obliges him to pay double and even treble the amount of the fee agreed upon before. All this is very unsatisfactory, and the local authorities should see that visitors to Ajmere are not unduly harassed or victimised by the employés of the shrine.

ARYA MITRA,
8th June, 1906.

Alleged abduction of two Indian ladies from Hathras by the missionaries at Agra.

29. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th June, says that the criminal suit that was instituted some time ago against the missionaries at Agra for the offence of abducting two Indian ladies from Hathras is not progressing. The whereabouts of the ladies are said to be unknown, so that summonses for their attendance in court cannot be served on them. Had such a charge been brought against an Indian, God knows to what miseries the poor fellow would have been subjected by this time.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

TAFRIH,
7th June, 1906.

Protest against the rumoured enquiry by the police from private persons at Lucknow as to what newspapers they take in.

30. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th June, says that hitherto enquiries were annually made by the police regarding the circulation of and other similar matters relating to newspapers, but that the editors are at this time being also required to tell what classes of men generally subscribe to their newspapers. What is, however, worse still is that there is a rumour that private gentlemen are being asked by the police at Lucknow to say what papers they take in. If this rumour is true, the enquiry is a most objectionable one. Newspapers do not receive much encouragement from the public in this country at present, and the kind of enquiry Government is reported to have been making is calculated to lead many to discontinue to subscribe to papers from fear.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, April, 1906.

Conflicts between Asia and Europe.

1. A correspondent of the Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for April, giving a brief account of the various conflicts between Asia and Europe in the past, says:—Jerusalem, the sacred place of the Christians, had fallen into the hands of the Saracens, and the European knights very nobly resolved to wrest it from the infidels. Nine times the picked chivalry of Europe battled with the Saracen for its possession, and nine times the Islamite warriors came out victorious from the fray, and even to-day the banner of Mahomet is fluttering defiantly over the walls of Jerusalem.

* * * * * * *

Mahomet II, at the early age of twenty-three, took Constantinople and ended the Eastern Empire. The greatness of the Turks went on increasing from decade to decade and from century to century, till it reached the zenith of its lustre and might under Soliman the Magnificent.

* * * * * * *

Turkey began to degenerate from the eighteenth century, and has been going in very recent times further and further on the downward path. With her decay Europe has been getting more and more powerful.

* * * * * * *

Napoleon once said, "Europe is but a mole-hill, all the great Empires flourished in Asia." His great ambition was to be master of the East. He had predicted a monumental war between the two continents, and believed that the older continent would come out victorious in the end. After two centuries of sleep, Asia has again girded up her loins, and the new movement has started.

* * * * * * *

What the result of this new movement will be no one can say with any certitude yet. Truth glimmers but faintly through the veil of futurity and with expectant minds we can only ask "Watchman, what of the Night?" and of the Dawn?

EXPRESS, 7th June, 1906.

The Tabah dispute.

2. The Express (Lucknow), of the 7th June, says:—Reuter has already made us familiar with one version of the Tabah dispute and of the proposed settlement. The other version is supplied by Egyptian and Arabic papers brought by the last mail. These state that the dispute arose out of the Turkish demand that Egypt should raise no forts or other military fortifications in the Sinai Peninsula, and that this demand having been conceded by Egypt the Sultan has issued instructions for his troops to evacuate Tabah. Simultaneously with that a joint commission of delimitation has been nominated; and meanwhile the status quo will be retained. This fundamentally differs from the statements in the English Press. It is further noteworthy that Ghazi Mukhtar Pasha, Turkish High Commissioner at Cairo, has not been recalled from Egypt as has been given out by English papers.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, April, 1906.

British Imperialism in India.

3. A correspondent of the Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for April, says:—The appearance of a strong Labour Party in the House of Commons is of great importance to India. Whether or not Messrs. John Burns and Keir Hardie will co-operate with Sir Henry Cotton and other Indian friends in the House, they will surely set their face against Imperialism with all its dangerous methods and ends. The seven years of Lord Curzon's administration afforded India ample illustrations of the perils of the new creed.

* * * * * * *

The exploitation of India for the benefit of the British plutocracy, the dominance of militarism, the subordination of the people to the ruling oligarchy, intense centralization of authority, a spirit of despotism and intolerance—these were the most prominent features of Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty.

* * * * * * *

The exploitation of India for the benefit of the moneyed aristocracy and the middle classes of the British Isles has always been the main policy of the ruling country. It has been the same from the formation of the East India Company nearly three centuries ago down to the present day. The East India Company robbed India's wealth without the hollow pretence of philanthropy; but now though the exploitation is carried on more thoroughly and on wider areas, the sordid motives of the exploiters are concealed by hollow pretences of humanity and civilization. England has gone on building her world-wide Empire in order that she may have the lion's share of the wealth of the world, and she does not mean to spare India from the operation of this policy. Not only England, but all the Western nations assume that it is their natural right to subjugate the so-called lower races whose lands are exploited for their own enrichment, and whose cheap labour is employed for the same purpose under conditions of compulsion almost constituting slavery. It is conveniently assumed that there will be no development of the resources of the tropical countries under their own native Government. "We cannot leave these countries barren; it is the duty of the more civilized Western nations to see that they are developed for the good of the world. While men cannot colonise these lands and develop the natural resources by the labour of their own hands, they can only organize and superintend the labour of the natives. By doing this, they can educate the natives in the arts of industry and stimulate in them a desire for material and moral progress implanting new 'wants' which form in every society the roots of civilization." These are the arguments by which the spoliation of the world is justified. India is no exception and being politically a subject country and powerless to defend herself against the foreigners that covet her wealth and subject her to a steady process of impoverishment, she is robbed of her vast and rich resources, and the cheap labour of her people is utilized by foreign exploiters, not for the good of the labourers, nor for the good of the world, but for the special benefit of the handful of white men, who, backed by their status and influence as members of the ruling race, are able to appropriate the wealth which should go to the sustenance, comfort and progress of the indigenous population.

* * * * * * *

On no lower races in the world have Western Imperialists produced any beneficial results. Examining the policy and the aim of European countries in their interference with the weaker countries of Asia and Africa, Mr. Hobson, the author of Imperialism—a Study, comes to the conclusion that nowhere can it be contended that either the British or any other European nation is governing these lower races upon the same enlightened principles which are professed and sometimes practised in governing themselves.

* * * * * * *

India's hope of her future lies in the increasing influence of the British working classes in the Government of the Empire, and in the eventual acquisition of self-government by the Indian people.

* * * * * * *

A sudden rejuvenation such as has come over Japan only will save India.

* * * * * * *

India's future consists of two alternatives, either complete autonomy under which she will pursue her own evolution on the basis of her past career, or she will perish.

The Muhammadans and politics.

4. A Hindu correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th June, publishes the following open letter to the students in the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, in continuation of his previous letter (vide article No. 5, on page 323 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906):—Brothers,—I hope my first letter has attracted your attention and led to some fruitful discussion amongst yourselves. I do not for a moment imagine that there will be any general unanimity regarding the opinion expressed by me, nor do I suppose that my motives will be allowed to pass unquestioned and uncriticised. But I am prepared to be misunderstood and misrepresented if I have only the satisfaction of feeling that my words have succeeded in removing the misapprehensions of even a small number of your co-religionists. I shall ask you to place before the public your own views of this question, so that we may be able to see our difficulties and try to find a way out of them. Pray don't imagine that a discussion of this nature will lead to unpleasantness, provided we carry it on in a calm and dispassionate spirit with the sole object of remedying the present state of affairs. The question is an all important one and the exigencies of our situation at the present day demand a speedy solution.

Brothers, we have reached the parting of the ways, and we should decide which way we are to proceed. Recent events, specially in East Bengal, have opened the eyes of even those who till the other day prided themselves on their indifference to politics, to the gravity of the present position. Even they have begun to feel that if we are anxious not to have our rights trampled under foot by masterful rulers like Sir Bampfylde Fuller we shall have to carry on a long and arduous struggle against the forces that are working to-day. What will be the attitude of your community now ? Will you sit with your hands folded and let your rights be snatched away from you even without a word of protest ? Do you really believe that the tide of re-action which has set in affects only the Hindus and not the Muhammadans ? Who was Mr. Rasul, the president of the Barisal Conference ? Remember, as soon as you show an inclination to take part in political agitation the blow that you will receive will be not a whit less hard than those which fall on the Hindus. But will this fear cow you down ? I for one should be sorry to believe that the mild risks of a constitutional agitation will frighten the Musalmans. A soldier runs many a risk of life, but it is he who serves his country. It is nobler to die for our own country than to lead a selfish and ignoble life in ease and security. Would you prefer a liveried menial, a court flunky to a Surendra Nath ? Choose what type of men you will have, and the future of your country and community will depend upon your choice.

One who separates brother from brother is not only the enemy of one but of both. You and we are the children of the same soil, and those who try to disunite us are our common enemies. Beware of these tactful men. They have done incalculable injury in the past, but let us now make them feel that their game is up. Let us not like small children exchange our valued possessions for mere toys. Will we sell our birthright for a mess of pottage ? One ruler pats the Hindu on the back, and he begins to dance to his tune. Another favours the Muhammadan, and the latter's delight knows no bounds. Thus is carried on this game which has well nigh brought us to the brink of ruin. Take an instance in point. The ruler of the East Bengal is alleged to be very fond of the Muhammadan. I would measure this intensity of his fondness by the value of the boons he may confer upon you. He may create some Muhammadan Deputy Collectors, Sub-Registrars and Inspectors of Police—regarding which too I feel considerable doubt—but I am sure he will do nothing better for you. These posts may come; but look at the price you have to pay for them. If we do not protest against measures like those of Sir Bampfylde Fuller the little spirit that we may possess is bound to be crushed out. Now it is for you to decide whether you will have spirit and manliness in the nation, or a few minor posts instead. Every well-wisher of the country will pray that your decision may be a correct one.

Have you ever paused to consider how deplorable has been the attitude of your community in connection with the recent Barisal affair. Assuming that you have no sympathy with the Hindus, why on earth did you not express your sympathy with Mr. Rasul, a distinguished member of your own community ? Does a Muhammadan who makes a common cause with the Hindus forfeit all claims to the sympathy and support of his own co-religionists ? You feel, and rightly too for the Musalmans in Turkey, but apparently have reserved no corner in your heart for such culprits as are guilty of the dire offence of taking part in political agitation. This policy is unfortunate, to say the least of it, and if pursued for some time will produce results which I shudder to think of.

Brothers, you of course know by what name the Musalmans of other countries call you. They call you Hindus, and very right too. You are nothing if not Hindus. There is little difference between Hindus and Hindus. So let us sink our differences and work harmoniously together for our common country. What could we not do in these provinces alone if we were only to be united ? Not only would fresh life and vigour be infused into the political activities alone, but the social and industrial movements would also acquire new life and strength. With no suspicion and distrust amongst us, our community would be a source of comfort and strength to the other brothers. My faith is that there is no such thing in this world as chance. The Musalmans have not come to India by chance; an all-wise Providence has sent them here with a set purpose. And the presence of the English too is not without its own object. To me the purpose with which we have all been brought together is to make this ancient land great once more, so that she may take a high place among the nations of the world. The goal before us is a happy, united and prosperous India, and blessed is he who honestly strives to bring that goal nearer to us. India, if she be destined to rise—as I believe she is—can never rise as the India of the Hindus or of the Muhammadans, but she will rise as the India of the Hindus and Muhammadans alike. The task of evolving an Indian nationality is a grand and noble one, and it is this task, humble though I am, I pray you and the Hindus alike to take up.

ADVOCATE,

A protest against the leasing out of the Pearl Fisheries of Ceylon to a syndicate formed by Sir West Ridgeway, late Governor of that colony.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd June, says:—That Lord Curzon has accepted the Lectureship of a Cambridge College was a piece of news that ill accorded with many Indians' idea of a ruler, even when on the retired list. Something akin to disgust was created in the minds of Indians when the late Sir Alexander Mackenzie, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the whole of Bengal, founded and became Chairman of the Indian Development Company (?) Limited. Sir West Ridgeway has made us feel scandalised by his doings in this direction. Max says in Capital:—"In 1903 Sir West Ridgeway ceased to be Governor, and towards the end of 1904 he seemed to have formed a syndicate and approached the Colonial Office with a proposal to lease these Ceylon pearl fisheries for twenty years at a rent which was eventually fixed at Rs. 3,10,000 per annum. He further agreed to take over for Rs. 1,20,000 certain machinery which had cost Rs. 1,61,529, and to spend not less than Rs. 50,000 per annum on the improvement of the pearl banks and the cultivation of the oysters, and this unconscionable bargain was agreed to by Mr. Lyttelton." If this be true anything more scandalous and outrageous it is difficult to conceive. Here is a highly paid officer of the Crown making use of the knowledge, he acquired at the Crown expense, to rob Ceylon of over Rs. 20 lakhs per annum! It is clear that the matter cannot rest here, and it is high time that pensioned officers of Government were prohibited from being connected directly or indirectly with the formation of syndicates or companies, the object of which is to get any concession or monopoly from Government. Lord Elgin has, we learn, sanctioned the Ceylon Pearl Fishery Ordinance. It means that Sir West Ridgeway is to be allowed to make use of knowledge gained at State cost for his very personal gain.

AL AZIZ,

Need for appointing a European as Prime Minister in Hyderabad.

6. A correspondent of Al Aziz (Agra), of the 7th June, observing that ever since the death of the elder Sir Salar Jang, the post of the Prime Minister in Hyderabad has constantly been changing hands, says there is a rumour that the present incumbent too is going to be shortly removed. Some persons have suggested that Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk should be appointed to the post. But he is already an outcast official of Hyderabad. Besides, he is now grown very old and infirm, and is wholly occupied in the affairs of the Aligarh College. Moreover, his appointment will necessarily make Hyderabad a preserve for the Aligarh Muhammadan party. The writer therefore urges that the best course, under the circumstances, will be to appoint a European as Minister in Hyderabad as well as in other Native States as vacancies occur.

A native woman shot at Muttra by a European employé on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway.

7. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 4th June, says:—A Muttra telegram states that a European Railway employé on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway shot the wife of a low caste man instead of a mad dog at Muttra, and compromised the matter by giving the man some money and promising to support his children. We are told that after the matter was successfully hushed up the Sahib refused to maintain the poor fellow's children. This may be the European way of keeping promises, but what we are most concerned with is that no police enquiry has as yet been held in the matter.

The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 6th June, and the Express (Lucknow), of the 7th idem also publish the telegram.

QULQUL,
4th June, 1906.

Cruel treatment of certain prisoners in the District jail, Bijnor.

8. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 4th June, says that eight Hindus who were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment by a lower court were, on appeal to the Sessions Judge, released on bail from the Bijnor jail on the 31st May last. They complained that the jail officials, considering them to be well-to-do men, had beaten them most severely with a view to extorting money from them. The skin of their bodies was all torn, bearing evident marks of a severe flogging. Instances of the perpetration of such cruelties on the part of jail officials are by no means uncommon in this country.

A complaint against the Cantonment Magistrate, Lucknow.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th June, says:—The mode of dealing justice by the Cantonment Magistrate of Lucknow appears to be rather curious: it has produced consternation in the Sadar Bazar. To fine offenders without holding regular enquiries in the Court is surely irregular. A curious story reaches us of teaching manners to a police constable.

ADVOCATE,

A complaint against the Cantonment Magistrate, Lucknow.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th June, asks:—Has the Local Government delegated to the Cantonment Magistrate, Lucknow, the power to appoint Honorary Magistrates? Otherwise how are now and then cases sent to some traders in Sadar Bazar for enquiry and report?

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th June, 1906.

Trial of criminal cases by touring officers in their camps.

11. The Nasím-i-Agra of the 11th June, refers to an order recently issued by the Chief Court Punjab (?) directing all magistrates who go out on tour to dismiss no criminal case in their camp on the ground of non-appearance of the complainant, without fully satisfying themselves that a notice of the place of their encampment on the particular date fixed for hearing his case was duly served on him, and says that this order will be of great value to the public. Touring officers would also do well not to try those cases in their camps the parties to which live at a great distance, and thereby save them from unnecessary expense in attending at the camps instead of at the headquarters.

CITIZEN,
11th June, 1906.

A person fined on account of his dog barking at the Deputy Commissioner of Purulia in Bengal.

12. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th June, says:—A dog had the audacity to bark at the Deputy Commissioner of Purulia in Bengal when he came to the house of the master of the animal on a bicycle. The owners of the dog were sent up for trial under section 289 of the Indian Penal Code, and one of them, Karusha, was fined twenty rupees.

CITIZEN,
11th June, 1906.

Mr. S. Sarbadhicary, a barrister-at-law, in trouble for making certain remarks on the Judges of the North-Western Provinces High Court.

13. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th June, writes:—Mr. S. Sarbadhicary, a barrister-at-law and advocate of the North-Western Provinces High Court, has been served by the authorities with a notice to show cause why he should not be disbarred because of his having made remarks on the Judges of the High Court calculated to lower their dignity.

Mr. S. Sarbadhicary, while arguing a criminal revision case before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Richards, was called on by his Lordship to hold his tongue and sit down. This was complied with, but the retaliation has taken the form of a notice threatening action for defamation, civil and criminal. We wonder in what quarter the moon is.

HINDUSTANI,
13th June, 1906.

Alleged hard lot of supervisor-kanungos and their peons in the United Provinces.

14. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 13th June, complains that although supervisor-kanungos in the United Provinces have always to be on tour they receive the same salary as registrar kanungos who are always at their tahsils. A field allowance of Rs. 5 or Rs. 10 is given to a certain proportion of the supervisor-kanungos. But even those who receive this allowance cannot make both ends meet, because they have to keep a decent horse, and have always to be moving about. The writer therefore suggests that all supervisor-kanungos should be given a horse allowance of Rs. 15 a month. These very useful officials have another grievance in the matter of promotion. Their claims however well up they may be in their work are generally overlooked in favour of new certificated men from the Cawnpore Agricultural School. The writer also complains that while the pay of the tahsili peons has recently been raised to Rs. 6 a month, those serving with supervisor-kanungos have been left out in the cold.

HINDUSTANI,
13th June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

15. A Basti correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 13th June, referring to the question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, says that only three persons, namely the editors of the Oudh Akhbár, Advocate and Riyáz-ul-Akhbár, all of whom are residents of Lucknow, have up to this time advocated this proposed transfer, and that their opinion has evidently been dictated by selfish motives. Allahabad is a very important place of pilgrimage for Hindus who form the great majority of litigants in the High Court, and are readily provided with lodgings by the Prayagwals or local pandas, whenever they have occasion to visit that town for prosecution of their suits in that court. On the other hand, Lucknow which is not a sacred place for any class of Indians would not be able to provide ready accommodation for the large number of litigants who would visit it in case the High Court is transferred there. Again, if the proposed transfer is carried out, it will no doubt increase the splendour and prosperity of Lucknow, but it will prove the ruin of Allahabad; and, in the absence of any other object to be gained, is it just to improve one town at the expense of another?

A burglary at Azamgarh.

16. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th June, on the authority of a correspondent, says:—A daring burglary has been committed at the house of Babu Mahadeo Prasad Golwara, one of the princely bankers of Azamgarh, nearly three lakhs of rupees and a ghara of jewels having been stolen. Police investigation has not as yet succeeded in tracing the culprits of the stolen property, only a few hundred rupees having been recovered.

HINDUSTANI,
13th June, 1906.

Selection of Deputy Superintendents of Police, and assignment of duties to them in the United Provinces.

17. The Hindustáni (Lucknow) of the 13th June, stating that a committee is reported to sit at Naini Tal on the 15th idem to select candidates for the new posts of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces, expresses a hope that good care would be taken to nominate men of highest qualifications, for the success of the new scheme will greatly depend on the kind of men appointed in the first instance. It is also very desirable that the new rules, which the Inspector-General of Police is said to be engaged at present in making, as to the duties to be performed by Deputy Superintendents of Police, should be published for public criticism, before they are finally adopted and embodied in the Police Manual. The Deputy Superintendent of Police should not be confined to clerical work, but should be given a due share in the Police administration of the district along with the District Superintendent of Police and his European Assistant. The Deputy Superintendent's services should be specially utilized in inspecting the police records, diaries, &c., which could not hitherto be supervised or checked by superior officers on account of their ignorance of Urdu.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
April, 1906.

Question of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions raised by the Maharaja of Darbhanga at the debate on the last Budget in the Viceregal Legislative Council.

18. The Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for April, in commenting upon the debate on the last Budget in the Viceregal Legislative Council, says:—His Highness the Maharaja of Darbhanga touched upon a sore point in the Indian administration when he drew attention to the urgent necessity for the solution of the problem of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions. So much has been spoken and written upon the subject and such a strong and unanswerable case has been made out for it that it is really a pity that the Government does not feel at all inclined to move in the matter. Cases are brought to light almost every day which show how unsafe the honour and lives of the people are under this double system of administration, where the thief catcher is also the judge, a system under which one and the same man in one capacity is the head of the police, and in another capacity sits in judgment over his own actions and conduct. Strange, indeed, it would be if under such circumstances the vagaries that are brought to light never existed at all. But what appears stranger still is that the Government, which can find millions out of current revenues for increasing the efficiency of the army in India so as to better protect the lives and interests of the people, and also, if need be, to fight the battles of England outside Indian boundaries, cannot spare a few lakhs out of its surpluses—surpluses towards which the savings from the administration of justice have contributed not a little—to render pure the administration of justice, to make the people happier and more contented, and to save them from the many evils which are the necessary result of this combination of the judicial and the executive functions in one and the same person. Let us hope that our present Viceroy will find time to digest the mass of material collected during his predecessor's régime, and will take the earliest opportunity for effecting a complete separation between the exercise of the two functions, for otherwise it is quite clear that all the money that is being spent upon the reform of the Police will be so much money wasted without our getting any adequate return.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
8th June, 1906.

Appointment of Municipal Members.

19. The Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 8th June, states that a vacancy has just occurred in the Agra Municipal Board, and that three men, namely, Saiyid Abdul Ali Shah, Munshi Wali-ullah and Babu Binod Bihari Lal, are candidates for the post. The first two candidates are men of very ordinary qualifications, knowing little or no English, while the third gentleman, Babu Binod Bihari Lal, is a B.A., LL.B., and in every way qualified for a Municipal membership. It is to be hoped that the electors will exercise their discretion well in choosing the right person as their representative on the Municipal Board. As educated and otherwise qualified men do not generally care to serve as Municipal Members, many unworthy persons find seats on Municipal Boards, which hardly tends to promote the cause of Local Self-Government in this country. The editor therefore suggests that Government should modify the election rules, so that none but qualified persons be returned as members. It would also be well if provision were made for the appointment of an equal number of Hindu and Musalman members to the Municipal Boards.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th June, 1906.

A Municipal complaint at Agra.

20. A trader writing to the Nasím-i-Agra, of the 11th June, complains that while the Municipal Board at Agra levies octroi on sugar imported into the municipality at the rate of five annas per maund, it allows refund when the same article is exported at the rate of only three annas a maund, which is very unfair. The newly appointed Octroi Superintendent does not appear to do his work carefully, and the result is that traders and the general public suffer as much inconvenience now as they did before when there was no such official.

NASIM-I-AGRA
15th June, 1906.

Water-supply at Agra.

21. The Nasím-i-Agra of the 15th June in a long article, complaining of the inadequate supply of pipe-water at Agra, says that, although a few water-carts are daily sent to muhallas Maithán and Sitlagali, which are situated at a higher level, to supply drinking water to the people, only lower and not respectable classes can derive benefit from them, for the latter, who have house-connections, consider it derogatory from their position to go out of their houses to get water from the water-carts. Again, while plenty of water is supplied to the hospital where it is freely used even for watering grass, the general public of the town is bluntly told by the Municipal Board that it is unable to supply them with a sufficient quantity of water. The municipal records show that in previous years the pressure at the water-works was increased during summer to meet the increased want of the public in that season, but this has not been done this year, and that is the reason why water does not reach those parts of the town which are on a higher level. The Municipal Secretary is anxious only to effect economy in the consumption of coal, in order to obtain a reward for it; and the authorities would do well to see that the public do not suffer for the personal benefit of the Secretary.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM
12th June, 1906.

Complaint against a new Municipal order at Moradabad.

22. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th June, says that the new order which the Municipal Board, Moradabad, has just issued, directing all persons living within the municipality to remove thatching from their houses and put up tiled roofs instead, will cause great inconvenience to the people. Many persons have already purchased thatch to repair the roofs of their houses against the approaching rainy season, and it will go very hard with them if they are not allowed to use it this year. Besides, the tiling of a single hut would cost about Rs. 40 or so, so that the poorer classes cannot be expected to carry out the proposed change at once. The Municipal Board would therefore do well to fix a period of at least five years within which the people may be required to substitute tiles for thatch in covering the roofs of their houses.

AKHBAR-I-IMAMIA,
5th June, 1906.

Alleged neglect of the religious welfare of Shia students in the Muhammadan College at Aligarh.

23. A correspondent of the Akhbár-i-Imámia (Lucknow), of the 5th June, observes that the Muhammadan College at Aligarh was originally founded by the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan with the subscriptions raised from, and for the benefit of, the entire Musalman community, both Sunnis and Shias, but regrets to note that, since the appointment of Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk as Honorary Secretary to the College, the interests of Shia students have always been overlooked, especially in the matter of their religious education. No annual report is prepared regarding the religious education of Shia boys in the College, no Shia monitor is appointed to superintend their prayers, and no prize is given to Shia students who come out first in the religious examination; while all these things are done in the case of Sunnis. Is it not the duty of the Nawab to look after the religious welfare of the Shia students also, and is he not responsible for the neglect?

AL AZIZ,
7th June, 1906.

Contrast between the average cost of educating a European and an Indian student in India.

24. Al Azíz (Agra), of the 7th June, states that there are 36 European schools in this country, and that the number of students attending them is 2,027. The total expenditure on these schools in round figures is Rs. 3,60,000, so that the average cost per European student comes to about Rs. 15 a month. On the other hand, the average cost of educating an Indian student is not more than a few annas a month. Does this justify the assertion frequently made that Government liberally spends money on the education of Indians?

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th June, 1906.

Appeal for funds for promoting the cause of the Muhammadan system of medical treatment in India.

25. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th June, publishes a notice from Hakím Muhammad Ajmal Khan of Delhi, in which he, deploring the decline of the Yunáni or Muhammadan system of medical treatment in India, says that, with a view to revive this system, he has established a Yunáni medical school at Delhi, and proposes to start soon a midwifery school and a female hospital, and to hold an annual medical conference and a medical exhibition, but that he requires considerable funds to carry out these objects. He accordingly appeals to the Indian public to help him with subscriptions for this excellent object.

This notice has appeared in several other vernacular papers of these Provinces.

AL AZIZ,
7th May, 1906.

A protest against the unrestricted exportation of food-grains from India.

26. A correspondent of Al Azíz (Agra), of the 7th May, observes that in spite of a large increase in the area under cultivation, India is still subject to recurring famines. The cause of this calamity is the enormous exportation of Indian food-grains to foreign countries, and the Government would do well to put some restrictions on it, and compel dealers in grain not to sell it at less than a fixed rate.

Condition of ryots in Behar.

27. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th June, says:—The Indian ryot is the poorest of his class in the world, and he of Behar the poorest in India. Why so ? In other provinces the Government and landowners squeeze everything out of him; in Behar the planter completes the trinity for the purpose of relieving him of his little all. The Commissioner of the Patna Division writes in a Government Report:—" The tenants of a very large proportion of the estates in this division are so poor, and so completely in the power of their landlords, that they are still found to acquiesce in the flagrant violation of their rights by those landlords, for fear of worse happening to them; and it has become abundantly clear in the opinion of many, whose duties bring them into close contact with the actual cultivators of the soil, that further measures are required to protect those cultivators against the continued efforts of the proprietors and tenure-holders to abrogate the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act." Pressed under this triple screw, the poor agriculturist of Behar is glued to the plot which he tills like a bond-slave. Where is the remedy ?

ZAMANAH,
April, 1906.

Musalmans and the swadeshi movement.

28. The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for April, received on the 9th June, publishes the opinions it lately invited of certain distinguished Indian Musalmans on the utility or inutility of the swadeshi movement to the country in general and the Musalmans in particular, and on the desirability or otherwise of the Musalmans co-operating with Hindus to promote the movement. Shams-ul-ulama Khwája Altáf Husain, Háli, of Pánipat, admits the usefulness of the swadeshi movement, but urges that it should be dissociated from the anti-Bengal partition agitation, before the Musalmans can safely join it. Shams-ul-ulama Maulvi Zaka-ullah Khan Bahadur of Delhi says that swadeshism is good in itself, but that there are neither men nor money in the country to push it on: and only long perseverance in the cause will enable the people to derive some tangible benefit from it. Shams-ul-ulama Maulvi Shibli observes that nothing can be more beneficial to India than the swadeshi movement, provided it has not been started to intimidate Government into complying with the demands of the Bengalis. He however doubts the success of the movement owing to the fickle-mindedness of Indians Khwája Ghulám-us-Saqlain, editor of the Asr-i-Jadíd, thinks that the swadeshi movement will be useful on the whole, but disapproves of boycotting only English goods. He is also of opinion that the movement will not prove less beneficial to Musalmans than to Hindus.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th June, 1906.

The swadeshi movement in India.

29. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th June, publishes 32 Urdu stanzas by one Shád of Meerut, in which he, lamenting India's loss of her past glory and splendour, says that her present distress and poverty are mainly due to the decadence of her indigenous arts and industries, and to the constant drain of her wealth to foreign countries. But he thanks God that the Bengalis have now started the swadeshi movement, which is capable of bringing back prosperity to India, provided her children take a vow not to use foreign goods in future. Those men who disapprove of the movement are unwise. The movement is destined to prosper, and everybody should support it with unremitting zeal, and should not care if Sir Bampfylde Fuller is opposed to it; for his efforts must be fruitless if the Indians remain true to the cause they have taken in hand.

The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for April, also publishes some Urdu stanzas by one Shákir of Meerut expressing similar views.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
13th June, 1906.

The Partition of Bengal and the Musalmans of Eastern Bengal.

30. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 13th June, in a long article, expresses its concurrence with the views of a Shillong Muhammadan correspondent, lately published in the Pioneer, to the effect that the Partition of Bengal will prove a God-send to the Musalman residents of that Province, who will now find a splendid opportunity for making a rapid progress both in their education and social position. The Musalmans form more than 70 per cent. of the population of Eastern Bengal, and with the help of a sympathetic ruler who will pay due attention to their claims on his Government, they should be able to raise themselves from the slough of their present ignorance, poverty, bigotry and degradation. Such being the case, the assertions of the Bengali press that the Musalman population too of Eastern Bengal are displeased with the partition, and that Sir Bampfylde Fuller has been showing them undue favours to conciliate them, can have no truth in them, and are clearly based on prejudice.

Swadeshi movement and the Partition of Bengal.

TAFRIH,
14th June, 1906.

31. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th June, observes that swadeshism is not a new movement in India, enlightened Indians having been its advocate long since, and that though it cannot be denied that the Bengalis in their resentment against the Partition of Bengal have given a special stimulus to the movement, it is absurd to suppose that if the Partition of Bengal were to be cancelled the movement would go with it. Indians in general now fully realize that the only possible way in which they can improve the condition of their country is by developing their indigenous arts and industries, and hence they will adhere to the movement in future under all circumstances. But even granting for the sake of argument that the Bengalis would give up swadeshism if the Partition of Bengal was cancelled, the editor does not see why the residents of the other provinces should not continue the movement, who have taken it up not in resentment against any Government measure, but as a highly beneficial patriotic measure.

The Musalmans and swadeshism.

RAHBAR,
14th June, 1905.

32. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th June, says that the Pioneer's opinion that the late Muhammadan riots at Mymensingh were probably due to the Hindus interfering, in their zeal of swadeshism, with the import of foreign goods which the Musalmans required for their daily use, cannot possibly be correct. The greater number of skilled labourers in India are Musalmans, so that the swadeshi movement must prove of greater benefit to Musalmans than to Hindus; and such being the case, how can it be reasonable to suppose that the former are as a body opposed to swadeshism?

Protest against the attitude of the Muhammadan press towards Babu Surendra Nath Banerji in connection with the late incidents at Barisal.

OUDH PUNCH,
14th June, 1906.

33. A correspondent of the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 14th June, highly praising the courage, patriotism and self-sacrifice of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, as seen in the late Barisal incidents, says that there is not a single soul in the whole Musalman community in India who would so readily risk his honour and position for the well-being of his community as the Babu has done for his. A few years ago the Muhammadans organized an Urdu Defence Association with a view to oppose the policy of the then Government of the United Provinces, with respect to the Hindu-Urdu controversy, but at the least expression of Government disapproval thereat, the so-called Muhammadan leader and guide, who was made much of by his community, at once showed the white feather, and the whole scheme fell through like a house of cards. It is a pity that the Muhammadan press, knowing all this, should have the audacity to deprecate and disparage the conduct of such a devoted servant to his country as Babu Surendra Nath at Barisal. It surely requires an unusual strength of character to suffer indignity for the sake of one's country. It is due to Babu Surendra Nath that the swadeshi movement has spread like wild fire from one end of the country to the other; and it is very mean and cowardly of the Muhammadan press to mock such a noble being.

Protest against the alleged request of English merchants for the cancellation of the present rule requiring foreign articles to bear the name of their respective manufacturing countries before they can be landed in India.

BHARAT JIWAN,
11th June, 1906.

34. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 11th June, says that, under an existing rule of the Government of India, all foreign articles imported into this country must bear the name of the countries where they are respectively manufuctured, but that English merchants have, it is said, now requested the Indian Government to do away with this rule. There are some foreign manufacturers who do not give the names of their firms on certain cloths that they secretly (?) send out to India, and the result is that local dealers here are able to pass them off as India-made goods. Such being the case, if the rule referred to is cancelled, it will open the door to the practice of deceit in this country.

The Shivaji festival.

BHARAT JIWAN,
11th June, 1906.

35. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 11th June, stating that it was in 1895 that the Maratthas first held a festival in honour of the "Mahatma" Shivaji in their own province, says that this festival has now become almost universal in India. Even the timid Bengalis, having thought fit to celebrate this hero, have been holding the festival at Calcutta for the last three or four years. This is a move in the right direction; the present being the most suitable time for holding such celebrations as are calculated to attract the attention of all Indians.

HINDUSTANI,
13th June, 1906.

The Shivaji celebration at Calcutta.

36. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 13th June, quoting portions of the speeches made by Babu Motilal Ghose and Mr. Tilak at the Shivaji celebration recently held at Calcutta, observes that these speeches go to show how the Bengalis have grown despondent of having righted the wrongs which have been done to the Indians as a nation, during the last few years. But the editor thinks that not Bengalis alone but all Indians should rely on their own exertions to improve the condition of their country, and not appeal to Shivají's spirit to help them. It is also necessary that in holding such celebrations, as that of Shivaji, care should be taken that it does not arouse any suspicion in Government, or wound the feelings of any other community.

AL BASHIR,
12th June, 1906.

Al Bashír* on the Shivaji celebration at Calcutta.

37. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 12th June, referring to the celebration of Shivaji's birth anniversary which the Bengalis lately held at Calcutta, observes that though the latter have no racial connection with Shivaji they held the festival in his honour because they thought that, as he had brought about the downfall of the Muhammadan rule, and had freed the Hindus from the yoke of the Muhammadans, his celebration might engender in course of time his spirit in the modern Hindus, and lead to the rise of a man among them who should liberate them from the sway of Englishmen. One of the speakers at the celebration went to the length of asserting that the Musalmans also should join in the Shivaji festival. Surely there could hardly be a Musalman so senseless and so utterly devoid of self-respect as to have any sympathy with Shivaji—a man who committed dakaitis, rebelled against the Muhammadan rule and led to its subversion. If the Muhammadans desire at all to hold a festival in honour of a hero, they had better celebrate Ahmad Shah Abdali who shook the newly risen Marattha Power to its foundations. Were it not for the timely invasion of Ahmad Shah, Muhammadans would have as completely lost their position in India as they did in Spain after their most glorious reign in that country; and Englishmen too would have found much difficulty in establishing their rule in India. If the Musalmans chose to retaliate, they should celebrate some such personage as Mahmud of Ghazni, Shahab-ud-din Gori or Aurangzeb. In conclusion, the editor thinks the Shivaji festival injurious to the interests of the British Government; and he sees no reason at any rate why the Musalmans should hold the celebration of an "enemy of Islam," and thereby rouse the distrust of Government.

The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th June, also disapproves of the celebration.

AL-AZIZ,
14th June, 1906.

A suggestion for entire stoppage of the sale of cocaine to the public.

38. Al-Azíz (Agra), of the 14th June, regrets that instead of prohibiting the sale of concaine altogether, Government has sought simply to restrict its use by allowing licensees only to sell it on payment of a license-fee, so that one may be justified in asserting that Government was not so anxious to stop the use of the poisonous drug by the people as to raise an income from it. The restriction of licenses has failed to check the cocaine habit, which steadily goes on increasing, especially at Delhi, Lucknow and Calcutta.

V.—LEGISLATION.

HINDUSTANI,
6th June, 1906.

Certain suggestions in connection with the proposed introduction of the Punjab Land Alienation Act into the United Provinces.

39. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 6th June, in continuation of his previous article, in which he discussed the question of the introduction of the Punjab Land Alienation Act into the United Provinces (vide Article No. 39 on page 300 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), again urges that, before the Act is extended to these Provinces, agricultural banks should be established on an extensive scale, so that money-lenders may find it necessary to lower their rates of interest from fear of losing their entire business. There is also great need for fixing the rates of assessment of rent for non-occupancy tenants, as has been done for occupancy tenants. At present the zamindar is free to take what rent he pleases from a non-occupancy tenant, and the result is that the latter has generally to part with almost the entire product of his holding to satisfy the former's demand. The writer thinks that non-occupancy rates of rent should in no case exceed two and half times the amount of the revenue paid by the zamindar for land held by a non-occupancy tenant, or one and one-fourth times that paid by an occupancy tenant holding similar land. Again, before the Punjab Land Alienation Act is introduced into these provinces, due provision should be made for permitting unrestricted transfer of land under existing mortgages and other deeds.

INDIAN PUNCH,
11th June, 1906.

Need for a female waiting room at the Budaun railway station.

40. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 11th June, says that there is no separate waiting room for female passengers at the Budaun railway station on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway, so that pardanashin Indian female passengers are put to much inconvenience there.

ADVOCATE,
17th June, 1906.

Suspected detention of one Maulvi Ahmad Raza Khan of Bareilly in Mecca by the Sherif.

1. THE Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th June, says:—Maulvi Ahmad Raza Khan is a prominent maulvi of Bareilly. He lately went on pilgrimage to Mecca with a large party, the members of which have all returned. It is believed that the Sherif of Mecca has detained the Maulvi on account of their certain disagreements on religious principles. This has caused not a little anxiety in the large circle of his friends.

URDU-I-MUALLA,
June, 1906.

Need for Hindus and Musalmans co-operating to improve the condition of their country.

2. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for June, briefly publishes the speech which one Talammuz Husain delivered at a meeting of the Siddons Union Club in the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, on the 8th April last, in support of a resolution moved by another student that Indian Musalmans, if they desire to improve their social condition, should co-operate with the other communities in their efforts to promote the well-being of their common country. Talammuz Husain endeavoured to show that it is neither the unity of race, as seen in the case of Great Britain, and still more markedly in that of Canada, nor the unity of language, as illustrated in the case of Switzerland, nor the unity of religion, as noticed in modern Europe, nor even the unity of Government, as exemplified in the case of Turkey, which is essentially necessary for the formation of a nationality in any country, but the identity of the interests of the permanent inhabitants. The economic and political interests of both Hindus and Musalmans, on which hinges the well-being of their common country, cannot be denied to be perfectly identical. If the industries and commerce of the country are improved, or taxation lightened, or political privileges secured, both communities must be benefited thereby. The spread of the English language and of literature in India, which enables the residents of the different provinces to exchange their thoughts with one another, must also go a long way towards the unification of the various races into one nation. The foreign nature of the British Government in India should also tend not a little to the nationalization of India for being born and bred in this country, Indians would naturally consider themselves to be one people and the Englishmen who rule over them to be foreigners. Besides, the treatment of Indians by Englishmen generally is calculated to make the former draw closer to one another. The general laws which apply equally to all the inhabitants of the country should likewise prove a useful factor in welding them into one nation. In short, the well-being and progress of the country, the speaker concluded, depend on the co-operation of the two communities with a view to their ultimately becoming actually one nation; and unless and until this is brought about no real or permanent good to the country can be expected.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th June, 1906.

The Shahna-i-Hind on the political agitation of Bengalis.

3. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th June, observes that Bengalis, though weak and timid, are a very intelligent and vigilant people. They have now acquired the spirit of patriotism and nationalism in them. But they wish as well of the British Government as they do of their own countrymen. They ask Government to grant them only such rights and privileges as a civilized Government is expected to grant to its people. They do not want to establish their own dominion in the country, nor are they capable of doing so. They are an unwarlike, peace-loving, loyal and grateful people, and it is absurd for nervous Anglo-Indians to represent them to be something formidable and threatening. It is the duty of every civilized Government to grant constitutional rights to its subjects, and the efforts made by Bengalis to secure them should not be despised by their fellow-countrymen. It is shameful that some Indians should be so mean and such sycophants as to represent to Government that they themselves are most loyal, while the Bengalis are rebellious. It should be borne well in mind by Indians that if they ever obtain any political rights from Government it will be due to the exertions of Bengalis.

JASUS,
28th May, 1906.

Complaint regarding the present system of appointing Honorary Magistrates in India.

4. The Jásús (Agra), of the 28th May, says that the present system of appointing Honorary Magistrates in this country is not satisfactory. Well-to-do men of very ordinary ability and social position, who are able to ingratiate themselves with the District Magistrate, are readily appointed Honorary Magistrates, and the result is that the new power with which they are invested generally turns their heads, and they take to oppressing poor people. It would be better if Government prescribed an examination which a man should pass before he is appointed an Honorary Magistrate; and at the expiry of the term of their office, which should in every case be for a limited period only, such Honorary Magistrates as are found to have done their work efficiently and creditably, might be promoted to tahsildarships or Deputy Collectorships as an encouragement to others.

QULQUL,
11th June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

5. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 11th June, referring to the question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, says that the reasons which probably led to the removal of the High Court from Agra to Allahabad after the mutiny were (1) that the latter town was connected with Calcutta by railway, and (2) that it was lately made a military station, and the headquarters of the Local Government. But the location of the High Court at Allahabad, which, besides being an altogether unattractive town, does not occupy a central position in the United Provinces, has given undue advantage to the people of the Eastern districts over those of the Western in the matter of facility in attending that court. This is not fair; and as no other city in these provinces is more centrally situated than Lucknow, the transfer of the High Court to that town cannot be too strongly recommended.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

6. One Ináyat-Ullah, a taluqdár in Oudh, writing to the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 19th June, urges that the High Court should be transferred from Allahabad to Lucknow because—(1) Lucknow is a very picturesque town, (2) it is the biggest town in the United Provinces, (3) it is situated in the centre of the provinces, and will therefore afford greater facility to the majority of litigants in attending the court, and (4) the Chief Justice wants the number of the judges to be increased, which object can be gained, without any extra expenditure, by transferring the court to Lucknow and amalgamating it with the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's court there.

Another correspondent of the same paper, in its issue of the 21st June, also advocates the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, on similar grounds.

ADVOCATE,
17th June, 1906.

Mr. Alder, Assistant Sessions Judge at Fyzabad, accused of abusing a Muhammadan vakil in Court.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th June, publishes the following letter from a Fyzabad correspondent:—Mr. Alder has recently taken over charge of Assistant Sessions Judgeship at Fyzabad. The want of good manners on his part—particularly in his treatment of the pleaders who have had occasion to appear in his court—has become the topic of the day. It will be discreditable and detract from the dignity of the Bench if he continues to use such offensive language as he has hitherto been using. To him apparently the mutual and traditional courtesy of the Bench and Bar has become a thing of the past. On the 8th instant on receiving a letter from Chowdhri Niamat-ullah, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, the Bar Association, Fyzabad, met and adopted unanimously the following resolution:—

"That the Bar Association, Fyzabad, regrets that the treatment by Mr. Alder, the Assistant Sessions Judge, of the members of the Bar is rude and ungentlemanly, and records its strong protest against such treatment. The members of the Bar decline to appear in any case before him."

The above proceedings have been signed by almost all the members of the Bar, who have firmly adhered to their decision. Copies of the above resolution were sent to the District Judge and the Judicial Commissioner, detailing the particular facts that had brought about this revolution the like of which has probably never been known in the history of the Fyzabad Bar. It remains to be seen whether the higher authorities will redress the grievance of the pleaders, for otherwise the matter might be taken to the courts of justice.

The insult to Mr. Niamat-ullah, which has caused indignation both in Fyzabad and elsewhere, was quite unprovoked. In a criminal case Mr. Alder summoned Mr. Niamat-ullah. The summons was not served on him, and he was engaged in a case at Bahraich when the case came up before Mr. Alder. That officer threatened to issue warrants against the pleader. In the meantime Mr. Niamat-ullah returned to Fyzabad and was informed by Mr. Alder's peshkár that he was wanted by the Assistant Sessions Judge. Mr. Niamat-ullah went before Mr. Alder who with an abusive word enquired where he had been. The vakil protested against the manner in which he was addressed by the court, and brought the matter to the notice of his colleagues. Mr. Saunders, the District Judge, has interfered in the matter, and at his instance, Mr. Niamat-ullah has accepted a written apology from Mr. Alder who, we understand, is about to leave Fyzabad to take charge of the office of the Registrar of the Judicial Commissioner's Court.

QULQUL,
18th June, 1906.

Cruel treatment of certain prisoners in the District Jail, Bijnor.

8. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 18th June, referring to the case in which certain prisoners have complained to the Magistrate that they were very cruelly treated in the District Jail, Bijnor (vide article No. 8 on page 346 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), says that in order to save themselves the jail authorities have given out that the complainants were maltreated by some of the prisoners and not by them. The editor regards this defence as absurd, remarking that unless the jailor is suspended or transferred, true facts will not be forthcoming.

EXPRESS,
14th June, 1906.

A boy murdered at Moradabad for the sake of his ornaments.

9. The Express (Lucknow), of the 14th June, states:—An exceedingly atrocious crime was committed the other day at Moradabad. A boy was assassinated by his own maternal uncle, who removed his ornaments worth about Rs. 300, and threw the corpse near a mosque. The murderer was arrested, but he took poison and died before he was placed in the dock.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th June, 1906.

Protest against the present system of registering travellers in serais in the United Provinces.

10. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th June, says that the present system of registering travellers in serais in these Provinces is very unsatisfactory. A literate police constable visits a serai, generally at about 10 or 11 P. M., when most of the travellers are asleep, takes his seat at some convenient place, and calls for the travellers, without any regard to their social position or state of health, to enter their names in his register. This practice is very objectionable, as it causes much inconvenience to the travellers. Again, when a company of, say, ten persons is stopping in a serai, only one of them generally goes to the constable to have his company registered, and the result is that the constable cannot know anything as to the appearance, character, &c., of the remaining nine, which he would do if he himself went round the serai and registered the travellers at their lodgings. Government would therefore do well to issue a circular order directing the constables on duty at the serais to register the travellers at their lodgings and to finish this work not later than 9 P. M. It would be better still if a constable were stationed at each serai, so that he may be present there at all hours of the day, and register travellers as they come in any time during day or night.

Water-supply at Benares.

11. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 18th June, complaining that the pipe water does not reach the upper storeys of houses, and even the lower storeys in some parts of the town at Benares in these hot days, says that this scantiness of water-supply is probably due to the fact that while the expenditure of water grows much larger in summer, it is supplied at the same pressure as during winter or the rainy season. This is certainly a source of very great inconvenience to the public, and the Municipal Board ought to take necessary steps to increase the pressure.

SANADHYOP-KARAK,
April and May, 1906.

Suggestion for reducing the land tax in India.

12. The Sanádhyopkárak (Agra), for April and May, observes that cultivators in India have, owing to the repeated occurrence of famine, been reduced to abject poverty, so that even in good seasons they do not get a full meal; and says that, until Government reduces its demand on land at least by 25 or 30 per cent., there is no hope of any improvement in the condition of the peasantry.

ADVOCATE,

Famine in Eastern Bengal.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th June, says :—When the rulers and the ruled quarrel, they bring disaster on the land, is an old saying, and it has proved true as far as the new province is concerned. Sir Bampfylde Fuller is yet busy with suppressing the imaginary revolt against British rule in East Bengal. In the meantime a severe famine is spreading and the people in thousands are leaving their homes for want of food. At Bakerganj, which was supposed to be the granary of East Bengal, hundreds of ryots recently surrounded the Collector's bungalow asking him to find rice for them. Relief works have not yet been opened, nor does there appear to be any activity on the part of the Government to devise means to meet this new disaster.

ANAND KADAM-BINI,
May, 1906.

The late Barisal incidents.

14. The Ánand Kádambini (Mirzapur), for May, referring to the late arrest and fining of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal, observes that there will hardly be an Indian who does not sympathize with that "jewel of India" in the harsh treatment accorded to him for uttering Bande Mátaram. The more the authorities seek to suppress the cry of Bande Mátaram and to stop the Swadeshi movement, the more they incite the people to persist therein.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th June, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement and Musalmans.

15. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th June, while fully recognizing the usefulness of the Swadeshi movement, disapproves of its association with the partition of Bengal. The British Government, which has always the welfare of the people at heart, is ever ready to patronize every useful movement which they may set on foot for their advancement, so that it would have been much better if the Bengalis had started the Swadeshi movement, as a purely patriotic measure and not in resentment against a Government measure, as they have unfortunately done. The necessary consequence was that the Government was naturally displeased with the movement ; and, such being the case, the Musalmans who are always loyal to the British Government, thought it a safe course to keep themselves aloof from the movement lest they should incur the displeasure of the authorities along with the Bengalis. The Bengalis were annoyed with the Musalmans at this, and are ill-disposed towards them. When the Musalmans lately expressed their sympathy with the Sultan of Turkey on the occasion of the late Anglo-Turkish dispute in Egypt, the Bengalis took the opportunity to excite doubts regarding the former's loyalty in the minds of the British authorities. The result is that the Anglo-Indian and English Press are now able to accuse both Bengalis and Musalmans of disloyalty.

But the editor hopes that Government, being well aware of the firm loyalty of its Musalman subjects, will not be misled by the Bengali or the Anglo-Indian Press.

ADVOCATE,
17th June, 1906.

Dismissal of four Hindu teachers from the Government High School, Lyallpur, in the Punjab, for their Swadeshism.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th June, says:—The Pioneer more than once hinted that the promoters of the Swadeshi and boycott movements cannot do better than commence their crusade against foreign sugar. The Government of the Punjab expressed itself more than once in favour of the Swadeshi movement. Under these circumstances is it not the height of folly that the Director of Public Instruction should remove four Hindu teachers from the Lyallpur School on the ground of their being promoters of the Swadeshi movement? The sum total of the offence of the Lyallpur teachers is that they are believed to have instigated the students not to accept the laddus given to them on Empire Day on the ground that they were made of foreign sugar. Now there is no proof connecting the teachers with the incident beyond a demi-official report from Mr. Muhammad Fateh-uddin, Headmaster of the school. The Inspector (Director?) thereupon issued the following letter dated the 22nd (sic) May (to the Inspector?):—

> With reference to correspondence ending with your endorsement No. 1832, dated the last (sic) May 1906, I have the honour to request that the following teachers of the Government High School, Lyallpur, may be informed that their services will not be required in a Government school after the 31st May 1906. You are further requested to arrange for their transfer to some Board School:—(1) L. Devi Chand, 2) L. Nanak Chand, (3) L. Tirath Das. The services of Lala Bagh Mal who is an uncertificated and untrained teacher will not be required after the above date, and you will be good enough to suggest a qualified man (Muhammadan) for his place.

No occasion was given to the teachers to explain their conduct; no enquiry was held and on a one-sided report four Hindu teachers were removed from the school. Will the Hindu students, who took a vow in January last not to use imported sugar, be rusticated? The last suggestion of Mr. Bell is mischievous, and shows his vindictiveness, and we wonder the Punjab Government has not yet interfered in the matter. The action of the Director of Public Instruction must have caused consternation in the Education Department, and humiliation to the Hindus. The matter should not be allowed to end where it is. A formal representation should be made against Mr. Bell's high-handed and objectionable proceedings. This behaviour cannot help the cause of good government. It will only excite the contempt of the people and a bitterness of feeling.

BHARAT JIWAN,
18th June, 1906.

Swadeshism.

17. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 18th June, observing that there is hardly anything which a man will not achieve if he persevere, says that the most pressing need for the Indians at the present time is to resolve not to eat, drink, wear, or use in any other way anything that is not made in India, and put this resolution once taken into practice without flinching.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th June, 1906.

Alleged dishonest conduct of certain Marwari cloth merchants in Calcutta.

18. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 19th June, strongly condemns the conduct of certain Márwári cloth merchants in Calcutta, who are alleged to have arranged with certain Manchester and other foreign firms to supply them with cloths bearing no trade mark so that they may put on them some Indian mark, and thus pass them off as Indian-made goods on their fellow-countrymen. This is certainly a downright fraud, and it is much to be regretted that Indians themselves should thus seek to check the swadeshi movement.

AL BASHIR,
19th June, 1906.

The Musalmans and the Partition of Bengal.

19. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 19th June, publishing a translation of a letter, recently published by a Shillong Muhammadan in the Pioneer, to the effect that the Partition of Bengal will prove highly beneficial to the interests of the Musalmans, as it gives them a splendid opportunity for recovering their lost ground in education and other matters, considers these views correct, and advises his co-religionists to keep themselves strictly aloof from the anti-Bengal Partition agitation, as well as from the Indian National Congress, which passed a resolution protesting against the partition at its last session in Benares.

ADVOCATE,
17th June, 1906.

Sir B. Fuller's alleged attempt to disenfranchise certain municipalities for refusing him an address of welcome.

20. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th June, says:—Sir B. Fuller seems to have carried the vindictive spirit to a regrettable extent by threatening a number of municipalities with disenfranchisement for faults over which the members had no control. If the attempt to repress the Rajshahi Municipality failed because of Mr. Marindin, Commissioner of the Division, that to similarly deal with the Pubna Municipality stands every chance of success. The Sanitary Commissioner during his tour of inspection discovered some defects in the sanitary arrangements of the latter municipality. These being pointed out by the executive authorities, the Municipal Commissioners authorised the chairman to act up to Major Hare's suggestions But want of funds delayed the work of improvement. Down comes the fiat that the Municipal Commissioners should be relieved of their duties if things are not put right at once. This municipality, like that of Rajshahi, refused an address of welcome to Sir B Fuller. There was the rub.

ADVOCATE,
17th June, 1906.

Sir B. Fuller's policy of largely employing Muhammadans in ministerial appointments in Eastern Bengal.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th June, says:—Elsewhere we publish the Eastern Bengal and Assam Government's Resolution on the subject of the employment of Muhammadans in ministerial appointments. With the Resolution has been published a memorandum containing statistics of the percentage of the population of the two classes in every district, and the number of appointments which they should hold according to the percentage. This resolution will rouse feelings of bitterness between the two sections and create factions. But both Hindus and Muhammadans ought to know that depriving the one of, and patronising the other with Government appointments cannot affect the economic condition of the people. Sir Bampfylde Fuller by these practices may succeed in creating a party in his favour, but he will create aspirations which will put the Government of Eastern Bengal in no very enviable position.

ARYA MITRA,
16th June, 1906.

Suggestion for the construction of a tramway between Tajganj and Sikandra in Agra.

22. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th June, says that as thousands of persons visit Tájganj and Sikandra daily to see the world-famed buildings there, it would be well if a tramway were constructed between those two places for the convenience of visitors.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th June, 1906.

A complaint regarding lepers at Bareilly.

23. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th June, complains that although there are certain asylums and hospitals for the safe custody and maintenance of lepers at Bareilly, they have of late been frequently seen wandering about and begging alms in the town, to the disgust of the public. The local authorities should see to the matter.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th June, 1906.

Increase in the drinking habit in India.

24. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th June, regrets that while the Secretary of State for India is willing to consider the question of stopping the export of Indian opium to China, if the latter honestly desire to put down opium-smoking among her children, he does not seem to think it equally sinful on the part of the British Government to allow the continual increase in the use of liquor in India which has rapidly been spreading among all classes. The measures which Government has so far adopted to check drinking in India have invariably resulted only in the increase of revenue from liquor, and not in any diminution in the drinking habit. It is a pity that the Secretary of State should have expressed sympathy for the Chinese and admitted opium-smoking to be a vice, but should have said nothing about the urgent need for stopping drinking in India.

BHARAT JIWAN,
18th June, 1906.

A suggestion for the prohibition of the sale of cigarettes and biris along with liquor to persons below 14 years in all provinces.

25. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 18th June, approving of the recent order of the Government of Madras prohibiting the sale of liquor to persons under 14 years of age, suggests that this prohibition should be extended to the sale of cigarettes and bíris (a little tobacco rolled in a leaf for smoking) which are also very injurious things to use, and should be enforced not only in Madras but also in the other provinces.

BHARAT JIWAN,
18th June, 1906.

Great increase in the use of cocaine at Delhi.

26. The Bhárat Jíwan (Benares), of the 18th June, is surprised to learn that the daily sale of cocaine has enormously increased in Delhi, men and women, rich and poor, all using it, and says that the authorities ought to take measures to check the sale.

EXPRESS,
21st June, 1906.

Increase in the use of cocaine at Delhi.

27. The Express (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says :—The Morning Post, discussing the question of the prevalence of the cocaine habit in Delhi, states that the drug is extensively sold in the city, and that its use is increasing to a dangerous extent. The shops where cocaine is sold are to be found in practically every section of Delhi; and the people are now so addicted to the use of the drug that they will purchase it at any price even if they have to sell their personal effects to procure it. But it must not be supposed that the cocaine habit is at all confined to the poorer classes. The wealthy and educated natives of Delhi are addicted to the use of the drug just as much, if not more than their poorer brethren. The drug as ordinarily consumed is taken with betel leaves, and both men and women, and even children, have acquired this terrible vice. The price of the drug has much increased; for example 32 small phials which formerly sold for Rs. 18 are now sold for Rs. 40 or Rs. 1-4 each; and the price is said to be still rising! This is indeed deplorable, and it is to be hoped that the Local Government will bestir itself in the matter.

EXPRESS,
21st June, 1906.

Sir James Digges LaTouche praised as a most kind-hearted and sympathetic ruler.

28. One Mirza Habib Husain, writing to the Express (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says :—Glancing through the pages of history we notice there are many rulers who have made for themselves imperishable names, but in our own provinces it is impossible to find one who has paid more thought and loving devotion to the welfare of the people placed under his care, or who has deserved warmer and more loving esteem than Sir James Digges LaTouche, our beloved Lieutenant-Governor. Renowned as he is for his clemency and nobleness of heart, and his tender solicitude to study and relieve the wants of the people, Sir James has become a saint in the person of a statesman.

* * * * * * *

From his early days wherever he went, whatever position he held, his natural tendency has all along been foremost in alleviating the sufferings of the poor.

* * * * * * *

Endowed with a noble heart His Honour's regard for the remnants of noble families has also been exceptionally great. A friend in their need he would draw the attention of the Supreme Government (to their cases): and meanwhile would himself support them.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Morley may think that "in India sympathy has to meet with supreme difficulties," but we have seen with our own eyes how gracefully Sir James Digges LaTouche has been successful in infusing that "wider element of sympathy" which his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales referred to the other day in his memorable speech at Guildhall, and in winning, in response thereto for himself and the Crown he represents, an "overabundant and genuine" esteem and affection of all classes and masses of these provinces. His Honour has rather gone a step further. His sympathy has ripened into love for the people he rules. To him, unlike many, nothing has ever been below his dignity which claimed the support of humanity: he would go, talk to the poorest man of God's creation, learn his wants and strive to do all what is possible to remove them.

India wants such noble-hearted rulers.

EXPRESS,
21st June, 1906.

Protest against the present arrangement for celebrating the King Emperor's birth-day in India.

29. The Express (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says :—It is officially announced that it has been decided after consulting the Home Government that the King-Emperor's Birthday will be celebrated in this country on the 29th and not on the 26th June. It is well-known, says the Indian Daily News, that neither of these dates represents the correct birthday of His Majesty who was born on the 9th November 1840. Properly speaking the Birthday should be celebrated on the 9th of November every year. No one can say that that time of the year is not suitable for festivities usually inseparable from such observances. The day has been changed to some day in the month of June so far as India is concerned in the interest of the distribution of Honours. We all know that the distribution of Honours is a matter in which only a very small number of persons are interested, and it is certainly objectionable that the convenience of many millions of the loyal subjects of His Majesty should be sacrificed in order to gratify the vanity of a few title hunters. It would do nobody any harm—not even those who are likely to get titles—if the Honours List was published only once a year either on the 1st of January or on the 9th of November. The arrangement would obviate the celebration of a day as birthday which really is not the birthday of the Emperor, and at a time of the year when any attempt at enjoyment is out of the question throughout the country except in a few hill stations. We hope the Government of India will see their way to reconsider the matter, and come to a conclusion to which no objection could be made.

ADVOCATE,
17th June, 1906.

Fall of a female passenger from a goods train between the Barara and Kesri stations on the North-Western Railway.

30. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th June, says :—The account of a railway accident, nothing short of a crying shame and scandal, comes to hand. This was due to the criminal indifference, combined with covetousness of the Railway authorities in using goods trucks for carrying third class passengers. On the morning of the 4th instant, a goods train full of Hardwar passengers was moving between the Barara and Kesri stations. Suddenly a young Jat woman fell from her wagon on to the sharp broken stone metal spread on a small bridge. The accident was not noticed at the time by the driver or either of the guards, and the train proceeded, leaving the poor woman horribly bleeding and cut lying helpless on the road. When the train reached Kesri, some of the companions of the fallen woman got down and told their distressing tale to the Station Master. The latter at once wired to the Barara station to instruct the next train which was coming in the wake of the human goods train to pick up the unfortunate woman and bring her on. The passenger train picked up the unconscious woman about half an hour after her fall. Her whole head was a bleeding mass of face and caput (sic).

VII.—POST OFFICE.

EXPRESS,
21st June, 1906.

A suggestion for increasing the size of half-anna embossed envelopes.

31. The Express (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says :—Many people may be painfully aware how half-anna stamps affixed to the covers of letters disappear at the hands of servants whose greed of paltry gain sometimes puts their masters to infinite trouble. It is too much to hope that we should get truthful and honest persons to serve us as bearers and menials, and now that the drawing of an ink line across the face of a postage stamp after it has been affixed to a letter has been prohibited, the postal authorities should do something to popularize the half-anna embossed envelopes. What makes these envelopes so often unacceptable is their size which is 4¾ inches by 2¾ inches at present. Mr. Max of the Capital has done a public service by suggesting that as the postal unit of the letter weight has now been fixed at three quarters of a tola instead of half a tola the authorities may very well make an improvement in the size. It will surely do no harm to make the envelopes as large as 5½ inches by 3¼ inches. We hope the Director-General of Post Offices will kindly consider these things.

The late Anglo-Turkish dispute regarding the Egyptian frontier, and Indian Musalmans.

MUFID-I-AM,
20th June, 1906.

1. Haji Muhammad Ismail Khan of Datauli, writing to the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 20th June, refers to the message which certain Musalmans of Aligarh lately sent to the Government of India regarding the Egyptian frontier dispute and says that this kind of action on the part of Indian Musalmans would not do any good to the Muhammadan Power on whose behalf it is taken, and is calculated to do harm, and lead the British Government to suspect the loyalty of the former. The Congress and similar other Hindu movements, though their attitude might be considered a bold one, do not presume to interfere with the international affairs of England. For Indians to sympathize with a foreign Power, and to ask for change in the form of the administration of their own country are two very different things, and the Musalmans would do well to note this difference carefully and act accordingly in future.

The late Anglo-Turkish dispute about Tabah, and Indian Musalmans.

CITIZEN,
25th June, 1906.

2. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 25th June, reproduces the following communicated article published in the Sun:—Sir,—The conditional withdrawal of the Turkish troops from Tabah, where their presence was made the pivot of the British demands and of the action against the Sultan, ends the immediate crisis, but does not in any way affect or indicate the ultimate conclusion of the dispute. The conditions under which the soldiers have been withdrawn and the general tenor of the news since last Friday rather go to show that the Sultan has made what in military language would be called a tactical retreat, which will compel the British Government to show its hand.

The present situation is quite unlike any of those that existed at the time of previous threats and demonstrations by combined Europe. The vital interests, if not the very existence of the Caliphate at Constantinople, are attacked in the present circumstances, whereas previous affairs were only to compel the Sultan to execute certain engagements with the Powers, into which he had entered but in the performance of which he was delaying, or to extort from him indemnities to concessionaires with whom he failed to agree.

It cannot be said that the British position has been very sensibly improved by the manner of the Government's action. There has been just a trifle too much bluffing on the part of the British Admiral, and the Turks have been quick to detect it. Lord Charles Beresford is a born practical joker, and the present situation afforded excellent opportunities for him to play the bogey man to the Sultan. With all the appearance of Great Britain having a clear field, the case is not exactly as clear as it might be. Unprepared as some of the European Powers are to oppose her, the only one, France, that might be expected to reciprocate the support, such as it was, which she received from England at Algeciras, is not in a condition to go the whole length in backing her in turn with regard to the dispute with Turkey over Egypt, and it is, to say the least, doubtful whether the present British Government, with the complications it has on its hands at home and in its colonies and India, is ready to back Lord Charles Beresford's bluff with orders for action.

The loyalty of the Musalmans of India to the British Crown has been largely due to their belief in the past that Great Britain was the friend of the Caliph, that is, of the Sultan. Since Lord Salisbury made the remarkable declarations a few years ago that England had discovered that in supporting him she had been backing the wrong horse, there has been a good deal of change in sentiment among them on the subject, and it has manifested itself very unmistakably among them on various occasions of late, notably at the time of the last demonstration of Europe minus Germany near the Dardanelles.

It is not quite safe for the British Government to assume that the Musalmans of India are prepared or willing to accept the doctrine spoken of in the very interesting cablegram from London in the Sun of yesterday to the effect that the "protection of holy places, such as Mecca, and freedom of access shall be made a paramount British interest," or that the question of the Caliphate shall "be submitted to independent representatives of the Muhammadan faith." This savours too much of revolutionary method to be adopted off-hand by the people who are singularly democratic and deliberate in their way of considering and resolving matters.

The fact that Great Britain was, not so very long ago, the friend and protector of Turkey but is now attacking it will hardly, I am afraid, be accepted by Indian and other Musalmans as a guarantee that missionary zeal in England will long allow her to remain "the friend and protector of their faith," as suggested in the Sun's cablegram of yesterday. There remains, besides, the consideration whether the open assumption of such a position would be altogether agreeable to the other States containing large number of Muhammadan subjects, France and Russia, to say nothing of the effect it may have on the Moslems of Turkey itself, who, though they may not be adverse to the abandonment of the suzerainty of Egypt by the Sultan, may have a decided objection to being themselves brought indirectly under the religious suzerainty of an infidel Power.

ZAMANAH,
May, 1906.

Indian Musalmans and political agitation.

3. A correspondent of the Zamánah (Cawnpore), for May, observing that one of the reasons Mr. Morley gave for refusing to interfere with the Partition of Bengal was that the agitation against that measure was subsiding, says that this shows that unless Indians continually agitate to obtain redress of their grievances or to secure any political rights, they are not likely to make substantial progress in any direction. Those Musalmans, who depending upon the favour of Government for ameliorating their condition consider the Congress movement or any other political agitation useless, ought to remember that no nation has ever obtained political rights without exerting themselves strenuously for them. Mere school and college education will not avail Indians much, and it is childish for anybody to say that Indians will receive political rights when they are fit for them. Unless Indians receive political training for which a political organisation is needed, no amount of general education will obtain them political rights or liberty. Social reform, spread of general education and acquirement of political rights must proceed side by side, and not one after another. For instance, supposing that Musalmans and Hindus have after all succeeded in establishing their respective universities, would the status of students turned out by them be any better than that of slaves? The progress of a subject people in general education or in arts and industries is closely bound up with their political status. If a subject people have no political power the door of education can be closed against them any time, and all their industrial improvements can be checked by the imposition of a tax on their manufactures. It is a great pity that the Muhammadan leaders are unable to grasp these important points. Three years ago proposals were made for establishing a Muhammadan political association, but nothing of the sort has been done yet. If Indians wish to derive any substantial benefit from the Liberal Ministry in power at present, they should devote all their energies to promoting constitutional political agitation amongst them.

INDAIN PEOPLE,
14th June, 1906.

Comments on the alleged policy of the British Government in India at the present time.

4. An Indian correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th June, commenting upon the present administration of Eastern Bengal by Sir Bampfylde Fuller, observes:—

In my humble opinion the whole policy of the Government of the day has been changed, and the one aim and object of the new policy that has been inaugurated is the suppression by main force of the attempt of the Indian people to form a nationality of their own.

* * * * * * *

Our methods of work too must be changed. We should change our tactics, we should follow the footsteps of men who have attained success under similar circumstances in other countries similarly situated. Hungary, Finland, Poland are instances in point. We must rely on ourselves for our salvation. I would ask you to commend for the consideration of your readers the admirable scheme of Mr. Arthur Griffiths published in the Gaelic American under the heading "How to build a nation," and reproduced in the Indian papers. The scheme there propounded is best fitted for us. We should try to assimilate the ideas and suggestions made in it and make active efforts to give them a practical shape. I hope you will comment on the scheme in your usual able way.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Alleged policy of the British Government in India.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th June, says:—There is a good deal of misgiving in connection with the agitation that is going on in different parts of the country. People in comfortable positions and with large balances in the bank are particularly worried, and think the agitation is all a mistake. Neither position nor a banking account is the essential of national life. We think the time has arrived when we should realize that there are certain things which we shall never get from the Government. We shall enumerate a few of them:—

(1.) The Government will never give us arms.

(2.) The Government will never admit us to the commissioned ranks of the army or the navy.

(3.) The Government will never give us equal trading facilities with English traders.

(4.) The Government will never admit us into the diplomatic or political service.

(5.) The Government will never appoint us provincial rulers.

(6.) The Government will never promote cordial relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

Let us accept these facts without questioning them. Let us then consider whether, given these conditions, it is possible for a nation to pass to the front rank of nations. If not, what should we do to better our position, and how can we advance in spite of the disqualifications placed on us?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
24th June, 1906.

Alleged spirit of the British Government in India at the present time.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 24th June, says:—So long as the interests of the rulers and the ruled are identical, criticism of the details of administration are beneficial; but when it is realised that their interests are conflicting, there is not much advantage from detailed criticism. We have then to go to root principles and to chalk out a broad line of conduct. Things have been coming to a head for some time in this country, and now the sign-post points distinctly to the parting of ways. It is no use affecting blindness and saying that the conditions have not changed and everything is going on as before.

There are of course two ways of looking at everything. The first is that the educated classes in India are ungrateful, that nothing pleases them and that they are perpetually against the Government. Our late Viceroy therefore said that he had tried to benefit the agricultural classes who are the real people of India. That is to say, there is no fault to be found with the Government which is as perfect as it is possible for any human institution to be, and it is only their critics who are to blame. The other day Mr. Dutt was criticised by an Anglo-Indian paper because he had ventured to praise highly the administration of Baroda. But his praise was quite tame compared with the fulsome praise bestowed upon British rule by Anglo-Indian rulers and writers in the Anglo-Indian Press. It is not for lack of praise that the present rule suffers. The second notion is that there is really something radically wrong with the Government, and that there is good reason for the discontent that prevails among a growing number of people representing the best education and intelligence of the country.

It may also be noted that what is called Anglo-Indian opinion does not really represent the entire Anglo-Indian community in India. There are many who strongly dissent from the views ventilated in Anglo-Indian newspapers, or from the notes of self-praise sounded by Anglo-Indian rulers, but they are in the minority and their voices do not prevail. When, therefore, Anglo-Indian orators and rulers profess to be lost in admiration of their own wonderful handiwork, they ought not to expect that their words will carry conviction very far, for it is deeds and not words that count in the administration of an empire.

There have been vain hagglings over the Queen's Proclamation and the treatment of the people. The India of railways and telegraphs, the security of person and property, the liberty of the subject—all these are pointed out as the wonderful achievement of the present rule, which is triumphantly compared with the iron rule of the Moghal and the Sikh, and the system of pillage of the Mahratta. If it were alleged that the present rule is excellent by comparison and not on positive grounds, the case would be somewhat different; but it is really claimed that no country was ever so well governed as India is governed to-day. It is here that issue must be joined.

The question must be considered in its main aspect, namely, whether the British occupation of India has been for the good of India, and whether the spirit of the present rule will tend to the elevation of India as a nation. All other questions are of no importance. When India first passed under British rule the people accepted the change with the phlegmatic fatalism which is characteristic of them. The Government offered places and salaries, and there was an eager demand for them in a country so poor as India. This went on for some time. The relations between the rulers and ruled were excellent. The rulers dispensed patronage and the ruled sought them. When one or two men of more than average intelligence pressed for reforms, they were encouraged as it meant nothing serious.

Gradually, the state of things changed. Education made real progress and the people of the country grew in their ideas. Mere appointments did not satisfy them; they wanted political rights, they wanted to be recognised citizens of a common empire. The mistake that was originally made was in the belief that the years would pass without bringing about an important change in the ideas of the people. And when the change did happen, the people were abused either as disloyal or ill-educated. Is it a sign of disloyalty to wish for larger and more real rights; is it the result of bad education to be patriotic? For the new spirit that has been awakened in India is nothing but patriotism.

If it were possible to lay bare the spirit of British rule in India, it will be found that its strength lies chiefly in the helplessness of the people. There is no conception of a people strong, energetic and enlightened, electing to live under British rule of its own unfettered choice. The predominant note of the present rule is to hold the people down in a position of complete dependence, while avoiding unnecessary irritation. The phrase benevolent despotism describes the situation very accurately. The despotism is positive but it is not always offensive. The expectation is that the people will be always content with what the Government gives them and they will not clamour for more. The disturbing element has been introduced by constitutional political agitation.

The spirit of the present rule is essentially unprogressive. All the trouble that we see on every side of us is due to the one fact that, while the ideas of the people have grown, the spirit of the adminstration has not grown at all. There were certain easy conditions under which India was gained; there is a determination to retain it under the same conditions, regardless of the undeniable fact that those conditions have been rapidly changing. The proposition that an Asiatic race is always different from a European race is treated as absolute. The lesson of Japan is lost upon our rulers, and, although it is obvious that India is not yet on the road taken by Japan, there can be no doubt that a remarkable awakening has taken place and the future of India will be different from its past.

If the spirit of the present rule could have succeeded in keeping out new ideas from the country, we would not have witnessed the remarkable upheaval going on to-day. The spirit of the present rule is neither courageous nor frank. The restraint placed on arms points clearly to a suspicion of the use of arms that might be made by the people. The reluctance to concede reforms is an indication of apprehension about the political importance of the people. The elementary stage at which a number of appointments satisfied the people is passed. There may be some sections of the community who think they have not had their full share, and these may be silenced for a time with hopes of appointments. But how long? As the years pass there must be growing tension and suspicion between the two races, because, as we have said, while the country is becoming full of new ideas and the people are moving towards a common ideal, the Government is at rest and is disinclined to move forward.

ADVOCATE,
21st June, 1906.

Alleged existence of slavery in the British Empire and India.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says:—Both in the British Empire and in India the slave-owning spirit is rampant. In the former the struggle lies between the white and the coloured races; in the latter between the higher and lower classes of the people. England, that abolished slave trade and liberated all the negro slaves, is now ruled by the imperialistic idea which stands for the permanent subjection of the coloured races to the white.

* * * * * * * *

The case in India is worse than this. The so-called lower classes have literally been reduced to the dust. Except for one or two resolutions in the Social Conference, but for the pious resolve of a few philanthropists, the lower classes are practically non-existent as men but are abundantly numerous as drawers of water and hewers of wood. If politically they may be and are equal to the higher classes, socially they are in the most deplorable condition. It must be admitted that educated Indians have yet to realise their duty towards the lower classes. In the Congress we hear of the proposal for mass education and in the Conference that for the amelioration of their social condition. But nothing definite seems to have been done practically. Thanks to the swadeshi movement, at least in Bengal the gulf that was widening between the educated classes and the illiterate masses has begun to be spanned. But nothing is being done in the other provinces. No popular movement has been set on foot to elevate them. For better and more forceful political agitation, and what is of more moment and more important for the betterment of the social and industrial condition of the Indian masses, spread of education, general and industrial, is the sine quâ non. The growth of the national sentiment is only possible after a sensible improvement in the status of the so-called poorer classes. If these are sought to be kept in ignorance, down-trodden for ever, and chained to the servile condition they are in, then good-bye to all hopes of Indian regeneration—politically, socially and industrially. If the British Empire is face to face with a serious problem, no less is India. While a free nation can soon take means to free itself from all bondage, a subject nation cannot. Slavery to man, prejudice and meanness are the essential features of a nation under subjection. It takes long for it to brush away the evil influence of so many forces that keep it down.

Alleged circulation of a memorial, recommending the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, for signatures of people in Gorakhpur and other places.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th June, says:—In our last issue we published a copy of a letter which, we understand, is being circulated among zamindars and talukdars, urging them to support the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow. A correspondent informs us that he has learned, on reliable authority, that in the Gorakhpur district kanungos are busy getting signatures of zamindars and others in the interior of the district to a paper asking the Government to transfer the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow. Is this the counter-agitation of which we were told some time ago, Gorakhpur being one of the divisions named? May we respectfully request the Local Government to inquire what truth there is in the information that has been conveyed to us, and whether, if our information is correct, it is right that kanungos should be employed upon such work. As a matter of fact, there is no proposal anywhere for the transfer of the High Court, and the devices that are being used to induce the public to support such a scheme cannot be too strongly condemned. A hint from the Local Government would put a stop to these practices at once. The official canvassing for a plebiscite in favour of Lucknow is utterly discreditable.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th June, 1906.

Alleged agitation in favour of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th June, says:—Fresh reports are coming in of doubtful methods to promote the agitation in favour of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow. The latest is that some one in authority has written to a number of select Indian gentlemen to support the agitation for the transfer of the High Court. The inducement held out is that it will result in securing to the big zamíndárs of Agra the same privileges as landholders as are enjoyed by the Oudh Talukdars, and that efforts will be made to secure equal privileges in both provinces in certain matters of tenancy. It is impossible to say how far these reports are accurate, but there is a singular uniformity about all these reports, namely, that they are all connected with the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow. We have not yet heard of a single instance in which any official is taking any interest in the retention of the High Court at Allahabad, and the reason is obvious. So long as no satisfactory reason is given for the removal of the High Court from its present locality, no agitation is called for against that measure. The alleged uncertainty carries with it an implication that there is a body of official opinion in favour of the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, and that opinion is being bolstered up industriously by a show of public opinion.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th June, 1906.

A public meeting held at Gorakhpur in support of the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

10 The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 20th June, states that a largely attended public meeting was held on the 17th idem in the Town Hall at Gorakhpur to consider the question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow. A resolution supporting the proposal was passed by a large majority, and a sub-committee consisting of some of the most influential citizens was formed to take necessary steps to promote the proposed measure. The editor adds that he has heard that certain men of Allahabad are about to visit Gorakhpur with a view to prevail upon some of the people there to hold another meeting protesting against the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow; but he believes that the Gorakhpur public would not allow themselves to be deceived into expressing disapproval of a measure which will be beneficial to them.

ZUL QARNAIN,

A public meeting held at Budaun in support of the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

11. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st June, states that, on the 20th idem, a public meeting was held at Budaun to express approval of the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, and that a resolution was unanimously passed supporting the measure.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
24th June, 1906.

A memorial protesting against the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 24th June, says:—The publication of a memorial from the province of Agra in regard to the remote probability of the transfer of the High Court should produce a wholesome effect. The memorial speaks for itself and is temperately and carefully reasoned, and should succeed in eliciting a definite and final opinion on the subject from the Government of India. The question really is not one that can be decided by memorials or public meetings, for both are entirely due to the idea that the transfer of the High Court was either impending or probable. There was no spontaneous agitation either for the transfer of the High Court or the amalgamation of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, and much of the heat that has been engendered by the controversy is due to local feeling. The difficulty of raising the discussion to a higher level has been realised. But the position of the Government is very different. The present location of the High Court is associated with deliberate pledges, which cannot be broken except for reasons of State of the highest importance, and none such exist. Compared with the position of the Government, local feeling or the wishes of a particular class sink into insignificance. It is in the power of the Local Government to close the agitation by laying before the Government of India the insuperable and weighty reasons that exist against the transfer of the High Court. It is no longer disguised that the agitation for the removal of the High Court is only preliminary to a larger demand for the transference of the capital from Allahabad to Lucknow, and the Government of India should be in a position to declare finally and unmistakeably that the entertainment of such a proposal is out of the question.

ADVOCATE,
24th June, 1906.

The Allahabad memorial protesting against the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th June, in commenting upon the Allahabad memorial protesting against the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, says :—Much of what has been said in paragraph 16 of the memorial about want of accommodation at Lucknow or unhealthiness of the town is not true. The information that Government ever intended to build High Court on the other side of the river is baseless, so also the assertion that it ever proposed to sink Rs. 75 lakhs on Government buildings or that it would cost Government an extra rupee to transfer the High Court to Lucknow. All these assertions show how the memorialists at Allahabad are unaware of the capacities of our fellow townsmen. Lucknow has got the land, it has got the capital and it has got enterprise. As soon as the question of the seat of the High Court is finally settled, within two or three years will rise up over one hundred bungalows on this side of the river close to the public parks and in the healthiest portion of the town, and double the number of houses in the Indian quarter. The Government shall not have to spend a single shell to find accommodation either for the Judges, members of the Bar or the general public. The hospitality of Lucknow is well-known. Every one shall have a commodious dwelling-house. All talk about inundation in the civil lines is meaningless rant. If in 1896 a portion of the Mall and Clive Road was under water at places where we have few residential houses, the province has not forgotten the inundation at Allahabad a quarter of a century ago when half the city was in danger of being washed away. But this is neither here nor there.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
25th June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

14. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th June, referring to the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, observes that the removal of the Court from Allahabad will cause the residents of the Central Provinces who may have occasion to attend that Court much unnecessary inconvenience and expense ; that Lucknow being already a very crowded town, it will be very difficult for litigants and members of the bar and amla to find suitable and cheap quarters there ; and that, as Lucknow is a very luxurious town and might well be called the Paris of India, litigants will be exposed to many temptations there. Besides the climate of Allahabad is in no way less salubrious than that of Lucknow. There is also a very strong fort at Allahabad, and the authorities would do well to take into consideration the cogent political reasons for which the High Court was removed from Agra to Allahabad.

HINDUSTANI,
27th June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

15. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 27th June, says that as the transfer of the North-Western Provinces High Court to Lucknow to be amalgamated with the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court there will cause dissatisfaction among the people of Allahabad on one hand, and the amalgamation of the Judicial Commissioner's Court with the North-Western Provinces High Court at Allahabad will displease Lucknow, on the other hand, the best course for Government would perhaps be to transfer the High Court combined with the Judicial Commissioner's Court to Agra, which but lately was the seat of the former court and was formerly the headquarters of the Moghal Government. The climate of Agra is also good, and there is ample room for the accommodation of the Court, officers, &c. in that town. The litigants of the eastern districts will no doubt have to travel a longer distance in case the High Court is located at Agra, but they will be compensated for their trouble by being able to visit the Taj, to see which people come from distant countries.

Protest against European Magistrates trying cases in their camps in the forest during the hot weather.

16. A Saharanpur correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd June, says :—European Magistrates in the hot weather find it very pleasant to go to the forest within their jurisdiction both for the cooler climate and for sport. This by itself nobody grudges, but when the officer fixes cases of people living far from his shikar camp to be heard there, it becomes unjust and intolerable. Fancy parties their witnesses and their pleaders going a long distance to such a dangerous place unarmed, because the Arms Act makes them defenceless against animals of prey. Certainly the Government never intended that such a wrong should be done to suitors and their witnesses, &c.

The object of magistrates going on tour is twofold—(1) to try cases of parties near about their homes, and (2) to inspect the crops, and report to the Government in his executive capacity. But our magistrates have no such object in view. Their primary, and I may say, the exclusive idea is to shoot big game unmindful of the inconvenience they cause to the public and the unfortunate people who have to transact business with them.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

A sentence of whipping passed on three small boys under the Railways Act at Roorkee.

17. A Saharanpur correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd June, says :—Whilst Mr. Morley, the Secretary of State, is anxious to abolish flogging throughout the British Empire, condemning it as a relic of barbarous ages, Mr. Ormrod the Joint Magistrate of Roorkee seems to believe in the efficiency of the rod as the most appropriate means of punishment. It was only the other day that in a case under the Railways Act against boys ranging between the ages of 7 and 12 years he passed a sentence of 25 stripes for each boy.

The medical officer reported that the boys were unfit to bear so many, and suggested a fewer number provided they were inflicted lightly. The young lads' mothers were weeping bitterly when the sentence was being pronounced. It is not yet known whether the sentences have been carried out. Of all the cases in which the sentence of whipping has ever been passed this is the most pitiable.

There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code under which such a sentence can be suspended by a higher court. Even if a higher court could be moved to do so, the order would be useless because the sentence is sure to have been executed before the order could reach the magistrate concerned.

The author of the Indian Penal Code never dreamt of this sort of punishment. It was only by the Whipping Act of 1864 that it was introduced.

It is the most inhuman punishment and the wrong once done can't be remedied. It is highly desirable in the name of civilisation that the punishment should be soon erased from the Indian Statute Book.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Three small boys sentenced to whipping at Roorkee under the Railways Act.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd June, says :—Our Saharanpur correspondent does not furnish us with the full particulars of the case in which a number of young boys of ages between 7 and 12 were sentenced to whipping by the Joint Magistrate of Roorkee for an offence under the Railways Act. But the important fact is before us that he sentenced each boy to 25 stripes, whether by way of school discipline or in the usual way is not apparent It is further stated that the medical officer reported that the boys were not fit to receive so many stripes and suggested a fewer number of strokes inflicted lightly. The name of the magistrate, we find, is Mr. Ormrod, and that seems to be significant of much. Is Mr. Ormrod very fond of the rod, and did that induce him to sentence a boy of seven years age to receive 25 stripes with a rattan? We hope our correspondent will supply us with complete particulars, for it must be brought to Mr. Morley's notice how his wishes are being carried out by magistrates in this country. As our correspondent points out there is no appeal and no means of staying this most cruel and degrading sentence, but it may be possible to bring Mr. Ormrod himself under the rod, figuratively if not literally.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Three boys below twelve years of age convicted of putting some small stones on the railway track and caned at Roorkee.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th June, says :—The facts of the whipping case at Roorkee are as follows :—Three boys of the ages of 7, 9 and 11 were convicted under section 130 of the Railway Act of 1890. They were found guilty of putting some small stones upon the railway track. The section enjoins that if a minor under the age of twelve years is found guilty of such an offence the court convicting him may, if it thinks fit, direct that the minor, if a male, shall be punished with whipping, or may require the father or guardian of the minor to execute, within such time as the court may fix, a bond binding himself in such penalty as the court directs, to prevent the minor from being again guilty of that act. The original sentence passed by the Magistrate was a whipping of 25 stripes each, but on the recommendation of the medical officer the sentence was reduced to 5, 7 and 9 stripes respectively, inflicted on the palm of the hand with an ordinary cane by way of school discipline. Having regard to the general principle of the law that no minor below 10 years of age can be found guilty of a criminal offence, this was clearly a case in which the alternative provision of the section of the Railway Act should have been enforced, and the fathers or guardians of the boys should have been warned or bound down to look after them more carefully in future.

Four Brahmans condemned to death on the charge of murdering a zamindar's karinda in the Allahabad district.

20. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th June, says :—Jugdment was delivered on the 14th instant by the Sessions Judge of Allahabad in the case of seven persons who were accused of murder of a zamindar's karinda. The three Pasi prisoners were let off and the four Brahmans were convicted of murder and sentenced to death. The Judge disagreed with the three assessors whose verdict was one of not guilty as regards all the prisoners. Two of the assessors were Muhammadans and one was a Hindu. They disbelieved the evidence of the alleged eye witnesses. There were so many peculiar features in the case that the Judge's finding and sentence are a surprise to all. There will be an appeal to the High Court where the death sentences will come up for confirmation.

ADVOCATE,
21st June, 1906.

Result of the trial of the case in which a British soldier lately shot a native on the Simla road.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says :—The trial of the soldier who deliberately shot one of the peons at the toll bar on the Kalka-Kasauli road has ended in a fiasco. The wounded peon was discharged from the hospital a few days ago. The case against the soldier came on for hearing on the 12th instant before the District Magistrate of Amballa who was on tour at Kalka on that day. The accused was defended by Mr. Ghulam Beg of the Amballa bar. He was charged under section 307, Indian Penal Code, but after taking evidence of the prosecution and the deposition of eye-witnesses the Magistrate altered the charge to that of an offence under section 338 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate, it is said, threw a hint to the effect that the case should be compromised ; and the wounded peon accepted a cheque for Rs. 100.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd June, 1906.

Issue of warrants of arrest.

22. The Nasím-i-Agra of the 23rd June, supports the Victoria Paper (Sialkot) in urging that when a warrant of arrest, that permits the execution of a bond for appearance with sufficient securities, is issued, the official entrusted to execute it should, in discharging his duty, take special care not to inflict unnecessary disgrace on the accused, who may ultimately prove innocent. As regards the Magistrate who issues the warrant, he should, in endorsing the same, direct the executing official not to apply handcuffs to the accused directly on presenting the warrant to him, but to allow him reasonable time and opportunity for giving bail if he can. Accused persons possessing landed property, which can be attached in case they abscond, should not certainly be handcuffed during the interval between the presenting of the warrant and the verification of the bail offered by them. Magistrates would also do well to make a free use of the discretionary power given them to issue summonses, if they think proper, even in those cases in which warrants can be issued under the law ; and in order to save persons from the disgrace attaching to the issue of a warrant against them, this harsh course should not be resorted to, unless it is absolutely necessary to do so.

CITIZEN,
25th Jnne, 1906.

A condemned prisoner and Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

23. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 25th June, says :—A special authoritative telegram to the Pioneer gives the following facts in reference to the case of a reprieve received too late, on which Mr. Morley was questioned. Udoy Patni was sentenced to death for murdering one person and grievously mutilating two others. He appealed to the High Court, which confirmed the sentence. He then appealed for mercy to the Lieutenant-Governor, who rejected the appeal. To the Government of India, he then submitted an appeal which the standing order of the Local Government had the discretion to withhold, since no grounds whatever were stated for interference with the High Court sentence. The appeal was, however, transmitted to the Government of India, and by "a regrettable oversight," it was not noticed that the postal distance of Shillong from Simla and the intervention of a Sunday left the Government of India inadequate time for considering the case. In connection with it the "Telegraph" of Calcutta asks who is to be punished for the day's work ? Certainly not Sir Bampfylde—because he is a big personage and draws a very fat salary—nor the Secretaries, because they are all above reproach—they can do no wrong. Perhaps a Bengali clerk drawing Rs. 50 a month would be punished for this regrettable oversight. King James of England had a cane-boy i. e. a boy who had to suffer all the caning from the pedagogue for any and every blunder that the little king committed in learning his lesson. In those days it was high treason to strike the person of a prince of the blood royal. Sir Mungo Malgrowther was the cane-boy of King James; likewise the Indian clerks of all Government offices are regarded as so many Malgrowthers of our white rulers. Our rulers commit hideous blunders in the administration of the Empire and the poor clerks get all the caning! This is division of labour no doubt, and we must suffer quietly under such a division.

CITIZEN,

A suit for damages filed by Mr. Sarbadhikari against a Judge of the High Court, Allahabad.

24. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 25th June, says:—Mr. S. Sarbadhikari, Barrister-at-law, Advocate of the High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Burma, and of the Chief Courts of Rangoon and Lahore, has before the promised time instituted a suit against the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Richards, K.C., for damages in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Allahabad, His Lordship having, it is alleged, used towards him discourteous language from the bench, and also for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from using such language towards the plaintiff in future. Mr. Sarbadhikari has very considerately, with a view to save His Lordship from any pecuniary embarrassment, reduced the amount of his claim from a lakh of rupees to but rupees one thousand. The relief as to injunction too has been very modestly valued at rupees five. Such magnanimity in the annals of litigation is sans parallel.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th June, 1906.

Appointment of Deputy Superintendents of police in the United Provinces.

25. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th June, says:—It is understood that a committee met at Naini Tal the other day to select men for Deputy Superintendentships of police in these Provinces, and that the appointments will soon be announced. We also understand that rules regulating the duties and privileges of these new officers are in the course of preparation. It is a very important experiment which is going to be tried, and it is to be hoped, both in the interests of the Government and the people alike, that none but those who deserve will be allowed to get in. The inevitable danger connected with all such appointments is the scope which favouritism generally finds for itself. We all know the grounds on which competitive examinations have been condemned. It is said that the man who enters by the open door of competition in this country is generally not the sort of man fitted for the requirements of service. Without entering into this large question, we may express a hope that the Government will not show an unnecessary bias for sons of the landed aristocracy. Not that we should like to exclude them, but we should emphatically insist upon other necessary qualifications—such as education, character and physical culture. Of the six appointments that are to be made by recruitment from persons not already in service, we should expect three at least to be given to graduates of approved qualifications, and it is by no means impossible to find three such men in these Provinces. As regards the status and duties of these new officers, it is to be hoped that they will be allowed to partake in the actual administrative work, and not employed as dignified clerks in the office of District Superintendents of Police. It is to be regretted that the question of their status and duties should be settled without any invitation of public opinion.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

One Jangi Lal and the police in the Allahabad district.

26. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th June, writes:—Jangi Lal is a zamindar and banker of Kohrar in the Mejee (Meja ?) police circle in the Allahabad district. He is the part owner of Bazar Kohrar, and proprietor and mortgagee of zamindari property in several villages paying about Rs. 3,000 as Government revenue annually. He also pays Rs. 70 as income tax on his profits in the banking business.

This man was unfortunate enough to incur the displeasure of one Hashmat Ali, Jamadar of the Kohrar outpost—a man presumably drawing Rs. 10 or Rs. 12 as his monthly pay.

One Ram Das, Brahman, is alleged to have been prompted by Jangi Lal to bring a charge of bribery against the said Hashmat Ali, Jamadar. It was an evil day for Jangi Lal when he was suspected of having helped poor Ram Das to beard the lion in his den, to charge the august representative of the British Raj with an offence of bribery.

The Jamadar got off—and Jangi Lal figured in the criminal courts as an accused charged with offences under sections 342, 323, 330, Indian Penal Code, on the complaint of one Marru Nath, a beggar, though the court tried the accused under section 352, Indian Penal Code. This Marru Nath was accompanied by a police constable from the Kohrar outpost to the Thana, and a constable was furnished by the said Hashmat Ali, Jamadar, to help Marru Nath to lodge his complaint. The case was duly inquired into by the sub-divisional officer, who in a carefully considered judgment found the whole case to be false and discharged the accused. Application was made by Jangi Lal for sanction to prosecute the complainant, his chaukidar witnesses, and Hashmat Ali, Jamadar, for offences under sections 211,109 and 193, Indian Penal Code. The trying officer sanctioned the prosecution of the complainant and one of the chaukidars (who figured as a prosecution witness), but rejected the application against Hashmat Ali, Jamadar. In the meantime, the police moved the sub-divisional officer to prosecute Jangi Lal for an alleged false information as to theft of mangoes lodged by one Jagmohan at the police station against the said Marru Nath, though as a matter of fact Jagmohan had made the report and not Jangi Lal. The Magistrate started a case under section 182 against Jangi Lal, and he was in due course acquitted. Jangi Lal was contemplating suing Hashmat Ali for heavy damages in the civil courts when the police sent up two of his servants in a badmashi case, the easiest and most convenient instrument in the hands of the police to bring to their senses anybody who has the presumption of showing the least independence of spirit or character. The case was thoroughly inquired into, and after a prolonged hearing the accused were let off. The judgment of the learned Magistrate is worth careful perusal.

While the case was going on, and Jangi Lal was in Allahabad looking after the case of his servants a paper was brought to him one day by a constable of the Kotwali police requiring him to appear before the officer in charge of the city police station on the allegation that the police of his circle had written to the Kotwali police here that Jangi Lal was a suspicious character, that he was an associate of thieves and burglars, &c., &c., that he had left his home for Allahabad and that the Allahabad police should look after him: in short that he should be kept under police supervision and police surveillance as a confirmed bad character of the worst type—mind this is the first move in the game; later on his name is sure to find a place in the badmashi register and, after a few entries of alleged suspicions against him of being concerned in offences against property he is sure to be run in himself as a bad character under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The paper mentioned above describing the mahajan and zamindar Jangi Lal in the choicest of terms possible was openly carried by a police constable to Jangi Lal's temporary place of lodging in Allahabad in the house of his Panda, and was shown to certain respectable persons, pleaders, &c., before he was taken to the police station.

There could be no greater indignation and degradation imaginable that could be offered to a respectable man. The matter rests here, at present—at least the public are not in a position to know what other mysterious instruments are being forged in secret for the utter annihilation of the offending Jangi Lal.

MUFID-I-AM,

The kotwali at Agra.

27. A correspondent of the Mufíd-i-Am (Agra), of the 20th June states that it is rumoured that the present kotwáli building at Agra is to be demolished and a larger one is to be newly erected at some place near Hari Parbat. The removal of the kotwali from the centre of the city to an outlying locality will, the editor fears, greatly impair the usefulness of that police station, and might even lead to an increase in crime in the city. If the writer is not mistaken the kotwali in all the large towns in these Provinces is located in their centre, and there is no reason why a departure from the rule should be made in the case of the kotwali at Agra. If the present building is small, a new and larger one may be erected at the same place appropriating the site of some of the neighbouring houses, as has been done in the case of the hospital.

Murder of a woman at Allahabad.

28. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 24th June, says:—In connection with the murder of a woman of the town at Katra, Allahabad, a man named Pyari Lal, a chaprasi, was arrested on the third day. He was the paramour of the woman and is reported to have made a confession before the Magistrate, the motive being jealousy.

The Indian loan system.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says:—Which country has greater credit in London, India or Japan? The question naturally arises when one marks the comparative failure of the issue of £ 2,000,000 India 3 per cent. stock, and the keen desire of the British people to purchase Japanese stocks. The reason is not easy to trace. It does not lie in political freedom or serfdom. The form and manner of issuing the loan is apparently at fault: though one does not know whether the Government of India would have obtained better results if the loan had been issued at a fixed price instead of being offered to tender, the point at issue seems all the same to lie there—debateable though the point undoubtedly is. The general public of course does not understand the tender system, and when a loan is issued on that system it opens a way for professional financiers to speculate; and they look to make a profit by subsequently re-selling it in small lots to investors at an enhanced price. The tender system of course has certain advantages, but on the other hand investors take a keener interest in loans for which they apply direct, and that is a point which a borrowing country cannot afford to leave out of consideration. The writer of the letter on Finance and Commerce in the Statesman takes some pains to let us know what Japan does in issuing loans. The Japanese, for instance, have shown a keen desire to interest a large body of the investing public in their bonds. They, it appears, take special pains to give allotments to small investors. The more popular a stock is as an investment, the less liable it is to give way in price under adverse market conditions, to say nothing of the free market which it commands. And it is beyond dispute that the great rush of applicants for Japanese bonds gave a valuable advertisement to Japanese securities. Here is a point for the serious reflection of those who are competent to advise and influence the Government into adopting the best system with due regard to the condition of India.

AL BAYAN,
22nd June, 1906.

Complaint regarding the allotment of revenue for local expenditure to the Government of the United Provinces.

30. Al Bayan (Lucknow), of the 29th Rabi-ul-Akhir, corresponding to the 22nd June, complains that while the annual revenue of the United Provinces amounts to over nine crores of rupees, the Imperial Government allots only about 3½ crores a year for local expenditure. The assignment made to these provinces from the receipts from stamps, excise and registration is only one-fourth, while the other provinces generally receive one-third of the receipts from those sources for local expenditure. Similarly out of the imperial grants of Rs. 5 lakhs for general education, 2½ lakhs for technical education, and 25 lakhs for police reform for the whole country, these provinces get only Rs. 80,000, Rs. 30,000 and Rs. 3 lakhs under those respective heads. All this is certainly not fair.

Certain municipal complaints at Agra.

31. The Jásús (Agra), of the 21st June, complains that pipe-water is supplied to the public at Agra only from 6-30 to 9-30 in the morning and from 4 or 4-30 to 5-30 or 6 in the evening, and that too at a very low pressure. This scantiness of water-supply causes much inconvenience to the people during the hot weather. It is a great pity that, while the water-rate is collected with great severity from the people, water should be supplied to them so sparingly. Surely the water should be turned on for a longer time both in the morning and evening, and at a sufficient pressure. The drains are flushed only once a day in the morning, and the result is that they become filthy again by the evening. The sweepers collect night-soil in Kamboh Tola, and let it remain there at times during the whole day. There are only four municipal lanterns in this muhalla, and of these two were not lighted for three days during the last week. Ekka drivers block the Subzimandi with their ekkas in the evening, thereby exposing passers-by to much inconvenience and risk. A stand at some convenient place away from the bazaar should be provided for ekkas. A form of gambling called ghari ka juwa (or French croquet) is daily practised openly in the evening in the bazaar near the fountain. The local authorities should see to all these complaints.

ZUL QARNAIN,
21st June, 1906.

A Municipal complaint at Budaun.

32. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st June, says that the inspection of animals for slaughter at Budaun is daily made on the roadside in front of the local Town Hall, and that approved animals are branded on their hoofs with red-hot iron, which is a very painful process and causes much annoyance to passers-by. The Municipal Board would do well either to adopt a less painful method of marking approved animals, or to assign some out-of-the-way place for the purpose.

Alleged sale of ghi adulterated with fat to the public at Benares.

33. The Bhârat Jiwan (Benares), of the 25th June, has heard from several persons that ghi, adulterated with fat, has of late been freely sold in the bazaar at Benares. This mixture is not only an abomination from the point of view of the Hindu religion, but is also injurious to the health of man. The Health Officer would do well to make an enquiry into the matter.

ADVOCATE,
21st June, 1906.

Appointment of Cantonment Magistrates.

34. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st June, says:—We do not know how far the dual system for the appointment of cantonment magistrates will work. The Commander-in-Chief will make the selection and the Local Government will make the appointment. The Cantonment Magistrate is supposed to administer law, and who is the best judge of the fact whether a certain officer is a competent Magistrate or not, the Local Government or the Commander-in-Chief? In every cantonment live a large civil population; their liberties depend upon the whims of Cantonment Magistrates. We now and then hear of Cantonment officers altogether unaware of the law and procedure. One is not surprised to hear that complainants or accused, instead of getting justice as prescribed in the law, are treated by the officers in their own way. One need not be surprised to hear, for instance, that when a complaint is made against any person, the Magistrate instead of passing a sentence of imprisonment, gets hold of the accused and has him shoe-beaten. Such vagaries are possible because the Local Governments have not any proper control over Cantonment Magistrates. This control will be less when they will be simply asked to say yes to the nominations of the Commander-in-Chief. We think the Government ought to have made some progress in this direction and insisted on the appointment of Civilians to administer criminal justice within cantonment limits. Even junior Civilians will be able to give better satisfaction to the people living within cantonment limits than the present race of Cantonment Magistrates who are without any legal training and not amenable to any public opinion.

CITIZEN,
25th June, 1906.

Nomination of Mr. de la Fosse to succeed Mr. Lewis as Director of Public Instruction in the United Provinces.

35. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 25th June, says:—It was on the strength of information supplied by a correspondent, whom, considering the department to which he belonged and the circle in which he moved, we could not help regarding as trustworthy, we made the statement that Mr. de la Fosse was a relative of His Honour Sir James LaTouche. A very high official has, however, sent in a contradiction of the statement, and we hasten to express our sincere regret that the imaginary relationship led us to make certain remarks which some of the parties concerned have felt to be rather embarrassing. The question of relationship eliminated, the remaining portion of what we wrote on the subject will be found to be perfectly correct. Not even the gentleman to whom we are indebted for having noticed our error has a word to say in justification of the choice made by the Lieutenant-Governor. And there are facts and figures which confirm the story of this sad supersession that has been made. Mr. C. F. de la Fosse, M.A. (Oxon) joined the Education Department on 18th February 1896, while Mr. Arthur Venis, M.A. (Oxon) has been serving since 1st July 1881 and the date of appointment to his present post of Principal, Queen's College, Benares, is 1st March 1894. Then there are Mr. Homersham Cox, M.A. (Cantab), who having joined as Professor on 5th March 1891 is senior to Mr. de la Fosse by five years; Mr. J. G. Jennings, M.A. (Oxon), who is senior to him by three years; Mr. John Murray, M.A., (Cantab), who became Professor on 12th October 1891, and Inspector of European Schools on 1st November 1896; and Mr. G. Hill, B.A. (Oxon), who was appointed as Professor on 16th

December 1895. Seniority, of course, is not the only ground on which promotion is possible, but the public have yet to learn what special qualification Mr. de la Fosse possesses that he has been permitted to supersede so many of his seniors, one or two of whom may fitly be regarded as veteran educationists. A local paper some time ago made the insinuation that it was the intention of Sir James Digges LaTouche to confer the post of Director of Public Instruction on a well-known Civilian of these provinces. Considering all that Mr. Butler has been known to do in furtherance of the scheme for establishing a medical college in these provinces, his constant efforts in the cause of education, and his remarkable administrative capacity, we very much wish for the sake of Mr. de la Fosse himself and the gentlemen whose claims have been so cruelly ignored that the statement made by our contemporary was correct.

A suggestion to Government for establishing some commercial schools in the United Provinces.

36. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 26th June, thanking Sir James Digges LaTouche for the various ways in which he has promoted the cause of education in the United Provinces, says that His Honour has recently removed a long-felt want of the people by providing for technical education at the Engineering College at Rurki, and suggests that, as His Honour's term of office is drawing to a close, he would do well to crown his glorious administration of these provinces by establishing commercial schools at Lucknow, Cawnpore, Meerut and some other large towns, and thereby supply another great desideratum.

Famine in Eastern Bengal.

37. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 25th June, says:—Amidst popular discontent and official high-handedness in Eastern Bengal the grim spectre of famine has been silently stalking over the land for the past few months. But things are at their worst now, and in many places a large number of people are going without food and are on the very point of starvation. Many people, for obvious reasons, are silently suffering and will not offer themselves for public charity under any circumstance; but there are others forming the vast majority, who have been reduced to extremities, and the depth of their misery and degradation can be better imagined than described. Harrowing tales of privation and distress, of tragic occurrences of gruesome ghastliness are reported from serveral quarters.

In the Tipperah district some people, driven by the pinch of hunger and want went to the length of attacking and looting houses in bazars. From Faridpur the news comes that "famine of the worst type is prevalent in the district specially in villages within the jurisdiction of police stations Muksudpur, Bhusna and Nagarkanda." The local paper Hitaishini, dated the 15th Jaistha, gives names of persons who are dead or on the point of death from starvation. The leaders of the people are doing their best to organise measures for the relief of the suffering population, but, unless Government does its duty, they will not touch even the fringe of actual suffering. In Backerganj, the granary of Bengal, the wails of distress are the loudest. There, we are told, a large number of families consisting of men, women and children are passing their days without food. Both the middle class men and the peasants have been very sorely affected. Hundreds of poor villagers are daily coming to the District Magistrate to pray for relief. Most of these men want takavi advances for cultivation purposes. These facts are gathered from the letter of a Barisal correspondent in the Patrika, who adds:—"Our Magistrate is perhaps now too much engaged with the cases of Mr. Jack and of Babu S. N. Banerji to think of the deplorable condition of these men and afford them any relief." "We are doing our best to persuade village heads and elders to help these famished people, and I am glad to say our efforts have to a great measure been successful. These headmen are letting people have rice at a smaller price on credit, on condition that they repay it when the next year's harvest is gathered. But the capacity of these men is limited, and unless Government does its duty at this juncture, people are bound to die." This is what another correspondent writes:—"Hundreds of famine-stricken people are daily coming from the interior and besieging the house of the Magistrate with a view to obtain relief from him. Their piteous cries and lamentations are heart-rending. They have been reduced to skeletons, and this fact alone speaks eloquently of the grave nature of their suffering." A Muhammadan gentleman also writes to the following effect :—"I have just now heard of terrible news. At a place near the Augarria Bunder, no less than 500 distressed people collected in broad daylight, and, equipped with a lathi and a bag each, went about to loot the granaries. The pangs of hunger have so much demoralized them that they have no longer any scruple against looting other people's property."

But the worst is told in a vernacular appeal over the signature of Babu Aswini Kumar Dutt, Secretary, People's Association. The appeal recounts rueful tales of how torn with the pinch of unappeased hunger and in mental anguish at the wails of their children some wretched people have laid violent hands on their lives or committed dastardly crimes. One Imamuddin of village Sarshi, unable to bear the sight of his children starving and vainly endeavouring to get food, put them out of their misery by killing them. One Kailas Karmakar, being unable to procure food for his dependents, hanged himself. Only recently one man at Shohagdal has committed suicide for the same reason, and another at Karapur was espied by somebody and saved in the very attempt at self-destruction. In the village of Ayla, an adjacent village, a woman did not get a morsel of food for five days after delivery of a child. In another village some men murdered an old woman and decamped with the quantity of rice in her store. One gentleman, while going in a boat to another village with his niece, was waylaid at night by several men armed with lathis and other weapons, and demanded immediate surrender of all they had on pain of being put to death. The gentleman, finding no means of escape, at once gave up all he had, only a few ornaments, which his niece had on her person, being spared. The men said that they were doing all this only because they had nothing to eat; what would they do with ornaments? Many families of the higher classes have been silently starving. In one family seven persons had to live for four days on two seers of rice. In some places numbers of people are going about begging the liquid refuse of boiled rice and the stuff cleaned off from rice from door to door.

How and when will the misery of our brethren in the new province end?

HINDOSTHAN,
25th June, 1906.

Decrease in pasture land and the periodical settlement of land.

38. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 25th June, says :—We have been asked by our District authorities to express our opinion on the subject of the shortage of pasture land and the proper means to store forage for the cattle during droughts.

The shortage of pasture-land is chiefly due to the inconsistency of the settlement which is subject to alterations at the expiration of every thirty years; because the Government not being content with the previous settlement, reassess the whole area of a district whether there is any room for any enhancement or not, and thus they incur great expense for each settlement and cause so much trouble and pain to the settlement officers, as well as to their underlings and subordinates. This inconvenience is also shared by the landed-proprietors, zamindars, muafidars, &c., &c., and gives rise to settlement cases. So, if the land which cannot allow of an enhancement were to be exempted from future settlements and permanently settled (because their rents cannot be increased), then their possessors would be tranquil and would effect still more improvements; but as this principle is not considered wise by our benign Government, the greedy landlords reclaim usar and grazing grounds to get increased rents during the period of one settlement, to be burdened with increased revenue in the next settlement. Moreover, the denudation of land from trees subjects it to frequent droughts and famines and punishes the greedy and non-greedy landlords alike; therefore, if a group of land for the surrounding villages were to be kept and preserved by the Government conjointly at the cost of landed proprietors, the scarcity of fodder would be removed. Now it will be seen from this article that the whole and sole reason of the scarcity of fodder is attributable to the inconsistency of the settlement.

Musalmans and the swadeshi movement.

39. The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for May, in continuation of its previous article (vide article No. 28 on page 350 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906,) publishes the opinions of two more distinguished Musalmans on the present swadeshi movement in this country. Shaikh Abdul Kádir, B.A., late editor of the Observer (Lahore), writes from London that a true swadeshi movement and not a transitory outburst of patriotism in resentment against a Government measure is sure to prove a blessing to the country, provided that it is maintained with perseverance and patience. Shaikh Muhammad Iqbal, M.A., writing from Cambridge, admits the usefulness of the swadeshi movement for both Hindus and Musalmans alike, but considers it foolish to boycott English goods only while those manufactured in other foreign countries are freely purchased. The movement is bound to succeed if Indians take steps to improve their arts and industries, instead of simply pledging themselves not to use foreign articles in future, or making bonfire of their dress made of foreign cloth, which is not only silly but harmful to the interests of the country both economically and politically.

ZAMANAH,
May, 1906.

The Bengalis and Honorary Magistracies and other Government appointments.

40. The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for May, observing that, though it is true that the late incidents at Barisal have caused much indignation in Bengal, it is absurd for the Bengalis to set up an agitation to induce their people to throw up honorary magistracies, municipal memberships and other Government appointments in general as mark of their dissatisfaction. Such an agitation is most short-sighted and impolitic, and cannot be expected to influence Government to change its policy in any way in their favour. Supposing the Bengalis throw up their municipal memberships in a body, they themselves will lose whatever rights of citizenship they have acquired during the last 40 years, and the authorities will be able to devote their attention more freely to the comforts of Europeans. It is very necessary that Indians should not lose a tittle of the powers they have already acquired; but rather their efforts should be directed to getting them further increased. Indians should in this matter take a lesson from the Irish, who while they have long been carrying on agitation against the British Government have never proposed to give up Government appointments in dissatisfaction. The present is a very critical time, and Indians should take care that they do nothing in haste for which they may have to rue hereafter.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th June, 1906.

The Anglo-Indian and the Babu.

41. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th June, says:—One hundred and fifty years of British rule has made the Babu. He is the product of European thought and influence. He is a modern man. He has grown under new and altered conditions. He is entirely a creature of circumstances. Though born in the country, he desires to be like the foreigner whose character and culture have moulded his aspirations. What is the Babu? Different men have different notions about him. English statesmen from masterful Macaulay to clever Curzon have described him. Anglo-Indian writers like Sir Ali Baba and Rudyard Kipling have depicted him. What does the term connote to the average Anglo-Indian mind? According to him any native of India with a smattering of English is a Babu. He may be a Hindu, Muhammdan, Christian, Parsi or Sikh; a Madrasi, Marátha, Marwari, Sindhi, Panjabi, Hindustani, Uriya, Assami or Bengali. His mode of life may be orthodox or heterodox; he may go about half-naked or be dressed in trousers, tail-coat and top hat, in the Persian paijáma and pagri, or in the primitive dhoti. He may be a banker, a bania, or a broker; a clerk or a collector; a munshi or a magistrate; a jeweller or a judge; a pariah, a pandit or a padri. In the eyes of our Anglo-Indian neighbour the Babu is bad enough: if he happen to be a B. A., he becomes a bore. If, again, a Babu B. A. be a pleader, he is treated as an intolerable nuisance. If further the Babu be a barrister, or happen to have been educated abroad and be a Bengali to boot, he becomes a veritable bugbear, a Babu Bogey. If such a Babu be an agitator, he becomes a danger to Anglo-India and a menace to the Empire. He disturbs the Anglo-Indian's mental balance, clouds his social horizon, and distorts his political vision.

In this land of malaria and mosquito, dust and heat, the Anglo-Indian talks and writes not as he usually does in a more congenial climate. Here he often rails, rants or raves: he can't stand the sight of the Babu in general and the Bengali Babu in particular. On the Babu's devoted head the average Anglo-Indian pours his venom of spite. He tells his clientele that the Babu is disliked and despised by his own countrymen of stronger fibre. Anybody that wants to be somebody in the estimation of Anglo-India has only to fall foul of the Babu and his Congress. Even a Bharucha and a ginwala are honoured and made heroes for their philippics against the Babu. All the sins of omission and commission of the Babu are summed up by the Anglo-Indian in one word viz., "self-assertiveness."

Let us now turn from the Babu to the British sahib. For a century and a half the latter has come in contact with the former, exploited his country and imparted his virtues and vices. Living in the land of creeds and castes, the Anglo-Indian has created a new caste of his own, a caste that admits no proselytes into its folds. With increased facilities for travel, the Britisher has no cause to live cheek by jowl with the Babu. What is an Anglo-Indian? An unadulterated or double distilled Britisher, a westerner of any hue, his son or his great-grandson of legitimate or illegitimate descent, a convert to Christianity whose sole claim to kinship with the Anglo-Indian rests on the name assumed by himself or his ancestor, is an Imperial Anglo-Indian. He may be a high officer of Government; he may belong to the civil, military or admiralty service. He may be an employé on a railway, in a merchant's firm, a tea or indigo garden. He may be an employer of labour, a newspaper scribe, an evangelist, an attorney, a barrister, pleader or mukhtar; a policeman, a pressman or a pensioner; a globe-trotter, adventurer or a vagrant. Although in their relation with one another Anglo-Indians are divided into innumerable grades, and sub-grades, castes and sub-castes, in their antipathy for and antagonism to the children of the soil they are, as a rule, remarkably united and agreed. Even a vagrant or loafer who begs of an Indian fancies himself to be a superior person. Supercilious arrogance is the average Anglo-Indian's characteristic; supreme contempt for the Indian is his creed; and exclusiveness is his fetish.

How to bring and keep together two such opposing forces as the Babu and the Britisher, is the question. They are alike sensitive and suspicious. The Britisher fears that the Babu is coming perilously near him; the Babu laments that his advances are repelled rather than encouraged. The Britisher wants the Babu to believe that every Anglo-Indian is the master and overlord of all Indians. The Babu wants the Britisher to treat him as a man and not as cattle. The official or the non-official Anglo-Indian, if kindly disposed and sympathetic to the Indian, condescends to meet him with a little less reserve and assumes a patronising attitude. The Indian—official or non-official— does not melt away in the sunshine of the condescension. The whole atmosphere is surcharged with forces of evil, antipathy and animosity; it is hard to detect the presence of a spirit of sympathy and good intentions. Broadly speaking, self-love and self-interest are the keynote of either class. In a society where every one lives for self- and self alone, there is little room for fellow-feeling. Passion and prejudice are the chief enemies of mankind, where they predominate there is no room for sympathy and sincerity. We have followed the recent discussion in Anglo-Indian papers on a plea for a better understanding between the rulers and the ruled. We cannot help feeling that in these writings there is a clear manifestation of the innate superiority of the one class and the inseparable inferiority of the other.

The Babu is the bête noire of the Britisher. Had the Babu not come between him and the masses who are like dumb, driven cattle, he would have freer hand to better his own interest. The ideals of magnanimity and philanthropy, which in all ages and climes have built up empires, do not find much favour in these days of practical politics. So long as the different races believe their interests to be opposed; so long as they do not realize fully that change is the order of nature, and that the temper of communities is just as much liable to changes as the temper of individuals; so long as individual Indians do not show more grit and go in them and extort admiration and respect from individual Anglo-Indians with whom they come in contact; so long as every educated member of either race does not feel that the honour and good name of his race are in his keeping; so long there can be no amity and confidence, no regard and good understanding between the rulers and the ruled in India.

The Shivaji celebration.

42. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st June, condemning the Shivaji celebration recently held at Calcutta as calculated to create bad blood between Hindus and Musalmans, joins Al Bashír (vide article No. 37 on page 352 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906) in alleging that the real object of the Bengális in holding the celebration annually is obviously that modern Indians might thereby acquire the spirit of Shivaji so that a person might rise among them and free the country from the yoke of the British Government as Shivaji had done from that of the Muhammadans. The speeches that were made on the occasion were in bad taste; and the writer strongly advises the Muhammadans to think twice before they took any part in the celebration of a rebel like Shivaji.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller on the boycott movement.

43. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th June, referring to the reply which the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller has recently given to the representation made by the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce regarding famine in Eastern Bengal, says:—The letter to the Chamber has a curious sentence in it. It concludes as follows: "The hardships which the poorer classes have been suffering owing to the unusually high prices they have had to pay for rice have been in some localities aggravated very considerably by a rise in prices of other commodities. This has been the effect of the methods pursued by those who desire to promote the acceptance of Swadeshi principles. It is hoped the Chamber will use its influence to discourage the boycott which at the present moment is adding to the troubles of the poor." It passes one's understanding how the rise in the prices of Indian-made articles, not yield of the fields and gardens, could possibly add so much to the sufferings of the poor as to call forth this fiat. It should well be remembered that utensils, as they are used by the poor, are always of Indian make. For raiment they generally use country-made fabric unless it be for festive occasions. So this fling at boy cotters is simply adding insult to injury.

ADVOCATE,
24th June, 1906.

Alleged misbehaviour of certain students outside a church at Dacca while service was going on there.

44. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th June, says:—The Pioneer still insists, that its statement about the Dacca students' behaviour on a Sunday while service was going on in the English church is true. The Pioneer writes: "We observe that various persons have been using the native press to circulate denials of a statement made in these columns that Bande Mátaram was shouted by a number of persons at Dacca outside a church in which the Commissioner of the Division was at the time reading the lessons. In regard to all such denials we have merely to say that the statement was accurate." But it is not the correspondents of "native" papers only who contradict these statements, but those of some Anglo-Indian papers also. Why not publish the official version of the incident?

ADVOCATE,
24th June, 1906.

Comments on the Pioneer's suggestion for Government to require all joint stock companies to get their accounts audited by chartered accountants.

45. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th June, says:—We appreciate the motives of the Pioneer in asking the legislature to do something to protect the interests of the persons willing to invest their savings in Joint Stock Companies. But the means suggested by it will affect the growth of companies as regards number towards which a tendency is now to be observed owing to the swadeshi movement, and we hope the Government will not be in a hurry to accept them. The auditing of accounts by chartered accountants is an excellent thing. But how can Government insist that every company should get its books audited by chartered accountants without regard to the amount of its capital? The suggestion that the Registrar of the Companies should be empowered to examine the papers of every company will prove injurious, as it will invite Government interference in the affairs and business of firms. This may scare away capitalists from floating new business. The registers now kept by the Companies under the Registration Act are many: to increase their number will cause much inconvenience. There have not been committed many swindles or frauds by the promoters of Companies in India to justify greater interference by the Government or vigilance on the part of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

ADVOCATE,
24th June, 1906.

Establishment of a Nursing Association for Europeans in India.

46. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th June, says :—The news about the establishment of a Nursing Association in Simla for the whole of India for the relief of the poor and suffering among Europeans raises much reflection on the fundamental difference between European and Indian domestic life. To a European the refuge in times of illness seems to be the hospital, to an Indian his home, however poor he may be. While this arrangement may and does save more lives in Europe and causes more deaths in India, it outrages the feelings of Indians. But what is needed is the education of our homes in the art of nursing—intelligent and sympathetic nursing at home.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th June, 1906.

A suggestion to memorialise the Government of India for an extension of Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces.

47. A Hindu Talukdar in Oudh writing to the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 26th June, observing that the régime of Sir James Digges LaTouche has proved a blessing to the people of the United Provinces, regrets that no steps have yet been taken to get his term of office extended, or even to erect a memorial in his honour. Famine is at present prevailing in certain districts of these Provinces, and the important question of adopting some legislative measure for the preservation of estates to the families of their hereditary owners has been engaging the attention of Sir James for some time past, so that his retirement at such a time would be most untimely, and would cause dissatisfaction among the agricultural classes. The people would therefore do well to lose no further time in memorialising the Indian Government for giving Sir James Digges LaTouche an extension of service ; and the writer hopes that His Excellency Lord Minto, who is a sympathetic ruler, will earn their sincere thanks by acceding to their request.

HINDUSTANI,
27th June, 1906.

Want of light in the waiting-rooms at small railway stations.

48. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th June, complains that the waiting-rooms at small railway stations are not generally lighted at night, a lantern being lighted there for about ten minutes, when a train arrives. This causes much inconvenience to passengers who sometimes have to stay long in the waiting-room at night. The writer had on several occasions to stay in the waiting-room at Gajraula station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and found it without a light.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th June, 1906.

Objection taken to the present system of exercising supervision over the press in the United Provinces.

49. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th June, says :—We should like to point out that the present system of dealing with the press in India is utterly unjust and wrong in principle. The police are employed in making enquiries about Indian newspapers. There is a prescribed form in which certain information about every newspaper has to be annually filled up, and this is usually supplied to police officers. There is no provision, so far as we are aware, in law to support such a practice, and a newspaper would be perfectly justified in refusing to give any information to a police officer, unless he can produce his authority for asking it. All Indian papers, whether published in English or the vernacular, are indifferently grouped together as the vernacular or native press, and there is a Reporter appointed for them. There is no Reporter for the Anglo-Indian press, and no police officer enters the office of an Anglo-Indian paper to make enquiries. This invidious distinction is as repugnant as it is unwise. The Reporter should report on the entire press, Indian and Anglo-Indian, and the same agency should be employed to collect facts about all newspapers. But the Government makes no secret of the fact that while it watches the Indian press with open suspicion, it exercises no supervision over the Anglo-Indian press.

HINDOSTHAN,
6th July 1906.

Proposal for constructing a railway connecting England with India.

1. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 6th July, referring to the proposal for constructing a railway connecting England with India, says that if this proposal be feasible, and the Amir of Kabul can be persuaded to permit the line to pass through his dominions, it should be taken in hand as early as possible. This railway, if constructed, will greatly improve trade between England, Central Asia and India. As regards the apprehension of Russia finding facility in such a line in invading India, if she is disposed to do so, it should be discarded as altogether baseless, for when she could not hold her own against so tiny a Power as Japan, how can she be expected to brave the British Lion?

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
May and June, 1906.

Suggestion for certain reforms in the present form of the Government of India.

2. The Hindustán Review (Allahabad), in its joint issue for May and June, says:—We are among those—and happily they form the great majority of the population—who accept British rule, we will not say as a dispensation of Providence designed for the good of India, (this may or may not be), but as an accomplished fact and as a vital factor in the uplifting of the people of India. At the same time we have no delusions about its character. We do not doubt that its permanence can be possible only if it becomes less exclusive and less alien. It must approximate to a national Government as far as possible, and no policy can be said to be in the ultimate interest of either Britain or India, which does not tend in that direction.

* * * * * * *

It is not that we suspect the intentions of the majority of Anglo-Indian administrators, much less of British statesmen, but it is a fundamental necessity of good government that educated Indians should be given some real voice in the control of their own affairs.

* * * * * * *

The Indian National Congress has never asked for any impossible reforms. It has asked, and even Mr. Morley will probably admit that it is justified in asking, for only such modifications in the existing arrangements as will secure—

I.—A more real control than at present obtains by the House of Commons over Indian affairs;

II.—Some real voice for educated Indians in the Government of their country.

* * * * * * *

We confess we see nothing at all to object to, nothing revolutionary, in these modest recommendations for the better government of India, and shall be surprised, indeed, if, once their true inwardness is brought home to his mind, Mr. Morley will not pay respectful heed to them. To our mind it entirely rests with educated Indians whether they will improve the present promising opportunity to the advantage of their mother-country and fellow-countrymen by calm but persistent appeals to the truest instincts of British statesmanship; or whether they will, with the impatience of children and the impetuosity of unbalanced minds, play into the hands of the enemies of Indian progress, by unmanly inactivity, or indulgence in reckless language, or in vain imagining and foolish delusions.

RAHBAR,
28th June, 1906.

Comparison between the condition of the Jews and the Indians of the present day.

3. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th June, observes that the cruel treatment that is being accorded to Jews in Russia is due to the fact that they are exiles from their own country, of which they have been dispossessed; and that it was to escape a similar fate that the Japanese lately risked their all in measuring swords with a formidable power like Russia. The condition of the Indians of the present day, who have lost all sense of patriotism, is not much better than that of the Jews in Russia, the former being treated as slaves while they are still in their own country; and unless they take to loving their country as the Japanese do theirs, they will ruin themselves like the Jews one day. The swadeshi movement, however, gives a gleam of hope of the amelioration of the condition of Indians. Heaven make the movement permanent!

Indians in South Africa.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st July, says:—We confess an account of the treatment which Mr. S. M. Manga received on his landing in South Africa, and which is contained in a letter that appears over his signature in the issue of June 8, 1906, of "India" does not fill us with surprise. Nor are we surprised to learn that he was granted the temporary permit which he sought by the British Consul-General as soon as it became known to that officer that Mr. Manga, though an Indian, was a Portuguese subject. It will, we are afraid, serve no useful purpose to call to mind in this connection the position of a Japanese in South Africa. What does it matter to us if a Japanese gentleman, as the "Gaelic American" reports, on his arrival at Durban was sought by the Natal authorities to be subjected to all those restrictions which our countrymen have to observe, but on his report to his own Government the matter was brought to the notice of the London Foreign Office with the result that a full apology was offered to him?

The position of our countrymen in South Africa may fill us with feelings of intense pain and deep humiliation, but we have not moved our little finger to better the unenviable lot of the members of our own race in that foreign land. What steps have we taken to convince the Government here as well as in England that the disabilities under which our countrymen, who served the Government so faithfully during the recent war, have to live and work are regarded by the entire Indian people as a great and unmerited slur on their loyalty and civilization? We are deliberately of opinion that a nation or an individual receives in the long run the treatment that it or he deserves. If we are so callous to the sufferings and indignities of our own unhappy countrymen in South Africa, we have no right to expect that our English rulers, out of sheer love and affection for ourselves, will remedy the present state of affairs.

* * * * * * *

Let us raise our voice against the iniquity of the authorities in South Africa, and let them feel that we are in earnest and mean business. But all this requires sacrifice of time, labour and money. Aye, here lies the rub. Have we become so ease-loving and selfish that we are incapable of undertaking any great work? We beg our Musalman brethren to join the Hindus in this agitation, for the number of Musalmans in South Africa is greater than that of Hindus. But if we sleep over the grievances of our own people in a strange and foreign land, we shall have established our claim to be trampled under foot by any and everybody in this world.

The Amir of Kabul's offer to re-appoint Dr. Abdul Ghani, Principal of Islamia College, Lahore, as his Private Secretary.

5. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd July, says:—It is stated that the Amir has sent a firman to Dr. Abdul Ghani, the Principal of the Islamia College, Lahore, to return to Kabul and resume his former duty. It should be remembered that Dr. Abdul Ghani, while studying for the medical profession in England, formed an acquaintance with Prince Nasarullah Khan, when the latter went to England. On his return from England, Dr. Ghani was offered the post of Private Secretary to the Amir, which he accepted, and he remained in charge of the Amir's English office for over six years. Dr. Ghani succeeded during his stay at Kabul in inducing the Amir to make a special grant of Rs. 30,000 and a permanent annual allowance to the Islamia College. He now returns to his former post under the Amir's Government.

A protest against the dismissal of the late Mir Munshi in the Jaipur State.

6. The Jásús (Agra), of the 28th June, complains that Babu Sansár Chandra, Rao Bahadur, a member of the State Council of Jaipur, has recently dismissed the Mir Munshi in that State, without either consulting the other members of the Council, or proving the charge of corruption brought against him. The Munshi was an old and experienced official of the State, and it was not just to summarily turn him out when he had nearly become entitled to a good service pension. In these circumstances, the Rao Bahadur would do well to reconsider the case of the Mir Munshi, and reinstate him.

Police administration in the Jaipur State.

7. A correspondent of the Jásús (Agra), of the 28th June, in a long article, complains that Bhim Singh, Assistant Superintendent of Police in Jaipur, is a very corrupt official. He is a well-to-do man, and has acquired complete influence over Thakur Bahadur Singh, the Superintendent of Police, by lending him some thousands of rupees, so that the latter, who is naturally a good-natured man, has become a mere tool in his hand; and the result is that the former freely tyrannises over the subordinates of the department. Sub-inspectors and others are frequently suspended, and there are police officials who have been under suspension for seven or eight years, no notice being taken even of the orders of the State Council directing their reinstatement. This state of things is very unsatisfactory, and the higher authorities should take steps to put an end to it.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th June, in commenting upon the Advocate's criticisms of the Allahabad memorialists' arguments against the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, says :—The Advocate has two very interesting sentences. It says : " All these assertions show how the memorialists at Allahabad are unaware of the capacities of our fellow townsmen ! " The capacities of Lucknow ! Who can venture to know their full extent ? For our part we believe that they are as great as they are dreadful. Then it says: 'The hospitality of Lucknow is well known.' It must be admitted that the statement is only too true, and that, but for this 'well-known hospitality' of Lucknow, the question ought to have received a quietus long ago.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

9. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th June, says:—The strongest reason that is given in favour of the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow is that Lucknow is a more central place than Allahabad. I fail to realise the truth of the assertion.

I think the majority of the population of the Province of Agra live nearer to Allahabad than to Lucknow.

In discussing this question I have only taken the case of big cities of the Province, for it is there that most litigation is carried on. The figures which I give below are taken from the census of 1892 and not from that of 1902; but I think they are materially the same, for the population of the province as a whole has only nominally increased since that time.

If the High Court is transferred to Lucknow only the people of the following big cities would have some advantage. These cities are Lucknow, Fyzabad, Meerut, Bareilly, Moradabad and Saharanpur. While those of Allahabad, Benares, Cawnpore, Agra, Mirzapur, Muttra, and Jhansi will find the difficulty in going down to Lucknow as the inhabitants of the former places do in coming to Allahabad.

Some may object why I have included Agra and Cawnpore in the latter list. Cawnpore is in the Allahabad Division, and the inhabitants would naturally like to have the High Court in Allahabad, for otherwise their work will be doubled, they having first to go to Allahabad and thence to Lucknow. As for Agra, a loop line of the meter gauge is probably under construction (or soon the work will be commenced) between Agra and Allahabad, and then the people of Agra would have great facility in running down to Allahabad.

Now let us look at the population of these cities.

In favour of Lucknow :—

Lucknow	264,000
Fyzabad	70,000
Bareilly	117,000
Meerut	119,000
Moradabad	75,000
Aligarh	70,000
Saharanpur	70,000
Total	785,000

In favour of Allahabad :—

Allahabad	175,000
Benares	219,000
Cawnpore	197,000
Agra	188,000
Jhansi	55,000
Mirzapur	80,000
Muttra	60,000
Total ...	974,000

In face of these figures it is not wise to say that Lucknow is a more central place than Allahabad.

ADVOCATE,
28th June, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th June, in discussing the question of the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, lays great stress on the latter town being in the centre of these provinces, and says :—There is a class of magistrates in these Provinces who now and then do not properly conduct themselves towards the barristers and vakils regularly appearing before them, but on whom the presence of an independent barrister or vakil from headquarters, whom the former's wry face cannot influence in any way, exercises great influence. Many clients in the Province of Agra cannot pay for the luxury of taking the High Court practitioners to the mufassil districts, because their one day's engagement means two days' fees. This explains the reason why the members of the Lucknow Bar are in greater demand in the Oudh districts, especially in criminal cases. This is not due to the weakness of the district Bar, but to the belief referred to above which may be erroneous, but which does exist. We have of course no means of judging whether a Magistrate conducts himself better on the Bench in Oudh districts or in the districts of the Province of Agra, but we have the assurance that a man in trouble in Oudh can much more cheaply secure legal help of the best quality than a man in the other half of these provinces. The best interests of these provinces require that the best intellects in the Bar should be at one centre, within an easy reach of all districts. The members of the Bar at the seat of the High Court should be in closer touch with the district Bar than they are at present, and this is possible only when the seat of the amalgamated Court is within the reach of everybody. To allege why a similar demand is not made in Bengal, the Punjab, Bombay, and Madras is simply to beg the question, because in those provinces, the first town has not been neglected, and they do not possess two capitals, one nominal and one real. The Lieutenant-Governor has to make Lucknow his real seat for the most part of the period he is in the plains. His secretaries for convenience in administration have to make Lucknow their headquarters, where the Local Government pledged by its word of honour has to maintain the highest appellate Court of the Province of which it is the capital. There is no Lucknow in the other provinces, as Mr. Yusuf Ali so well put it before a London audience, to which next to Calcutta people of an entire Province, Hindus and Muhammadans, without distinction of caste and creed, are attached. Take away Lucknow and the province of Oudh becomes a nonentity. There is not one intelligent resident of the Province of Oudh—be he peasant or taluqdar—who does not look with patriotic love on Lucknow. There can be no comparison of the position of Lucknow with bigger cities in the other provinces, and hence its claims can be regarded neither as ambitious or pretentious.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st July, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

11. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st July, referring to the proposals that have lately been appearing in the press for the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, wonders why no mention is made of Bareilly which is the most suitable place for the location of the High Court. Bareilly is not only the centre of the Rohilkhand Division, but also of the whole United Provinces, it has a very salubrious climate, and is an important railway junction, and the only thing it lacks is influential people like the Taluqdars of Oudh and others to put forward its claims. Government would do well to take the claims of Bareilly also into consideration, and locate at least a bench of the High Court there, leaving the rest of it at Allahabad.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

HINDUSTANI,
4th July, 1906.

12. A Muhammadan Taluqdar of Bara Banki in Oudh, writing to the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 4th July, says that, the Allahabad memorialists having admitted the fact of Lucknow being in the centre of the United Provinces, their plea that as Allahabad is a Hindu sacred town, the High Court should remain there, cannot prevail for there are several other towns in these provinces, like Benares and Ajodhia, which are held even more sacred by Hindus than Allahabad, and their residents might therefore well claim the location of the High Court in those towns. The Allahabad memorialists have thus failed to put forward any strong arguments against the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow. The only thing that they might now do is to intimidate the Local Government by asserting that the removal of the High Court from Allahabad would cause a great dissatisfaction among the people of these provinces, as the late partition of Bengal has done in the latter province. But here too, their assertion would be equally groundless. In Bengal it was a case of partition, while in these provinces, instead of anything being divided, two courts are to be combined and located at Lucknow. It is therefore clear that those persons who can look at the affair disinterestedly and impartially, will see nothing against the location of the High Court, amalgamated with the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court, at Lucknow; and the educated classes of these provinces should think twice before they support the unreasonable position taken up by the interested people of Allahabad in the matter.

The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár on the Allahabad memorial protesting against the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th July, 1906.

13. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 4th July, in commenting upon the memorial submitted to the Government of India by the people of Allahabad protesting against the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, rejects as absurd the sanctity of Allahabad as an argument for the retention of the High Court in that town, there being other places equally if not more sacred; and, pointing out that the court had to change its locality from Allahabad to Agra, and then from Agra to Allahabad in the past as public or administrative exigency required, urges that there is no reason why it should not be transferred to Lucknow, if it is expedient to do so on the ground of the latter town being centrally situated, and affording greater convenience to suitors in visiting it. As regards the argument of the loss which the house proprietors at Allahabad will be put to by the removal of the High Court from that town, the writer observes that during the last forty years the High Court has been at Allahabad the house proprietors there must have by this time recovered much more than their outlay from the rents of their bungalows, and hence it is simply undue greediness on their part to cry of loss even when it is probable that all the houses falling vacant on account of the removal of the High Court will be taken up by railway employés and by the well-to-do Indian residents in the town who cannot at present live in the civil lines for want of bungalows.

A public meeting held at Basti to support the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

OUDH AKHBAR,
4th July, 1906.

14. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 4th July, says that a public meeting was held at Basti on the 29th ultimo, at which it was unanimously declared that the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow would tend to the convenience of the people of the Basti district.

A suggestion to Government for appointing separate officers to exclusively do judicial and revenue work respectively in the United Provinces.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th June, 1906.

15. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th June, says that as Deputy Collectors in the United Provinces have to try both judicial and revenue cases, almost all their time is generally taken up by the former class of cases which are considered more important; and that the result is that revenue cases are kept pending long and are then decided hurriedly and perfunctorily. Government has temporarily sanctioned the appointment of some additional Deputy Collectors in the hope that the approaching termination of settlement work in several districts will make the services of a number of Deputy Collectors and Civilians available for case work; but the writer thinks that this will not mend matters to an appreciable extent and that nothing short of a permanent increase in the cadre of the provincial service will meet the situation. Again, as Deputy Collectors do more judicial work at present, they do not generally possess a sufficient knowledge of the revenue law, and often commit serious blunders in the decision of revenue cases in consequence. To remedy this evil, it would be well if Government separated judicial from revenue work altogether, and appointed two separate sets of officers to exclusively do each kind of work.

ADVOCATE,
1st July, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the civil and criminal administration of justice at Benares.

16. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st July, says:—It is rather inexplicable that within a stone's throw of one of the city police stations at Benares and within the jurisdiction of the municipality there should remain a locality ominously silent and solitary during night, thereby inviting pick-pockets, cut-throats and murderers to carry on their trade with impunity. The locality in question is Pisháchmochan, which is very close to the Chetganj Thana, where thefts are of frequent occurrence. Not a constable can be seen during the dark hours of night, and the inmates of the houses round the tank remain in constant fear. The other day a murdered boy's corpse was found floating upon the tank of Pisháchmochan. Instances are not few and far between of the commission of crimes in this locality, and we do not know why the residents of this quarter, notably the Pandas, remain indifferent to the danger that daily threatens them.

Of late the Benares public have been much exercised about the laxity of the criminal administration of our city owing to the cases of murder, thefts, arsons, &c., not being properly investigated. It is said that some murderers have escaped, and no clues have yet been found to their whereabouts. Instances can be cited when perpetrators of fatal deeds have altogether evaded justice and the Benares police have hopelessly failed to detect the criminals. A month ago a Muhammadan youth, aged about 18 or 19 years, was found dead below the house of a woman of ill-fame, and no trace of the murderer has yet been found. The corpse of a son of Dr. Bhunden Mukerji, aged 10 or 11 years, was found floating upon the tank of Pisháchmochan as stated above, and though the doctor raised a hue and cry at the time to find the murderer of his innocent son, nothing has come out of the so-called searching inquiries made, and the murderer still remains at large. Instances can be added. The failure to bring the criminals to justice in these cases has created a great consternation in the city and one can easily imagine what impression it has produced upon the minds of the ignorant folk. Now turning to the civil side of the administration we find strange anomalies prevailing in the subordinate Judicial Courts. For instance, repayment orders for decretal money issued from the courts are carried out after a long and tedious delay, and the party or parties to suits are subjected to unnecessary trouble and harassment. Formerly such orders used to be promptly executed. Then again, notices of the court in accordance with section 245B of the Civil Procedure Code should be so posted and published as to allow both pleaders and litigants sufficient time to prepare their cases, but as things are at present arranged great delays occur much to the loss and inconvenience of the parties concerned. The service of processes is carried on in a haphazard way, with the result that processes are not properly served. Proper division of labour among court peons can alone mitigate the existing evil. It is a well-known fact that a civil suit drags its dreary length and at its end the plaintiff or defendant gets his decree with costs, but there is no rule as yet made for the payment of interest during the pendency of the suit for the sum of money which the litigants expend in purchasing printed forms and which is added to the decretal amount. Thus the administration of both (civil and criminal) justice is carried on in a way that does not bring satisfaction and peace to the aggrieved parties: individual failures of duty can hardly be the cause of such a sad state of affairs. We therefore venture to hope that the higher departmental authorities will take action in time to set matters right, and cause the course of justice and fair play to run smoothly and well.

EXPRESS,
28th June, 1906.

Burglarious thefts at Allahabad.

17. The Express (Lucknow), of the 28th June, says:—At no season of the year is property safe at Allahabad, though it is most insecure in the rainy season. Burglarious thefts are of frequent occurrence, and hardly a week passes without a number of such cases happening, though the people have got accustomed to take their losses placidly enough. In the last fortnight, thefts occurred on clear moonlight nights in bungalows on the Elgin and Stanley roads. With the outbreak of the monsoon such thefts will increase in number, and the police are powerless to prevent them, or to defeat the thieves or recover stolen property.

RAHBAR,
28th June, 1906.

Police administration in India.

18. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th June, says that the police administration in India is very unsatisfactory, because (1) the Superintendents of Police are generally Europeans, (2) very low pay is given to constables, and (3) unlimited powers are vested in the police. European Superintendents are not expected to be thoroughly acquainted with the manners and customs of the people of this country; and the result is that they allow themselves to be mainly guided by their Indian subordinates in almost all matters. This evil would be greatly minimised if Government promoted able and experienced Indian officers of the Department to Superintendentships in larger numbers than it has hitherto done. The pay given to constables is so small that they cannot help accepting bribes to make both ends meet; and when they have once become corrupt they continue to be so throughout their whole career. The powers exercised by the police are so large that they can at any time arrest the biggest rais in the country for little or no reason, and justify their action on the plea of administrative necessity. No check, the writer is afraid, can be put on the oppression practised by the police so long as the Judicial and Executive functions are not separated, and the pay of the subordinate police staff is not sufficiently raised.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
28th June, 1906.

Police reform in India.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th June, says :—Probably in no other country in the world are the police held in such dread by the common people as in India. In Russia the police are all powerful, but their ways are more or less mysterious, and we are daily reminded that India is infinitely better governed than Russia. But even in Russia instances of positive maltreatment by the police are not heard of so frequently as in India. Prisoners on their way to Siberia are often ill-treated, but then they are in the hands of troops and Cossacks. In the terrible revelations that were made of the rule of Tammany in New York, it was stated that the police carried on fearful oppressions. They were not only corrupt to the core, but offered physical violence of a particularly brutal description. It was found that in some cases policemen had their knuckles cased in brass caps with pointed heads, and they struck people with their closed fists, inflicting serious wounds. But it was only a party affair, confined to a small number of people, and did not affect either the police or the people as a whole.

In Europe the police exist to help the people, to preserve order, and to deal with the really lawless classes. In India the police exist to tyrannise over the people, to break the peace and to deal with the law-abiding and lawless classes alike. In England a policeman is considered more respectable than a soldier; in India the people hardly distinguish a policeman from a dacoit. In Europe any one in distress, any one who has lost his way will readily turn to a policeman for help; in India no one who is not particularly well dressed or respectable will venture to do so, and if he does, the reply is not encouraging. In Calcutta, for instance, it has almost passed into a proverb that if a policeman is asked to show the way to any locality the reply invariably is "Sála sidha jáo." The first word is an abuse, and that describes perfectly the policeman in India. Every one brought before a policeman or a police officer is greeted with a volley of abuse of the grossest kind. Europeans or Indians, there are very few persons in the police force who are clean-mouthed. And it may be justly added that fewer still in the police force are clean-handed.

It is a general principle that some of the proceedings of the police should be confidential. For instance, when tracking a dangerous criminal, unravelling the tangled skein of a complicated plot, or following the clue of a mysterious crime, the police must work in secret, but it is doubtful whether the police in any European country keeps a badmáshi register like the one with which we are familiar in this country, or whether a man who happens to be in the bad books of the police is pursued so relentlessly. The police force in India is in such great disrepute that until recently young men belonging to respectable families were not permitted by their guardians to enter the force even as an officer, and even now no educated man enters the Police Department if he can make a living elsewhere. The belief is almost universal that a career in the police force is extremely demoralising, and this belief is very well founded.

A few years ago it was quite a common thing to hear of inhuman tortures inflicted by the police to extract confessions from prisoners, and to detect crime. Some years ago a man was so ill-treated by the police at Amritsar in the Punjab that he threw himself into a well and was drowned and so escaped his torturers. The police officers concerned were severely punished. Only the other day, near Calcutta, some policemen were found trafficking in girls and compelling them to lead an immoral life. We do not of course mean that the whole police force is equally bad, but there can be no doubt that morality in the force is low and the powers of the police are constantly abused. Whenever an arrest is made for a crime, the suspected person or persons are habitually ill-used, though no marks of ill-treatment are found on their persons. And hardly one out of a hundred such cases is brought to the notice of the public or can be proved in a court of justice.

The manner in which the conduct of the police is looked upon by the district authorities and subordinate magistrates may be easily judged by a few typical cases. Take the dispersal of the Barisal Provincial Conference, for instance It is not denied that a number of the delegates and others were assaulted by policemen with láthis. There was no need whatever for this violence. All the delegates were absolutely unarmed, and the District Superintendent of Police could have arrested the whole procession without any difficulty. Had there been any thought of resistance, what could have the handful of policemen availed against a crowd of five or six thousand people ? The assault was unprovoked and unnecessary, but the District Magistrate dismissed the complaint without investigation. When the trial was resumed by the Deputy Magistrate, an Indian, at the direction of the High Court, he also dismissed the complaint on the ground that the police had not exceeded their duty. Similarly, at Jullundur all the policemen concerned in compelling the removal of a patient suffering from small-pox from his house have been acquitted by the Magistrate on the ground that they used no actual violence. Instances of this kind can be multiplied almost without number. In presidency towns, police magistrates convict accused persons every day on the uncorroborated testimony of policemen, though experience has shown that such evidence should be received with the greatest caution.

For our part, we do not believe the recommendations of the Police Commission will have the effect of raising the morality, or the intellectual calibre of the force. The primary conception of the duties of the police force in India is wrong. It is not necessary for the police to pursue tortuous methods, or to terrorise over the people. There is far less crime in India than in many European countries, and the people are the easiest to deal with in the world. Instead of inspiring terror in the minds of the people, the police should be friendly with them. Corruption is too widespread and too deep-rooted to be removed by a revision of the scale of salaries. A better educated class of men must be drafted into the police force if its morality is to be raised. The secret powers of the police should be curtailed, and their secret and confidential diaries must be carefully scrutinised and checked. Facilities should not be given to the police to ruin the reputation of a man, or to get him into trouble. They must be compelled to use cleaner language and to cease offering physical violence to persons arrested on suspicion. Officers should be deputed to pay surprise visits to police stations and to examine into their working, and policemen should be more carefully trained to their duties. In short, everything should be done to make the police force a credit, and not a discredit as it is at present, to an enlightened Government.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st July, 1906.

Appointment of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

20. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st July, referring to the appointment of six Deputy Superintendents of Police from men already in the Government service, in the United Provinces, writes :—Judged by religion the nominations are satisfactory, since there are three Hindus and three Muhammadans, all the Hindus being Brahmans. The public will also want to know the principle which has guided these appointments. On this point we have no more light than our readers, but we find that all the nominations have not been confined to the Police Department. Thus, Pandit Sham Bihari Misra is a Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collector, Munshi Mamnún Hasan Khan is a Tahsildar, Babu Satya Nidhan Banerji is a Court Inspector of Police, Pandit Lachhmi Das Deogan is a Visiting Inspector of Police, Munshi Inám Muhammad Khan is also a Visiting Inspector, while Munshi Muhammad Amín is Head Master of the Police Training School, with the rank of a Court Inspector. It may be added that there is no Indian Assistant Superintendent of Police in the United Provinces, and only one Indian District Superintendent, Mr. Islam-ullah Khan, in the third grade of District Superintendents. As regards the system of appointment of Deputy Magistrates and Tahsildars as Deputy Superintendents of Police, we should like to inquire whether it is likely to be introduced in the other provinces also. On the face of it, it involves an injustice to deserving police officers.

CITIZEN,
2nd July, 1906

Murder of a woman at Allahabad.

21. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd July, says :—In the Court of Mr. C. E. D. Peters, C.S., Joint Magistrate of Allahabad, one Piare Lal, a chaprasi, stands charged, at the instance of City Inspector Anwar Ali, with murdering his paramour, one "Barri Jan" by cutting her throat from ear to ear and by inflicting other serious wounds, an offence punishable under section 302, Indian Penal Code. The facts of the case as borne out from the evidence for the prosecution appear to be as follows :— On the morning of the 19th June several people on passing the deceased's door saw her lying on the floor, apparently lifeless. City Inspector Anwar Ali, in consequence of information received, repaired to the scene of occurrence, together with Raj Gopal, Sub-Inspector, and there elicited the fact that Piare Lal had had a quarrel with the deceased on the previous night. After despatching the body to the mortuary, City Inspector Anwar Ali lost no time in arresting and chalaning the accused. A gandása, the instrument of murder, was found in accused's house. The court will in due course frame charges under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and commit Piare Lal to stand his trial at the Criminal Sessions.

22. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st June, referring to the scarcity of drinking water in Jhansi regarding which a correspondent lately complained in the Pioneer, says that it is a great pity that while the Local Government has thought fit to provide water works in such places as Allahabad, Benares, Agra, &c., where plenty of water could be obtained from wells, it has never considered the necessity of providing similar facilities for water supply in Bundelkhand, where the people suffer so much for want of it from any source.

The proposed Hindu University scheme.

23. A correspondent of the Hindustán Review (Allahabad), in its joint issue for May and June, criticising the proposed Hindu University scheme, says :—Truth, which the conservative instinct of man has always tried to ignore, needs to be impressed on the minds of educated Indians now more than ever. The extravagances of a few ultra-Radicals, who went mad after things European and indulged in many a foolish freak to give expression to their sense of "emancipation" from the fetters of the past, have been followed by an extrordinary reaction. The fear of change, the natural inertia of the Hindu mind, and the feeling of "national" vanity, aided by such active agencies as the Theosophical Society and the Arya Samaj, have upset the mental balance of a large section of the educated classes, including some of the best men amongst us, and have created a dangerous and an almost insurperable obstacle in the way of progress. The proposal to found a Hindu University at Benares on so-called "national lines" seems to me to be the latest symptom of this unhealthy spirit.

* * * * * * *

The prospectus of the proposed University is divided into two parts. In the first part the need for the creation of such a University is explained, and in the second the scheme itself is outlined.

* * * * * * *

The argument of the first part may be summed up as follows :—"The Hindus are poor, illiterate and weak. The action or the inaction of the Government is not one of the important causes of their decay. It is due to the decay of religion. Formerly the Hindus were great materially because they were great spiritually. They were a nation of philosophers. The organisation of Hindu society as based on caste was perfect. But they are now disorganised, for they have strayed from the ancient path. The greatness of Europe which dates from the Renaissance is based on the study of the classics and religion. The education imparted in our country is non-religious. If we want to improve there must be a Renaissance of Sanskrit learning coupled with technical and industrial education, and the latter should be imparted in the mother-tongue."

* * * * * * *

There are not many thoughtful people who would be prepared to admit that for the poverty and illiteracy of the mass of our population the action or the inaction of the Government is not in a considerable measure responsible. I am not going to discuss this question in this article, but if the writings of experts like Mr. R. C. Dutt, Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, and the late Mr. Digby have any meaning, and the opinions expressed authoritatively year after year from the platform of the Indian National Congress are anything better than so many fatuities, the poverty, the increasing and appalling poverty of the Indian masses is due in a considerable measure to the action or the inaction of our Anglo-Indian rulers, and cannot be removed without a change in the policy of the Government and the administrative machinery. If this view of the matter be correct—and no sane Indian, much less an Indian subscribing to Congress views, can repudiate it—the material progress of India is not possible without strong and persistent political agitation. It is to the ignoring of the political factor in the life of a nation that we owe our decay in the past; a repetition of the same mistake will ruin our national life in the future.

The second point with which I wish to deal is an idealised picture of the ancient Hindu civilization which has been painted for us in this prospectus.

* * * * * * *

With due respect to the artist who has painted the picture of the ancient Hindu society in rainbow hues, I refuse to accept it as real. The picture does credit to the heart of the writer, but it is not faithful. While admitting to the full the marvellous progress made by Indo-Aryan intellect in the speculative sciences, a sober and truthful writer is obliged to acknowledge the weakness of the Hindu social polity which eventually led to its downfall. Harischandra and Yudhisthra may have been very truthful men, but what should we say of society in which wives could be sold by their husbands and lost and won at the gaming table? Dasarath may have been a very good man, and Rama a very obedient son, but what should we say of the political capabilities of a people who allowed the headship of their State to be made the plaything of a woman's whims? The heroes of the Mahabhárata are regarded as ideal characters by their Hindu admirers, but is it not a curious fact that their doughtiest opponents, Drona, Bhishama, Karan and Duryodhana, owed their death in some way or other to deceit and foul play? And then on what grounds of justice or fairness is it possible for our orthodox friends to defend the inhuman treatment of the shudras? It may be that labour and service are the lot of the mass of people of humble birth, but in healthy and robust societies there is room for a John Burns in the cabinet of his country, by the side of the proudest peer of the realm. The Hindu social system scarcely treated its lowest castes as human beings. The door of knowledge was closed against them, and the direst penalties were prononuced against him who dared to open it. But it is useless to labour the point further. The system was based on the apotheosis of blood and sex. Whatever justification there may have been for exclusiveness on the part of the Aryans, in the Vedic age, that justification ceased to exist as soon as the non-Aryan castes were admitted within the pale of Hinduism. But the history of the Hindu race and Hindu religion has a sad tale to unfold, so far as the position of the bulk of the people is concerned, for the social system of the Hindus sedulously refuses to admit the brotherhood of man, even in theory. And it scarcely behoves the educated classes of India, who resent, and resent rightly, the air of superiority assumed by Anglo-Indians, and who agitate against the degradation of their countrymen in the British colonies of South Africa, to admire and uphold a social system whose foundations are laid on the accident of birth, and which debars millions of human beings from all higher religious and spiritual knowledge. And if an appeal to our sense of justice and fair play were not found sufficient, the calamities which had already fallen upon the people, because of the wrong and unhealthy principles which it followed, should serve as an object lesson to the most perverse-minded among us. I hope that the conception of social justice which has come to us with the democratic ideas of the West is too good and too strong to be easily blotted out even by an appeal to the "wisdom of our ancestors." For, as says Mr. John Morley, "a people once saturated with a passionate conception of justice is not likely to fall into a Byzantine stage. That destiny only awaits nations where the spiritual power is rigorously confined in the hands of castes and official churches, which systematically, and of their very constitution, bury justice under the sterile accumulation of a fixed superstition." Thanks to the light which has come to us from the West, we are just emerging from the Byzantine stage. It would be nothing short of suicidical folly to plunge back into it again.

* * * * * * *

Now I think I have shown above that the ancient Hindu civilization was not as perfect as it is represented to have been. It was defective in several respects. But above everything else it suffered from an over-dose of religiosity. Religion, with us, did not exist for man, but man existed for religion. The material side of life was largely neglected. Religion was held to forbid all intercourse with foreigners.

* * * * * * *

Among the many virtues with which the ancient Hindus are credited, patriotism does not find a place; most probably because the very conception of patriotism was non-existent. The subjection of the people to the priests has been the bane of Hindu civilization, and to it we owe the slow but sure decay of our national life. This idea has been brought out so well by Mr. R. C. Dutt in his History of Civilization in Ancient India that I need not make any excuse for quoting the following paragraph ;—

> "As we drift down the history of Hindu civilization, we notice, along with a remarkable progress in sciences and learning and the arts of peace, an unhappy sign of social institutions being more and more crystallized into hard-and-fast rules, which gradually contracted the liberties and the free energies of the people. Four or five centuries of peaceful residence in a genial climate in the fertile basin of the Ganges and the Jumna enabled the Hindus to found civilized kingdoms, to cultivate philosophy, science and arts and to develop their religious and social institutions; but it was under the same gentle but enervating influences that they also unconsciously surrendered all social freedom, and were gradually bound down by unhealthy priest-imposed laws and restrictions which made further progress on the part of the people impossible. This is the dark side of Hindu civilization. Priestly supremacy threw its coils round and round the nation from its early youth, and the nation never attained that political and social freedom and strength which marked the ancient nations of Europe."

* * * * * * * *

The Renaissance, no doubt, exerted a great influence on modern European civilization, but it was in conjunction with a still more potent movement, the Reformation. It was the Reformation which finally broke the supremacy of the Pope and freed the life of Europe from the deadening influence of a priestly tyranny. If we are to take a leaf out of the book of European progress, it is on this movement that our attention ought to be concentrated. India, too, has had her Reformations in the past, the Budhistic and the Vaishnav movements, for example, and its future success is in a way bound up with such protestant movements as the Brahmo Samaj and the Arya Samaj. These samájes as samájes may succeed or fail, but the nation, if it is to live, must be saturated through and through with their protestant spirit.

* * * * * * *

As regards the details of the scheme, "admission to the college will be regulated in accordance with the rules of the varna ashrama dharma." But to establish a Hindu University in the Twentieth Century and to close the doors of all spiritual and religious knowledge to the lower castes—who form the vast bulk of the population—would be nothing short of a social crime. For either these castes will remain ignorant and superstitious and thus be a source of weakness to the entire community, or they will rebel against a system which consigns them and their descendants to eternal perdition. Each of the alternatives has its own dangers, and it behoves the well-wishers of the Hindu community to take note of them.

It is declared that all teaching at the University, for students drawn from all parts of India, will be carried on in Hindi. I submit that this is impracticable.

* * * * * * *

We can hope only that the forces which are slowly but surely working for the nationalization of the Indian people, and which have achieved such marked success in other countries, will prove in the long run too strong for the centrifugal tendencies of Religion.

* * * * * * *

I know that situated as we are, and hampered almost at every turn by the prejudices of caste and creed, the idea of a Hindu nationality or a Muhammadan nationality is not without a certain fascination of its own, and that even some of our best men are not proof against it, is proved by the following passage which occurs in a letter written to a friend of mine by one of the staunchest of our Congressmen and the most uncompromising of social reformers of southern India :—

> "I don't agree with you in your conclusion. In some important matters my conviction and mode of thought are changing. If the Hindu nation were to wait for the time when its national efforts can be quite cosmopolitan, that is, such as will embrace the interests and prejudices of such different and even hostile nations as Muhammadans and Christians, I am afraid the Hindu nation will reach deeper depths of degradation, when no effort will be possible. I am a believer in the policy of progress on the line of least resistance."

I beg to record my strong protest against this enervating and "un-national" doctrine.

* * * * * * *

Even if the scheme were practical and perfect, I submit that the present is not the time to carry it into execution. The partition of Bengal has suddenly brought the political problem to the front. The battle which the Calcutta leaders are fighting so bravely is constitutional and national in its character and magnitude. The swadeshi movement is one of the most potent weapons yet forged by the Indian political agitator. The political atmosphere of India is charged with electricity, and the country is moving forward quickly on the road of political agitation. As the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale expressed it, "the heart hopes but yet it trembles." At this juncture, at any rate, every nerve should be strained and every particle of our energy should be utilised for political work.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
May and June, 1906.

The new vernacular system of education in Bengal.

24. A School Master, writing to the Hindustán Review (Allahabad), in its joint issue for May and June, comments on the new vernacular system of education in Bengal as follows :— There has been a perceptible reduction in the amount of reading of some of the subjects formerly included in the course of studies, while others (mainly the scientific portions of the old course) have been completely replaced by the elementary principles of the different branches of science recommended by the committee of educational experts. The mode of treating all these subjects, however, has undergone a marked change. Some (of these subjects) are very likely to impress upon the youth's tender mind the glory of all that is foreign and the depreciation of his own sacred traditions and ancient heritage. Such are the stories in the literature books, and the accounts of the histories prescribed and recommended. The development of a nation can hardly be hoped to take place, if its members are taught from the very beginning to despise its best characters and to undervalue its noblest undertakings, whether of the past or of the present. Others, again, are dealt with on so completely a European line that their withdrawal before long should not be surprising, as the same mistakes appear to have been committed here as in the Central Provinces where the Kindergarten system was first introduced, but had to be rejected on account of its being unsuited to Indian schools.

The new examination system is still more defective. Even during the short period it has been in vogue, it has become very unpopular and may cause, in course of a few years, more harm than was anticipated by its authors. Public examinations have been abolished and scholarships are awarded on the result of a competitive test to which only a fixed number of schools can send in boys each year. Thus for the 1,075 Lower Primary scholarships fixed for the whole province not more than three times that number of, or 3,225 schools, can compete, each nominating only one student. Similarly, for the 300 Upper Primary scholarships, 1,200 boys only are allowed to appear in the competitive test, one only coming from one Upper Primary School; so that out of 50,000 Primary Schools in the province (about) 4,000 are annually permitted to send (about) 4,000 boys, one from each, to compete for the scholarships. In other words supposing different schools are required to send in boys in different years, which, however, depends upon the sweet will of the inspecting officers, a school can send a boy for the second time after a period of 12 years!

* * * * * * * *

Students other than those who compete, or students of those schools which do not partake in the competition are examined by the subordinate inspecting agency (or by the Head Master, in case of High Schools) at the end of the sessions. No certificate is granted to any of them.

* * * * * * * *

A friend of mine in the inspecting department assures me that the present system is not only most defective, but is also productive of not even half as good a result as the old one. He had chances of comparing passed students of the two systems and was always disposed to decide in favour of the former.

One other defect of the new scheme, which has been noted more than once, because it is so very obvious, should not be lost sight of here. This is the great length of time students are required to devote to the vernacular part of their training, before education through the medium of English can begin. According to the newly introduced system students must sacrifice about eight years in passing through the numerous classes and standards of the vernacular department, though in exceptional cases teachers may lessen the period to seven or six years. This privilege should, I think, be greatly extended and teachers may be empowered to shorten the period to four years in case of brilliant students and to five years in all other cases. There can hardly be any difficulty in this as most of the standards require not more than six months' time. With this modification an average student who begins his study at six may fairly be expected, to matriculate at 14 or 15, the most suitable age possible. In this connection it should also be noted that the absence of a sufficient knowledge of English in the boys completing their vernacular education stand in their way to the next higher class where the training is imparted solely through the foreign language. The ordinary boys wholly break there, for the gap they have to pass over is too wide for them. More English should be introduced in the vernacular forms to overcome this difficulty.

The techincal class at Roorkee.

ADVOCATE,
1st July, 1906.

25. Th Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st July, publishes the following letter from one Baij Nath at Allahabad:—With reference to the proposal of the Government of these Provinces to establish a technical class at Roorkee, might I suggest the desirability of taking in not only nominees of Local and District Boards, but also independent students who may go to study there at their own expense. In this way we may be able to get a better class of men, some of whom may in time be prepared to go to Europe or America for higher technical education The Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute in Bombay freely admits all students, and the one at Roorkee ought also to do the same.

I would, in this connection, also direct the attention of those of our countrymen who are interested in the industrial and commercial development of the country to have a sort of industrial survey made for each province and collect information amongst others on the following points:—(1) What are the chief industries, hand and factory, of each industrial and trade centre, and how can they best be developed or improved upon, (2) what are the difficulties in the way and how to overcome them, (3) what new industries can be most profitably started at each centre with reference to the raw material and the labour, both skilled and unskilled, available, as well as the market, both locally and abroad, (4) which of the existing hand industries can best be improved by the investment of more capital on joint stock principle or otherwise, and by employment of machinery in a portion of the manufacture, (5) the smallest amount of capital required for each industry whose improvement or development is thought desirable. There may be many other points requiring elucidation, but any information even on some of the above would be very valuable. Those who undertake to collect it shall have to make themselves familiar with the ways, the organizations, the prejudices and the general condition of the artizan classes of each industrial centre. They shall also have to study the condition of the market and bring themselves into touch with the leading traders of each place. The work will take time, to do it with any degree of thoroughness. But even if it is undertaken for only one place in a province it will be a source of gain. And with the growing demand for all classes of indigenous goods everywhere, and the field of profitable employment their manufacture promises in the near future, I hope some of our educated countrymen will undertake the work, either in the public interest, or under the auspices of associations having for their object the industrial development of India. In the United Provinces should any of our men of education be willing to undertake it on receipt of remuneration, the Vaishya Maha Sabha or the local Industrial Conference Committee will be glad to avail itself of his services. Should they require any further information on the subject, I shall be glad to furnish it.

The remuneration will of course depend upon the character of the work done and the time it takes.

RAJPUT,
15th June, 1906.

Complaint regarding the alleged excessive enhancement of water-rate on sugarcane and wheat crops in the United Provinces.

26. The Rájpút (Agra), of the 15th June, observes that though Government realises about 30 crores of rupees a year as land revenue, it does not give cultivators any material help in increasing the productiveness of the soil. Canals have no doubt been constructed in certain parts of the country; but water from them is not generally supplied to cultivators in time. What is worse still, the water-rates on wheat and sugarcane crops have lately been so greatly increased that the cultivators now prefer to irrigate their fields with water drawn from wells, rather than with that supplied from the canal.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
May and June, 1906.

Military expenditure of India.

27. A correspondent of the Hindustán Review (Allahabad), in its joint issue for May and June, in commenting upon Lord Minto's reply to Mr. Gokhale's criticisms on the present military expenditure of India in the Viceregal Legislative Council, says:—Supposing for the reasons stated by His Excellency, India should maintain a great army like other countries, is it just, is it wise, that the whole burden of its maintenance should rest on this country?

* * * * * * *

Granting that the maintenance of military establishments on the present stupendous scale is indispensable, are they subject to no limitation in relation to the ability of the people to bear a heavy military burden?

* * * * * * *

Considering that Japan maintains a much larger army than India does at considerably less cost, cannot India's rulers adopt methods of economy which will give an efficient and patriotic military force without costing an amount of expenditure which already proves crushing and retards progress? It is to be regretted that the Government of India is not dominated by a determined spirit of economy. On the other hand, a spirit of lavish expenditure is abroad, and the successive surpluses during many years past have tempted the Government into costly and great projects of reform. A comparison of speeches made in Parliament by responsible ministers and those made in the Supreme Council of India discloses a significant difference of spirit in regard to expenditure between the two Governments. While Lord Minto and the Commander-in-chief justify the appalling growth of military expenditure in India and warn the champions of economy against being misled into a false security, the British Minister of War, the ex-Premier, and other leading statesmen of the ruling country, speak with a determination to effect economy.

* * * * * * *

The problem of Indian defence is rendered specially difficult by the policy of distrust in the people pursued by our rulers.

* * * * * * *

Nothing can be more legitimate, honourable, or more gratifying to the British rulers of India, than the demand of her people to be allowed to wear arms in the defence of their motherland and fight side by side with their British fellow-subjects for her security and independence as well as for the glory of their Emperor. Yet on Mr. Gokhale's appeal in this respect all that Lord Minto said was that "neither he nor his colleagues were wanting in a due appreciation of the loyal services of the magnificent officers and soldiers of the Indian army" Small consolation to the poor people on whose backs are piled burdens to the breaking point, or to the aspiration of the warlike and educated classes whose pride and sense of honour are wounded by the distrust of our rulers. His Royal Highness, the future Emperor, bore cordial testimony to the devoted loyalty of the people. But is not this loyalty likely to grow chilled and passive by the present policy of distrusting and ignoring it in practice while eulogising it in words ?

RAHBAR,
21st June, 1906.

Larger employment of Musalmans in Eastern Bengal.

28. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st June, referring to the circular lately issued by Sir Bampfylde Fuller for giving a larger employment to Muhammadans in the Government ministerial appointments in Eastern Bengal, even in preference to better qualified Hindus, on the ground of the former forming two-thirds of the entire population of that province, says that the object of this circular is simply to set the Hindus and the Musalmans by the ears. But the greater number of artizans in Bengal are Muhammadans, and the latter should well bear in mind that if they allow themselves to be drawn into the Government service by the allurement offered them at this time, and give up their hereditary professions, they would have to rue it as much in future as the Bengali Hindus who readily entered Government service in the past do now, regretting that if they had taken to trade they would have by this time been much better off, and made much greater progress in many ways.

ADVOCATE,
28th June, 1906.

Babu Surendra Nath Banerji's Barisal case.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th June, says:—After the exhibition made of himself by Mr. Kemp under the cross-examination of Mr. Choudhari at Barisal, nobody ever thought that the Sessions Judge would be able to uphold the conviction under section 188, Indian Penal Code. But the Judge was anxious like Mr. Emerson and Mr. Kemp that Mr. Banerji should be convicted under some section of the law of the land. So he, even without hearing evidence against the accused or his defence, has found him guilty of breach of section 32 of the Police Act in that he did not obey, it matters not whether the order was legal or not, the order of the District Superintendent of Police to stop the noise, we are not told of Bande Mátaram or one caused when the Police freely used their batons on the backs of the delegates and visitors. So the Conference people were not only not to retaliate on the police but they were not even to raise their voice ! Mr. Cargill is very anxious to declare Mr. Surendra Nath and the members of the Anti-Circular society guilty of some offence, but he has not one word to say against the Barisal police. One thing is clear that Mr. Emerson comes out with very bad scratches indeed from the ordeal. A District Magistrate who sees nothing wrong in issuing warrants of arrest against persons before the commitment of an offence, who tries and convicts a person without being sure what offence he has committed, and who makes alterations in his record after delivery of the judgment is surely not the proper sort of person to be placed in charge of a district. We have been waiting long for Mr. Morley' decision, let us see now that the principal case is over what orders he and the Government of India are pleased to pass about the conduct of the Barisal officials. We are glad to note that Sir Bampfylde Fuller has shown discretion and has asked the public prosecutor to withdraw the prosecution of Mr. Banerji, presumably under pressure from above. He has thus saved his Government from further humiliation. But will Mr. Morley allow the matters to stand there ?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
28th June, 1906.

A swadeshi procession alleged to have caused disturbance near the English church, Dacca, while sevice was going on there.

30. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th June, says :—Instead of accepting the very specific statement of some Bengali gentlemen which appeared in the Statesman traversing and repudiating the charge of a swadeshi procession causing disturbance near the English church at Dacca, when the Commissioner was reading the service, the Pioneer says ' in regard to all such denials we have merely to say that the statement was accurate.' The question to our mind assumes now a serious aspect, and we think it is, under the circumstances, the imperative duty of the persons libelled in this matter to vindicate as publicly and effectively as they can their innocence. The Calcutta leaders had better pay some attention to this matter, as the charge is by no means an ordinary one and is likely to be made much of in future. If the version of the Dacca people is true—and for our part we are inclined to believe that it is true—it cannot be very difficult to substantiate it and to shut the mouths of perverse libellers.

ADVOCATE,
1st July, 1906.

A suggestion to appoint a Commission for enquiring into the late Barisal incidents.

31. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st July, referring to the prosecution of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji at Barisal, says:—Now the country is anxious to know what Lord Minto is going to do. The best course open to him would be to depute a commission consisting of four or five impartial Europeans and Indians to proceed to Barisal and make an enquiry as to how the Conference was forcibly broken up and how the prosecution of Babu Surendra Nath came about, and why inoffensive people were assaulted. This will set at rest the feeling of indignation created by the events throughout India. If Lord Minto's Government keeps silence, then the only course open to Babu Surendra Nath Banerji will be to bring civil suits against Mr. Kemp and Mr. Emerson for malicious prosecution, and thus expose the doings of the Barisal officers. We hope Mr. Morley and Lord Minto will not allow the matter to go to that length, and will meet the wishes of the people by appointing a small commission to make a searching enquiry into the matter.

INDIAN PUNCH,
2nd July, 1906.

Lament over the partition of Bengal.

32. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 2nd July, publishes some verses, partly in Urdu and partly in Persian, in which the writer represents Bengal as bitterly lamenting her division into two parts by Lord Curzon. Bengal does not know what ill-will Lord Curzon bore towards her, that he so cruelly dismembered her. There can hardly be a country under the sun more oppressed than she. She did not endure such oppressions even at the hands of Shaista Khan as she has done under the rule of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. She is utterly helpless: a strong hand having overpowered a weak one The Bengalis have agitated in the matter a good deal, but nobody pays heed to their cries. If they, however, wish to succeed in their swadeshi movement, they should persevere in it steadily and firmly.

HINDUSTANI,
4th July, 1906.

Disapproval of the Bengalis refusing to serve on the Municipal Boards, or on the Legislative Council, to emphasise their dissatisfaction at the partition of Bengal.

33. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 4th July, while disapproving of the Bengalis giving up Government posts or declining to become members of a municipality or the Legislative Council, congratulates them on their efforts in political matters. It is most significant that of the six candidates for memberships in the Provincial Legislative Council in Eastern Bengal, only one is Hindu, and that even he will most probably withdraw, as he has been threatened by his caste-fellows with excommunication. This is one of the ways in which the Bengalis desire to express their dissatisfaction at the Partition of Bengal, and they mean to adhere to their resolution till that objectionable measure is cancelled.

BHARAT JIWAN,
2nd July 1906.

Swadeshism.

34. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 2nd July, in a long article endeavours to show that though Indians are not a self-governing people, and are dependent on the British Government in most matters, they can still make themselves practically independent of the Government in many things if they only become staunch supporters of swadeshism, making a point of never using anything that is not India made in future. In another place the editor urges that steps should be taken to establish swadeshi societies in every town, and to impress upon the people, by speeches, lectures, poems, &c., in all parts of the country that if there is anything by which they themselves can better their condition, under the present circumstances, it is the furtherance of the cause of swadeshism by all means in their power.

INDIAN PUNCH,
2nd July, 1906.

Disapproval of the association of the swadeshi movement with the partition of Bengal, and of boycotting foreign goods.

35. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 2nd July, while strongly supporting the swadeshi movement as highly beneficial to the country, observes that so long as Indians do not produce goods which can compete successfully with foreign articles in quality as well as in price, it is absurd on their part to seek to boycott foreign goods—an attempt in which they cannot but fail in the long run. Again, the present swadeshi movement is generally associated with the agitation against the Partition of Bengal, which might be taken to mean that if the partition were set aside the movement would also go with it. Such an idea might lead one to doubt the stability of the swadeshi movement. Indians should therefore advocate swadeshism for its own sake, and improve their indigenous arts and industries to enable it to stand on its own legs, without the necessity of its being propped up with the boycott of foreign goods.

The Advocate on the Birthday Honours.

ADVOCATE,
1st July, 1906.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st July, in commenting on the Birthday Honours, says :—A gold medal of the Order of Kaiser-i-Hind is a poor recognition for the services of Nawáb Mohsin-ul-Mulk to the cause of Muhammadan education. This Nawáb in his old age is doing what few young men do—an activity that excites public admiration. . . . The title of Mahamahopadhyaya conferred on the Maharaja of Ajudhia appears to be rather incongruous, but the Maharaja's interest in enriching Hindu literature is great and the collection of the Sanskrit books in his library at Ajodhia is excellent. Perhaps Government did not know how to better recognise his services than conferring on him a distinction which no Taluqdar of Oudh has ever received.

Proposed establishment of an "Indian Union" for ameliorating the condition of the country.

ADVOCATE,
1st July, 1906.

37. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st July, says :—One signing himself as "a hoary-headed Sádhu," who is supposed to be none other than Swámi Shagunácharya, of Shánti Ashram, Muttra, has sketched out a somewhat ambitious scheme of an organisation for the intellectual, moral and spiritual elevation of the people as well as for ensuring their material and social progress. The name of the proposed institution is to be the Indian Union, with local, district, and provincial Leagues attached to it. These Leagues will include in their scope education, sanitation, public health, temperance as well as encouragement of private enterprise, improvement of agriculture, roads, house-building, settlement of private disputes by arbitration, proper distribution of charity, bringing to the notice of the authorities the real wants and grievances of the people, &c. These laudable objects will be sought to be attained through special departments such as the Ecclesiastical (consisting of Training, Preaching and Supervision branches), the Educational, the Commercial, which will include the swadeshi propaganda in its programme, the Emigration (for sending bands of educated and patriotic youths abroad), the Arbitration (for settling disputes out of court), the Charity, the Intelligence, which will keep itself in touch with all others and supply them with the necessary information, and the Reconciliation Department. Our Sádhu is not very happy in the choice of names. Take, for instance, the Ecclesiastical, Emigration and, last but not the least, the Reconciliation Department. It shall be the duty of the Reconciliation Department to watch the proceedings of the various Departments and officers of the Government and of corporations, and to represent to the authorities irregularities, hardships or injustices, and suggest remedies reconciling conflicting interests, and conducive to public comfort and happiness. There is so much in this work-a-day world to drag and tie us down to mundane affairs that it is good to have high, even unattainable, ideals set before us. And, above all, it is a happy augury for the future of the country that enlightened and broad-minded Sádhus should feel it their duty to come out of their cell, preach the gospel of work and thus actually exercise their minds about the best means of ameliorating the condition of humanity at large and present more or less workable schemes with that end in view for regeneration of the motherland.

Death of Rana General Padamjung Bahadur of Nepal, at Howrah.

ADVOCATE,
1st July, 1906.

38. The Advocate (Lucknow), publishes the following telegram from a Calcutta correspondent :—General Padamjung Bahadur, Rana, son of the late Maharaja Sir Jang Bahadur Rana, G.C.B., G. C.S.I., who commanded the Tibet Expedition in 1883, died of heart failure at the Howrah Station on his way to Benares. The body was cremated with due solemnity on the bank of the Ganges at Nimtalághat by his eldest son, assisted by his other sons.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI,
2nd July, 1906.

A suggestion to memorialise the Government of India to extend Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces.

39. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of the 2nd July, endorses the suggestion, recently made by a Talukdar in Oudh, to memorialise the Government of India for an extension of Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces (vide Article No. 47 on page 385 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906).

BHARAT JIWAN,
2nd July, 1906.

Sir James Digges LaTouche's administration of the United Provinces.

40. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 2nd July, says that as the tenure of Sir James Digges LaTouche's office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces is drawing to a close, some people express a desire that His Honour may be allowed to hold on the post for some time longer, while others are silent in the matter. The Bengálee understands that as Sir James has not done anything of special benefit, as his predecessor Sir Antony MacDonnell had done, to the Hindus of these provinces, the latter are not likely to be grieved at his approaching departure. The Bhárat Jiwan believes that the greater portion of the people would very probably look at the event in the same light as the Bengálee does.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st July, 1906.

Certain complaints against the Rajputana-Malwa Railway administration.

41. A correspondent of the Mufíd-i-Am (Agra), of the 1st July, complains (1) that the District Traffic Superintendent, Bandikui district of the Rajputana Malwa Railway, hardly ever grants casual or privilege leave to his subordinates; (2) that while three trains are run daily from Ajmere to Delhi, only one runs from Ajmere to Agra, which causes much inconvenience to the large number of travellers over that line; and (3) that intermediate class carriages are attached to only mail trains, so that passengers who have to go to the small stations where those trains do not stop, cannot travel intermediate class. The higher authorities would do well to remove the above complaints.

CITIZEN,
2nd July, 1906.

A strike of employes on the East Indian Railway, Sahebganj district, in Bengal.

42. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd July, says :—Our own correspondent writing from Sahebganj under date 28th June 1906, writes :—The whole staff of the East Indian Railway, Sahebganj district (Traffic Department), with the exception of but a few, went on strike on the 25th instant after giving 24 hours' notice. This sudden and desperate measure was taken because they were perpetually called "stupid," and "fools" and were punished with reductions, fines and deprivation of the usual privileges. The General Traffic Manager being informed of the matter by telegram wired to the Chief Superintendent who was then at Gya to proceed at once to the spot. On his arrival, he with the other European officers, tried his best to persuade the men who had resigned to withdraw their resignation, but they would not listen and stuck to their resolution ; and after the expiry of 24 hours they all left the stations. Many of the menials of several stations followed the example. For more than 12 hours things remained very irregular—trains ran late by two hours without any "line clear" or caution message, passengers travelled without tickets, and goods traffic was stopped altogether. The District Traffic Superintendent himself had to set points at one station. But to the good luck of the Company the men resumed work before the mail time at about 10 at night, otherwise everything would have gone wrong. Help was asked for from other districts, but none was received. Indeed, the men of Dinapore and Howrah Districts flatly refused help, and said that if they were forced to help in a case where their fellowmen had struck, they too would resign after 24 hours' notice. Mr. Huddlestone, the Chief Superintendent, heard the grievances of the men on the 27th instant, and, after obtaining a written statement of the grievances, solemnly declared that he would remedy them.

Hindu Vedanta mission in America.

43. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd July, says :—Great enthusiasm prevailed in Colombo on the 16th June, when Swami Abhedananda, who was working in New York City preaching Vedantism, arrived after a course of eleven years of labour. The Times of Ceylon publishes two columns of matter giving an account of the reception that was given by the pious Hindus of Colombo. Swami Abhedanada was received with an enthusiasm which was due to a Prince, and we note that the Swami himself has been true to his ascetic principles and has maintained the simple life of renunciation and love. He was led through the streets on foot but attended with great pomp and pageantry, which were probably intended to please the people and not the "Sanyasi." All the leading Hindus were present, and when the Swami reached the residence arranged for his temporary occupation, he squatted on the floor in the usual Hindu fashion with a silver bowl filled with ash, which he distributed to the thousands of Hindus who prostrated before him one by one. A welcome address was read which highly commended the Swami's devoted work in America to spread Vedantism, and called him to be a worthy successor of Swami Vivekananda who was dead. In reply, Swami Abhedananda began by refuting the ignorant notion that Swami Vivekananda was dead, and affirming that what was dead was his feeble frame, declared that his indomitable and great spirit was very much alive in India and in America, and that he had left his inspiring self everywhere, and for ever. He then referred to the Hindu religion as the universal religion embracing all that was good and true on earth, and he spoke in enthusiastic terms of the effect this faith is likely to produce in Western countries. Every other religion in the world was of later origin than Hinduism and taught maxims which were long ago recognised by the Hindus. To an interviewer the Swami said that Vedantism was making its way through Europe; and that Germany led, as the Vedanta books were more in circulation there than in other European countries. America too was receiving it gladly, and the books were now being translated into most European languages. Christianity had not much hold on the people, said Swami Abhedananda, and they did not understand it; even the priests themselves did not. He had lectured before the clergy and he was able to explain to them the mysterious relation of soul to God. The Vedanta Society in New York issued a bulletin regularly, and it was usually sent out free to those who had need of it. The people of America at first strove to learn Sanskrit, but after a year they would give it up as the attempt was very difficult. The Swami made them vegetarians, and taught some of them meditation according to Yoga. What was disappointing was the apathy of the people here in India, who would not send a large number of workers. For them, the Swami said, there was practically an unlimited field for work. The people in the West were ignorant of the greatness of the spirit, and the first effects of their knowledge were very encouraging. Such is the short account we learn for the present of the work of the Hindu Mission established in America. We do not know if it is necessary to spread Vedantism among the Western nations and whether that would produce any visible effect on the practical-minded, materialistic nations of the West. There are innumerable missions in India and other agencies which are hourly working to destroy what Vedantism remains in us, and we cannot conceal the fact that we are rapidly giving up the mystifying influences of priesthood. The spiritual ideals of the Eastern civilisation and the materialising effects of the European civilisation have been at conflict in the land of the Vedanta, and so far as the educated people here are concerned, the result is most confusing. There is a complete pause at present, and the people have been still meditating over what to choose and what to leave. We feel we cannot altogether cast off some of the excellent and simple ways of Eastern life and contentment. And at the same time it is impossible not to give up superstition and blind mysticism by adopting some of the rigid practical and humanising methods of the West. The Japanese nation has taught a middle course, placed before us an ideal, which will neither be Vedantic entirely nor materialistic. Under these circumstances the idea of sending out Hindu missionaries to America is one of which we should certainly know more before pronouncing an opinion. In politics, in social matters, and in religion, we are confronted with many conflicting and confusive ideals, and we cannot help being slow in forming our judgment and deciding to act decisively, though exposing ourselves to the charge of being insincere or inactive.

EXPRESS,
5th July, 1906.

Indians in Natal.

1. The Express (Lucknow), of the 5th July, says:—The Natal Government is at last driven to enroll the names of the Indian settlers of that colony as Volunteers of the bearer corps. The Zulu revolt has forced the white men to ignore their alleged superiority and to sink the class prejudices which they entertained against their coloured brethren of the East. A proverb is current in India that at a time of urgent emergency and adversity a man acknowledges any person even an ass as his equal; the white men in the present situation, when the Kaffir rebellion is furiously raging and spreading like wild fire, when their property and lives are in danger, have acted accordingly by enlisting the help and co-operation of those very despised creatures whom they derided and slighted in every possible way. It is really very gratifying to note that henceforth His Majesty's subjects, white and black, will work side by side and shoulder to shoulder in the colony, and it is hoped that in the near future the gulf existing between the two will be entirely bridged. The Indians should try their best to discharge their duties faithfully and honestly, and to do all they can to avert the threatened danger which is common to both.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th July, 1906.

Alleged need for establishing a Provincial Conference in the United Provinces.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th July, says:—Madras has long outlived the opprobrium of being called a 'benighted' Province, and to-day it stands forth as one of the go-ahead parts of the country. The Madrassis have just held two important gatherings, the Provincial Conference and the Social Conference, both of which have been doing very good work in that Presidency. Mr. Krishna Swami, one of the leaders of the Madras Bar, and one of the keenest and ablest public men in the country, was called upon to preside over the Provincial Conference, and he has acquitted himself with conspicuous ability. His address was marked by an exhaustive treatment of provincial problems, relieved by a very instructive and thoughtful digression into questions of Imperial interest. He pleaded earnestly and powerfully for an extension of primary education, and for a larger employment of indigenous agency into the public services. The address of the President of the Social Conference was conceived in a spirit of great moderation, and he pleaded for cautious and gingerly progress in Social Reform. But if Madras is showing signs of activity in so many directions, what are we of the United Provinces doing? So far as Social reform is concerned, we are afraid the prospect is not very bright in these Provinces, as there are so many reactionary forces at work. But as regards political activity, it is almost heart-breaking that with men of the capacity, talents and influence like Mr. Malviya and Mr. Ganga Prasad Varma in our Province, we should still have to suffer the reproach of being the most backward Province in the country. Without breaking any confidences, we may say that a few months back there was a proposal to convene a Provincial Conference in these Provinces, but it had to be postponed for certain reasons into which we need not go at present. We think the time has come for these Provinces to have a Provincial Conference, unless it is admitted that they are happy enough not to have politics. We hope and trust that the leaders of public opinion in these Provinces will bestow thought upon this question.

ADVOCATE,
12th July, 1906.

Suggestion for a change in the methods and programme of the National Congress.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th July, says:—Mr. G. S. Khaparde, "A Punjab Congressman" and Babu Nares Chandra Sen Gupta have written, independently of one another, on the necessity of a change in the Congress methods and programme as hitherto pursued.

* * * * * * *

How to do it? Mr. Khaparde has but one suggestion to make. Reduce the number of subjects to be brought for discussion at the Congress.

* * * * * * *

"A Punjab Congressman" would entrust the President of the year with the work of publishing its principles and propaganda, with the help of a Council, composed of two representatives from each of the six provinces and Central India, these having each a Provincial Council of its own. There should be one paid Secretary and an Assistant Secretary who must belong to the province in which the Congress is to be held. He writes: "There should also be appointed six preachers, one in each province, well conversant with the questions of the day, and thorough masters of the vernacular of the part of the country they would have to work in. They are to work under the guidance and control of the Provincial Committees. The President is to direct the course of action throughout India, and his mandate must be obeyed by all without demur and with a whole heart.

* * * * * * *

There should also be a Congress journal, edited by the Secretary, in which accounts of the preachers' work are to appear.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Sen Gupta's central idea is that the Congress should pronounce an opinion on any subject only after a most careful and anxious consideration of all its aspects. This is only possible if committees are appointed to investigate during the year certain problems with reference to the various provinces and draw up the result of their careful study into resolutions for adoption by the Congress at its annual session.

* * * * * * *

It is time some bold step were taken to make the Congress anything but a three days' wonder, and in considering all schemes and suggestions on the subject we should have the courage to say no to many of them.

SHIFA-UL-MULK,
June, 1906.

Musalmans and politics.

4. The Shifa-ul-Mulk (Hápur), for June, observes that, as the state of things has greatly changed in India now, and the Musalmans can hardly expect to continue to gain their objects by sycophancy, it is high time that they also took steps to bring their grievances to the notice of the Government and to respectfully but fearlessly demand their political rights. But it would not be wise, the writer thinks, on the part of the Musalmans to join the Indian National Congress, whose principal demands are quite opposed to their interests. It would, therefore, be better if they established a separate political association of their own, as was lately suggested by Nawab Viqár-ul-Mulk, to be kept entirely distinct from the Congress.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

AL BASHIR,
10th July, 1906.

A suggestion to Government for including the Muhammadan College at Aligarh in the tour programme of the Amir of Kabul during His Highness's proposed visit to India.

5. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 10th July, says that, as it has now been almost definitely settled that the Amir of Kabul will shortly visit India, the Government of India would do well to include the Muhammadan College at Aligarh in His Highness's tour programme in this country. This visit, the editor thinks, will probably be productive of two very good results. It will, in the first place, deeply impress the Amir with the liberality and goodness of the British Government when he sees such splendid arrangements made for the education of his co-religionists in this country; and secondly it may induce His Highness on his return home to make similar arrangements for the education of his own subjects. Some years ago, when the prince of Muscat visited India, Government induced him to visit the Aligarh College, and the writer is strongly of opinion that the Amir of Kabul too should be given a similar opportunity.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
7th July, 1906.

Affairs in the Jaora State.

6. A correspondent of the Jásús (Agra), of the 7th July, complaining of general maladministration in Jaora, says that a large number of the peasantry have left their villages and are wandering about in the State, on account of the oppression and high-handedness of the police. The town of Jaora too has been deserted by the majority of the residents owing to heavy taxation and objectionable proceedings of the State officials. The shops in the bazar which fetched Rs. 10 a month each are to be had now for Rs. 2 only, but there is nobody willing to take them even at this small rent. Cases are kept pending for years by the Kámdár (Minister), who is an ease loving and dissolute officer. Bribery and corruption are rampant everywhere.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

ADVOCATE,
5th July, 1906.

Advocate's criticism of the Allahabad Memorial against the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th July, in continuation of its previous criticism of the Allahabad Memorial against the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, says :—But the question is, does the presence of the High Court at Prayág help in any way the average Hindu pilgrim? We are afraid not. We do not know how many Judges and the members of the Bar go to entertain the langars of the Sádhús and what special facilities they create for the pilgrims during the Mágh Mela. But we know this that the extension of the civil lines towards the Ganges makes the lives of the pilgrims simply miserable. We understand that during the last Mágh Mela, the Collector of Allahabad took special measures to protect the civil station and the city from the inroads of the pilgrims. This was perhaps necessary, because the germs of cholera left by the pilgrims would have killed thousands. But one has to place himself in the position of a pilgrim to feel the inconvenience to which he is put. We have been told that the East Indian Railway authorities compelled hundreds, nay thousands of pilgrims coming by special trains during the last Mágh Mela to get down below the Jumna Bridge and walk the long distance to the confluence. Husbands were separated from wives, children from their mothers. Similarly many people going from the north by the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway were against their will forced to get down at Allenganj. Such hard treatment of the pilgrims in the severest winter might have roused the sympathy of the average citizen of Allahabad, but that the pilgrims keenly felt these restrictions and the hard treatment which was accorded to them goes without saying. To the average pilgrim who goes with pious motives to spend the month of Mágh on the banks of the Ganges, or bathe on the sankrant day in the river, it is immaterial whether there is a High Court at a distance of two miles or not. No proof can be adduced to show that the importance of Allahabad as a place of pilgrimage will in any way decrease by the removal of the High Court.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th July, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

8. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 13th July, says that the opponents of the proposal to transfer the High Court to Lucknow urge that as the Bengal, Bombay and Madras High Courts are located at the respective seats of their Governments, which are not centrally situated, there is no need for the removal of the Allahabad High Court also to Lucknow, simply because the latter town occupies a central position in the United Provinces. But Bombay, Calcutta and Madras have been made the seats of the Provincial High Courts on account of their being the largest and most important towns in their respective provinces; and hence for this reason also the High Court of the United Provinces should be located at Lucknow, which is the largest and most important town in these provinces, and at the same time centrally situated.

QULQUL,
2nd July, 1906.

A public meeting held at Bijnor to support the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

9. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 2nd July, says that one Abdul Wáhid Khan, a repesentative of a respectable family at Bijnor, who at present practises as barrister in Lucknow, visited the former town with a view to move his fellow-townsmen to express their approval of the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow. The residents of Bijnor who, of their own accord, were contemplating to move in the matter, accordingly held a public meeting on the 30th ultimo, and unanimously resolved that, as the location of the High Court at Allahabad causes them much inconvenience whenever they have occasion to attend it, the Government of India should be moved, through the Local Government, to remove the High Court to Lucknow, which is nearer to the western districts than Allahabad.

OUDH AKHBAR,
11th July, 1906.

A public meeting held at Marahra, district Etah, in support of the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad.

10. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 11th July, says that a public meeting was held at Marahra, district Etah, on the 2nd idem, at which it was unanimously affirmed that the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow would tend to the convenience of the people of the United Provinces, and especially of the residents of the Etah district. It was further resolved that Government should be informed of the approval of the Marahra people to the proposed transfer of the High Court.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th July, 1906.

A public meeting held at Jalesar, district Etah, in support of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

11. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 13th July, says that, on the 7th idem, a public meeting was held at Jalesar, district Etah, in which it was unanimously declared that as Lucknow occupies a central position in the United Provinces, the removal of the High Court to that town will promote the convenience of the majority of the inhabitants of these provinces.

ADVOCATE,
8th July, 1906.

Execution of one Uday Patni and Sir Bampfylde Fuller's Government.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th July, says:—All the explanations that have been published do not clear the blame that justly attaches to Sir Bampfylde Fuller's Government for the execution of Uday Patni. It appears that on the 21st May, the day fixed for the execution, the Superintendent of the Jail wrote to the Telegraph Master enquiring if any telegram had been received staying the execution, but, as the reply was in the negative, the sentence was carried at 4 (7) o'clock. The same day the following urgent telegram was received by the Jail Superintendent from the Eastern Bengal and Assam Government:—"If Uday Patni is not executed, defer execution." The Superintendent replied as follows: "Your telegram received at 4-15 P. M. Uday Patni executed at 7 A. M." The 'enormity,' as Mr. Morley characterised the action, has indeed been proved beyond doubt. Now that the poor fellow has paid the penalty with his life, the India Government may be expected to issue strict injunctions to postpone all executions so long as applications for showing mercy, if made, are not finally disposed of.

ADVOCATE,
12th July, 1906.

Mr. Sarvadhicary, and the High Court Judges.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th July, says:—Nobody can have any sympathy with Mr. Sarvadhicary in his attacks on the Judges of the High Court, or question the right of the High Court to punish any Advocate who brings the High Court in contempt, but we think the punishment inflicted on him is heavy. A year's suspension would have been sufficient to warn the barrister. Let us hope the Judges sitting in the particular bench did not suspend Mr. Sarvadhicary for four years under the belief that most of the Judges now of the High Court would be retiring within the period, and so they would have no more the pleasure or misfortune, of being addressed by Mr. Sarvadhicary.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th July, 1906.

A dispute between certain Sádhus and Musalmans regarding an old building at Budaun.

14. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th July, states, on the authority of a correspondent, that there is an old Hindu sacred locality at Budaun which is known as Surajkund. A portion of this locality is recorded as belonging to Mahádeoji (name of a Hindu god) in the settlement papers. On this particular piece of land there stands an old building, called bárádari, which has been occupied by certain Sadhús. As this baradari is in a dilapidated condition, the Sádhús wanted to repair it lately, but certain Musalmans interfered saying that the building in question was a mosque, and asked the Sádhús to leave it as it was. A few days later, two or three Musalmans went to the building with mats to say their prayers there, but as the Sádhús would not allow it, the Kotwal, who was also a Musalman, made a report against them and several other Hindus on the subject, suggesting that they should be bound down to keep the peace. The case came up for hearing before Mirza Kásim Beg, Pargana Officer, who, taking up the question of possession, took no notice of the entries in the Government records and of the evidence produced by the Hindus, and, declaring the locality to be Government property, directed the Sádhús to seek redress of their grievance, if they had any, in a civil court. As lately there was a serious religious controversy between the Arya Samajists and the Musalmans at Budaun, the latter have sought to punish the former by interfering with the Sádhús' possession of the building. Government would do well to interfere in the matter.

ADVOCATE,
5th July, 1906.

Appointment of the first batch of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th July, says:—The first selections made by the Government for the posts of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces are excellent, and we hope that in due course some of them will at least rise to District Superintendents of Police. Mr. Mamnun Hasan Khan, Probationary Deputy Collector, appears to be exceptionally fortunate, in that he without becoming even a pucca Deputy Collector in the Rs. 250 grade has been made a Deputy Superintendent in the Rs. 400 grade. Let us hope that he is a man of extraordinary merits to deserve this favour. It is needless for us to say that the career of the young men who are entering this new service will be watched with keen interest by their countrymen; as on their success will depend the conceding of further facilities for the recognition of our claims in the higher branches of the Police Service.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th July, 1906.

Appointment of the first batch of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

16. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th July, says:—The creation of the posts of Deputy Superintendents of Police was recommended by the Police Commission as a sort of palliative to the Police maladministration in the country; but it cannot be said that the men appointed to the posts by the Local Government will, barring one or two exceptions, justify the expectations of the public or fulfil the intention of the Commissioners. None of the men chosen by Sir James Digges La Touche are known for their independence of character, or are even supposed to have any metal in them. It is clear from the names published that considerations of merit have not had much influence with the Local Government which seems to have been more anxious to distribute its patronage fairly than to make a pick of the best men. How are we otherwise to account for the even number of appointments conferred on Muhammadans and Hindus? But it is not even in the matter of the distribution of patronage that the Local Government has been fair. Sir James Digges La Touche here as elsewhere has been more liberal to the Muhammadans than to the Hindus. Is the number in accord with the ratio laid down by Sir Antony MacDonnell?

Except one or two men, it is pretty certain that the nominees of the Government will be more jo huzurs than anything else. They will carry better pay and dress better than the Inspectors, but it is doubtful that they will be able to perform better work or reduce to any extent the zoolum practised by the subordinate police. Perhaps it was not intended that they should. Circulars will no doubt be issued to District Superintendents of Police to treat the new recruits with consideration and to humour them, but is it possible that men without mental stamina and gifts of character will be able to extort respect and admiration for any length of time? The Superintendents will soon forget the circulars and deal with the men as if they were Inspectors. The latter will only ride behind their chief and address him 'Sir' or 'Respected Sir.' And well they might, when the Superintendent of Police is permitted to address the Magistrate "My dear so and so," instead of by a more formal and respectful title.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
8th July, 1906.

Increase in the number of petty thefts at Cawnpore.

17. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th July, complains that of late there has been a great increase in the number of petty thefts at Cawnpore. On the 7th idem, somebody stole away the editor's office box, taking it to be a cash-box, but it was afterwards found lying broken beneath the house. Vagrants found roaming about the streets had better be arrested (for bad livelihood).

SHIFA-UL-MULK,
June, 1906.

Certain Municipal complaints at Hapur, district Meerut.

19. The Shifa-ul-Mulk (Hápur), for June, says that although the Municipal Board has, in view of the protest of its Municipal members, dropped, for the present, the proposal for establishing a separate meat market at Hapur, still it has framed some new rules imposing certain restrictions, such as the taking out of a license by meat-sellers, on the sale of meat within the Municipal limits, which have caused much dissatisfaction and unrest among the Musalmans. The rules in question are said to have been framed at the instance of the Secretary of the Municipal Board, and the writer is afraid lest their enforcement should lead to a breach of the peace. The Municipal Board has also recently reduced the number of chaukidars, and the result is that crime has increased in the town. It is much to be regretted that the Board, which is ever ready to spend public money on useless measures, such as constructing a meat market, &c., should practice economy in a matter that vitally affects the safety of the lives and property of the people.

SHIFA-UL-MULK,
June, 1906.

Illuminations lately held at Hapur in connection with a party given in honour of the Naib Tahsildar on the eve of his leaving the station.

20. The Shifa-ul-Mulk (Hápur), for June, says that an evening party was lately held by the Municipal Secretary at Hápur to bid farewell to the Naib Tahsildar, who was going to leave that station. It is said that the cost of the illuminations made on the occasion were met from the Municipal funds. If the rumour is well founded, the writer is at a loss to understand why the tax-payer's money should be expended in private entertainments.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th July, 1906.

A proposal to hold an All-India Municipal Conference at Calcutta in December next.

21. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th July, says :—We understand that Sir Pherozshah Mehta intends calling a Conference of Municipal Commissioners from all India at Calcutta during the Congress week. The idea is highly commendable, and we have no doubt that the opportunity given to Municipal Commissioners to compare notes will be fraught with good results. But, whatever may be the state of municipal administration in the senior presidencies, so far as these Provinces go, we are afraid we cannot speak of it as being very satisfactory. The fact is that those who ought to go into Municipal Boards do not go there, either because in some cases they do not realise that it is a part of their duty to help the administration of municipal affairs, or because they know that there is no room on Municipal Boards for men who are not always prepared to echo the wishes and suggestions—which generally amount to imperative orders—of the Collector-Chairman. It is a fact not to be lost sight of that even in such big towns as Allahabad and Lucknow—where there can be no dearth of talent or local patriotism—it is the Collector who is the Chairman. Fyzabad was the only town in these Provinces which had till a few years back a non-official Chairman. We have got the vestige of local self-government, the substance has yet to follow.

Suggestion for establishing a branch octroi office in the Chauk at Benares.

22. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 9th July, expressing satisfaction at the establishment of a railway booking and parcel office in the city at Benares, suggests that a branch octroi office also should be opened somewhere in the chauk, so that the addressees of parcels delivered at the city parcel office may not have to go to the head octroi office to pay tax there as they have to do at present.

SANSAR MITRA,
3rd July, 1906.

Complaint regarding the refusal of a pension to an employe of the Education Department in the United Provinces.

24. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 3rd July, states that one Pandit Sheo Bálak Rám Tirpathi, having served as Head Master of the Middle School at Narwal, in the Cawnpore district, for 19 years with great credit, was recommended for promotion as Sub Deputy Inspector of Schools. But, no such post being vacant at the time, the Pandit was temporarily appointed as teacher of History and Geography in the Normal School at Allahabad. Seven months later the Sub-Deputy Inspectorship of Schools in the Banda district having fallen vacant, the Pandit was appointed to that post, and he held it from 1st July 1891 to 4th May 1903, when he retired. But because he had served in the Allahabad Normal School for seven months, he has been made to forfeit the benefit of his more than thirty years' unbroken service, having been granted no pension, though the Director of Public Instruction himself had promoted him from the Narwal Middle School to the Allahabad Normal School pending his appointment to the still higher post of a Sub-Deputy Inspector of Schools, for which he had been recommended. The Pandit has now appealed to the Government of India in the matter, and the writer hopes that the latter will deal generously with the poor man, condoning any break that, according to the strict rules on the subject, may have occurred in his pensionable service.

MOHINI,
6th July, 1096.

Recurrence of famine in India, and the people.

25. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 6th July, says that the distress which the people have generally to endure on the occurrence of a famine in this country is mainly due to their impoverishment brought on by the enhancement of land revenue at every periodical revision of settlement. Permanent settlement of land is therefore the only remedy for enabling the peasantry to improve their financial condition, so as to be in a position to tide over the scarcity of food grains during a famine. Government might also mitigate the evil effects of a drought a good deal by stopping the exportation of grain for the time being.

ADVOCATE,
5th July, 1906.

A mukhtar and two others severely punished for their swadeshi zeal at Kurigram in Eastern Bengal.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th July, says :—At Kurigram in the new Province, it was alleged that a respectable mukhtár and two others took a piece of foreign cloth from a suitor who willingly parted with it, and that after paying its price they got it burnt. The suitor made no complaint. But the police prosecuted all the three persons. The Public Prosecutor did not press the charge. Yet the sub-divisional officer sentenced the mukhtár to a fortnight's rigorous imprisonment and a fine. The other two men were let off with heavy fines. The ferocious sentence has shocked public feeling and produced the most intense indignation. A public meeting was held ; the swadeshi vow was renewed.

RAHBAR,
7th July, 1906.

Swadeshism.

27. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th July, endeavours to show that swadeshism does not mean boycott of foreign goods, but simply encouragement and patronage of articles made in one's own country in preference to foreign ones. According to the Tribune (Lahore), people in certain parts of the country readily buy articles made in all other countries but in England. This is absurd. If Indians want any foreign articles, it is their duty to always give preference to English goods over others. The writer cannot therefore believe the Tribune's statement to be true, unless it relates to those parts of Eastern Bengal where Sir Bampfylde Fuller has, by his measures, been causing hatred against Englishmen to be deeply rooted in the minds of the people.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th July, 1906.

Reflections on the Barisal case against Babu Surendra Nath.

28. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 5th July, referring to the Barisal case against Babu Surendra Nath, says :—There is perhaps no instance, at least none is known to us, of such fatal ignorance and governmental incapacity. What becomes of the official version of the Barisal incident in the face of the evidence of Mr. Kemp who had taken, as it were, a part in what he was speaking of? Can it be said that the Government up to now did not realise the weakness of their position? To us it appeared all along that it was a forlorn hope, and obstinacy alone can account for the terrible drain of money that the trial has entailed. The aim and object appears plain enough ; it was intended to crush Babu Surendra Nath, and the result was to be accomplished in this way. Whether it was a deeply laid plot or not we do not care to determine. The conduct of the Government of East Bengal will answer that. But are their sins to be visited upon those who toil and by the sweat of their brow earn their daily bread?

Where has the money for paying the counsel's fees come from? It is bad enough already for the impoverished people of this country to have to suffer in consequence of the convulsions of nature and the visitation of an avenging Providence. But why make their burdens heavier? Why make them suffer for the freaks and caprices of a Government which starts baseless prosecutions and drops them as easily? Could they not have been let alone? Why wring their life-blood out of them without any rhyme or reason?

And what remedy has the poor victim of executive ire? It is a shabby trick to arrest and prosecute a man whom you do not like, and to create a riot with the object of blasting his reputation and bolstering up a case against him that will result in a conviction at the hands of willing tools, and then, when the whole show is about to be exposed, to withdraw from the prosecution, but after the mischief has been done and the reckless tongue of maligners, who having no self-respect themselves cannot be expected to respect their betters, has been set wagging. We do not want to speak here of anticipatory warrants, and of the thousand and one other illegalities of which the authorities were deliberately guilty on this occasion. But we are bound to observe that what is play to Sir Bampfylde Fuller and his crew is death to their victims, and it is play of such a character that makes the angels weep.

The occasion suggests these reflections, and the regret is that ignorance and folly should have been left to themselves to work such irreparable mischief. Law is to be respected; order is to be maintained. The subject, even if only a subject, and an alien, deserves and requires protection as to person, property and reputation. These are the first principles of every good Government. But in East Bengal we have to reverse the lessons taught us by the mighty minds of old, and reading them in that way we get up, unlike Coleridge's Ancient Mariner, sadder, but not wiser men.

ARYA MITRA,
8th July, 1906.

End of Babu Surendra Nath's prosecution at Barisal.

29. Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th July, giving a brief account of Babu Surendra Nath's prosecution at Barisal and of its final result, observes that this case has brought anything but credit on Mr. Kemp, the Superintendent of Police, Mr. Emerson the District Magistrate, and Sir Bampfylde Fuller, the Lieutenant-Governor. It, however, clearly shows that British officers can and do act in India against the law and beyond the powers vested in them. In another place the writer says that even granting that British rulers in India are practising greater and greater excesses and iniquities on the people day by day, the latter should not adopt a defiant attitude towards the Government as the Russian peasants have lately done against their Government. Had the thousands of the delegates assembled at Barisal attacked the District Magistrate for the treatment they had received at the hands of the local authorities, and not quietly put up with it, would the Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller have at last been compelled in shame for the doings of its officers, to withdraw the prosecution against Babu Surendra Nath, and refund the fines imposed on him by the Magistrate? The writer, however, does not mean to say that Indians should continue to put up with the "kicks" of Englishmen for ever, but that they should first acquire the spirit of self-sacrifice, before they tell Government that they would no longer endure such oppression.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th July, 1906.

Larger employment of Musalmans in Government service in Eastern Bengal.

30. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th July, referring to the circular recently issued by Sir Bampfylde Fuller for a larger employment of Muhammadans in Government service in Eastern Bengal, says that if the Musalmans in that province avail themselves of the special concession thus made to them, they are sure to find it detrimental to their vital interests in the long run. The Hindu Bengalis were the first to enter into Government service and have till lately sought it with avidity, but they now find that they have been wrong in doing so, inasmuch as it has led them to neglect their indigenous arts and industries, which are among the most important sources of the wealth of a country. The Bengalis now therefore contemplate giving up Government service and taking to independent professions. The writer therefore warns the Musalmans not to be led away by the prospect of the slight temporary gain which Government offers them, or they too will have to repent it one day.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
11th July, 1906.

Larger employment of Musalmans in Government service in Eastern Bengal.

31. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th July, in commenting upon the circular recently issued by the Government of Eastern Bengal regarding the larger employment of Musalmans in Government service in that province, says that, from the very commencement of his rule, Sir Bampfylde Fuller has shown undue favour to the Musalmans probably because the Hindus did not give him addresses of welcome during his tour, on account of their distress at the Partition of Bengal, whereas some Musalmans did so. This led the Musalmans to believe that Government was in their favour and against the Hindus, so that they could cause any injury to the latter with impunity. Labouring under this idea the Musalmans looted the houses, &c., of certain Hindus at Mymensingh and committed serious riots at other places. In spite of this unhappy result of his partiality to the Musalmans, Sir Bampfylde Fuller has not yet changed his policy, as the circular regarding the larger employment of Musalmans, irrespective of their educational qualifications, shows His Honour's persistence in this policy will be harmful both to the Musalmans and Hindus in the long run. On one hand, the Musalmans believing that Government would give them good posts even though they were not sufficiently educated, would be led to neglect the education of their children, while on the other, the Hindus finding that they could not get into Government service as they were hitherto able to do, would not care to receive good education. The circular in question will also tend to promote disunion and ill-will between the Hindus and Musalmans, and riots like those at Mymensingh may become frequent. In these circumstances the Government of India would do well to have the objectionable circular withdrawn.

ADVOCATE,
12th July, 1906.

Rumoured transfer of Sir B. Fuller from the Lieutenant-Governorship of Eastern Bengal to some other post in India.

32. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th July, says :—The news that Sir Bampfylde Fuller will soon be relieved of his office and promoted or transferred to a similar office in some other part of India, sent by our London correspondent, is corroborated by the correspondent of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, who says that it is believed that there will be change in the headship of the new province, and "the sign of the times here this week indicate that it is not entirely impossible." Where will Sir Bampfylde Fuller go ? He cannot come to the United Provinces, because here the Lieutenant-Governorship will not fall vacant till November next. He may be appointed a member of the India Council.

INDIAN PEOPLE
5th July, 1906.

Distribution of state patronage between Hindus and Muhammadans during the régime of Sir James Digges LaTouche in the United Provinces.

33. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th July, writes :—Since the appointment of Sir James LaTouche to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the United Provinces there has been a marked tendency to confer appointments largely on Muhammadans in preference to Hindus. An examination of the Civil Lists of the year when Sir James took charge and of the last quarter, will afford abundant evidence of the undue favouritism shown to one class against another. In the minor services, not recorded in the Civil List, the distinction is still more glaring and unjust. If an Hon'ble member of the Council were to call for a return showing the number of appointments in the subordinate grades held by Muhammadans at the beginning of Sir James La Touche's rule and to-day, the difference would be striking and loudly call for an explanation. Fortunately, however, for the author of this invidious distinction, the Hindu members of the Council are all of a compromising nature, and do not wish to rake up a quarrel between the Hindus and Musalmans over this question. But if the point is calmly considered, it is no attack on Muhammadans to ask that both the communities should receive fair treatment and no favour. Let our Muhammadan brethren by all means receive an amount of patronage in proportion to their number and importance, and let the Hindus receive as much as is due to them. There is absolutely no quarrel between the Hindus and Musalmans, for, none but a selfish Musalman or Hindu would like to gain at the cost of another, but the large question is, whether the Government has been doing its duty fairly to both the communities ? The complaint is real and no make-shift will solve it. It is no use to nurse the grievance and to avoid expression for the baseless fear of offending our own friends. It is rumoured that a confidential circular was issued sometime ago by the Local Government to all the Heads of Departments and that since then Muhammadans have come to be employed far in excess of their proportion, in every branch of the service. His Excellency Lord Minto is still a new comer and is mastering the problems of the country, and by the time he has learnt them, his term of office will be up, and so the grievances of the Hindus will never end.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th July, 1906.

Question of the extension of Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces.

34. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th July, publishes a communication as follows :—"Sir,—I have read with feelings of commisseration the letter of Rája Chandra Chúr in your issue of the 26th June, pleading for a memorial for Sir James LaTouche and for an extension of his service. The object of the letter subscribed with the full name and address of the writer is clearly to secure one more smile or a parting favour from the Lieutenant-Governor, and need not disturb anybody. Rája Chandra Chúr and his "most enlightened and zealous Taluqdars" are free to do anything they like in their name, but they will not be permitted to impose upon the public. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will be well advised to hint to his officious admirers that he does not want a certificate at their hands, and they should allow him to pass the remaining term of his office without arousing any acrimonious feelings. It will be within the recollection of everybody how the attempt of Lord Curzon to secure such a certificate miserably failed, and His Honour's interested admirers might plainly be told to mind their own business, and not place him in a false position.

MAHTAB SINGH."

P. S.—This letter was sent to the Editor, Indian Daily Telegraph, but did not appear in that paper.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th July, 1906.

A suggestion to memorialise the Government of India to extend Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces.

35. A Hindu Taluqdár in Oudh writing to the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 9th July, strongly supports the suggestion lately made by another Hindu Taluqdár in the columns of the same paper to memorialise the Government of India to extend Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces (vide article No. 47, on page 385 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), and suggests that a Committee should at once be appointed to take necessary action in the matter before it is too late.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
12th July, 1906.

A suggestion to memorialise the Government of India to extend Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces.

36. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th July, strongly approves of the suggestion made by a Hindu Taluqdar of Oudh to memorialise the Government of India to extend Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces (vide article No. 47, on page 385 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906), and urges that the people of these Provinces, and especially the Taluqdars of Oudh, should take speedy steps in the matter.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th July, 1906.

A suggestion to establish a bank in Oudh as a memorial to Sir James Digges LaTouche for advancing loans on moderate interest to the owners of encumbered estates to pay off their debts.

37. Rája Chandra Chúr Singh of Atra Chándapur, in the Rae Bareli district, writing to the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 9th July, says that as Sir James Digges LaTouche has always been anxious to enable the owners of encumbered estates to preserve their property, well-to-do Taluqdárs and other landowners would do well to mark their sense of gratitude to His Honour by founding a bank, to be called after his name, from which loans may be given to those land-owners whose estates are encumbered with debt, at a rate of interest not exceeding Rs. 5 per cent. per annum. To provide sufficient capital for this bank, Government may be asked to purchase the bank's shares with that money of the Court of Wards estates which is at present invested in Government Promissory Notes. Government may also be moved to take necessary steps for providing for the recovery of the loans of the bank by instalments along with the periodical collection of Government land revenue, and for preventing a land-owner from contracting any fresh debt after he has taken a loan from the bank until that loan has been paid off. In another place the editor expresses his approval of the above suggestion.

AGRA MAGAZINE,
July, 1906.

Protest against the contempt shown to commercial and industrial classes by the upper classes in India.

38. Munshi Prem Behari, Munsif, writes a long article to the Agra Magazine, for July, in which he urges the need for industrial development of India, as follows :—The degeneration of India commenced only with the establishment of Brahmanism, with the introduction of the sacred institution of the caste system, and with the prohibition against sea-voyages. These were the three chief factors, tending to check the onward progress of the nation and to mould its future destiny. Excepting the Brahmans, the followers of the other three castes were not allowed even to touch the Vedas, the scriptures in which the secret treasure of science and learning was stored. Industrial pursuits were only followed by the Sudras or the menial class, and commerce was confined only to the Bania class. It is really a pity that the views of the upper classes were so narrow as to cause them to look on the commercial class with an eye of contempt, and I think the character which Burke gave to the Bania class at the impeachment of Warren Hastings was nothing more than the echo of the wrong notions entertained by the general public of India against the commercial and industrial classes. It is, however much to be regretted that an Indian of to-day, with an inclination for trade, is looked upon with contempt by the Indian aristocracy and high born classes. We cannot hope to prosper unless we get rid of this wrong notion which we have got into our heads by tradition.

ADVOCATE,
5th July, 1906.

Supply of Indian wheat to England.

39. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th July, says:—While the crops of Russia have partially failed, those of India, particularly the wheat crop, have been good. But the gloomy prospect of the monsoon in May and June acted as a deterrent on the flow of wheat to the markets. The instinctive faculty of providing against a rainy day the more appropriate term in the particular case would be the rainless day—led to the with holding of food grains in granaries. The setting in of the monsoon in right earnest has dispelled much fear. Karachi is now once more the scene of much export activity, the North-Western Railway trying to carry to that port about eight thousand tons daily. Thus, while England will not suffer from want of wheat supply for bread on account of the crop failure of Russia, India may hope to secure a better price for her wheat exports to London. From the swadeshi point of view, one would very much like to see not the stoppage of wheat exportation from India, but the the carrying of wheat from this country to England and the selling of it at wholesale rate in London by enterprising Indians. This is a phase of Indian trade and commerce that demands attention. And here we are to do everything unaided, either by Government or by non-official Anglo-Indians, if not in the teeth of fierce competition with the latter.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th July, 1906.

A co-operative Town Bank at Allahabad.

40. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th July, says:— An influential Committee has been formed in Allahabad with the object of starting a co-operative Town Bank on a commercial scale. Co-operative district banks have been started and are working successfully in several places, and there is every reason to hope that the one in course of formation here will supply a real want and soon get popular with the people. Such banks are especially valuable to the middle and the poor classes of our people who every now and then need small loans which they at present obtain from sowcárs and mahájans at exhorbitant rates of interest. They have in addition the inconvenience of executing hand notes, pay for stamps, and other unauthorised charges, and in not a few cases to obtain sureties. The co-operative credit system removes all these hardships, and anybody who has been registered a member can obtain a loan by executing a two line pro-note on plain paper. Repayments are made at once or in instalments at the convenience of the borrower, and a moderate rate of interest is charged. Extensions are granted where sufficient cause is shown for inability to pay within the period stipulated, and compound interest is always avoided. The rules also provide special facilities for deposits, and any member can open an account and put in his savings which carry nearly double the interest allowed by the post office Savings Banks. The shares of this bank have been fixed at rupees ten each in order that all classes of men may subscribe to and benefit by the institution. Applications for shares can be obtained from Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, Barrister-at-law, 11, Stanley Road, Allahabad, who has been elected Honorary Secretary. We commend the movement to the public and have no doubt that a ready response will be made.

EXPRESS.
5th July, 1906.

An industrial development scheme in Poona.

41. The Express (Lucknow), of the 5th July, says:—A circular has been issued in Poona signed by M. K. Swami Rao with regard to the Industrial Development Scheme, which states: "We have now fully realized the fact that the salvation of India is indissolubly bound up with industrial advance, and that she can never rise in the scale of nations unless and until her industries are promoted. We have decided, after long and serious consideration, to collect Rs. 70,000 and to utilize only Rs. 20,000 out of it for education and to keep the rest for starting factories in one of the best sites in the Bombay Presidency. We have come to the conclusion to start an up-to-date Glass Bangle Factory and have got a most favourable estimate for it. The profits will be utilized towards the enlargement of the factory or other similar concerns, subject to the approval of the trustees. The object we have in view is not only to save Indian money from foreign countries, but also to save the lives of the starving poorer classes. To achieve this much-coveted end two conditions have to be fulfilled—first, intelligent, enterprising and promising young men must be sent to Japan or some other centres of industrial activity to master the various processes of important industries; secondly, industries on a small scale must be established in India, in order to enable such students on their return to utilize the knowledge they have gained in foreign countries for the benefit of their Motherland."

RAHBAR,
7th July, 1906.

Military expenditure of India.

42. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th July, is afraid that if the military expenditure of India continues to increase year after year at the present rate, it is sure to irretrievably ruin the country. Again, while the pay of the British soldier is increased from time to time, that of the Indian Reservist has recently been reduced from Rs. 3 to Rs. 2 a month only!

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
8th July, 1906.

A public meeting held at Cawnpore to consider the expediency of taking steps for ensuring a better use of the endowments local charitable.

43. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th July, says that, on the 1st idem a public meeting was held at Cawnpore, at which it was unanimously resolved that as the trustees of the various charitable endowments there did not discharge their duties satisfactorily, it was necessary to take steps for ensuring a better use of the endowments, and a committee has been accordingly appointed for the purpose.

The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 11th July, referring to the above meeting, says that as Government does not think proper to interfere in the management of religious endowments, unless the people themselves move in the matter, it is very creditable to the Cawnpore people that they have bestirred themselves in respect to their local endowments.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
12th July, 1906.

The Riyaz-ul-Akhbár on the Birthday Honours.

44. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th July, in commenting upon the Brithday Honours List, says that it does not understand why the Raja of Mahmudabad in Oudh has been left out altogether, and why only a K.C.I.E, instead of at least a K.C.S.I., has been conferred on the Maharaja of Balrampur. The title of Mahamahopadyaya conferred upon the Maharaja of Ajodhia is quite unsuitable. The grant of a Kaisar-i-Hind medal is a very poor and inadequate recognition of the meritorious services which Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk has rendered to the cause of Muhammadan education in India.

AL BASHIR,
10th July, 1906.

Al Bashír on the grant of a Kaisar-i-Hind Medal to Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk.

45. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 10th July, while thanking Government for granting a Kaisar-i-Hind Medal of the first class to Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, says that as the Nawab's rank is very high, the editor does not think fit to congratulate him on the receipt of such an honour.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
11th July, 1906.

The Aligarh Institute Gazette on the Shivaji celebrations at Calcutta.

46. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 11th July, referring to the late Shivaji celebrations at Calcutta, says that, while every community is free to celebrate its great men, in order to create a national feeling among its members, it has no right to ask men of another community to take part in such celebrations, especially when the hero celebrated happens to be regarded as an enemy by the members of that community. The Mahrattas may look upon Shivaji as a model of humanity, and attribute to him what noble qualities they please, but everybody knows in what light the Musalmans take him. His behaviour towards Afzal Khan shows his bravery and morality indeed! It is also well known what he did or intended to do to other Musalmans, and the Musalman kingdom. Again, the motive of holding the Shivaji celebrations, so long after his death, and of reciting his deeds is obvious. Under these circumstances, an invitation to Musalmans to take part in a Shivaji celebration is not only uncalled for, but an open contempt of, and discourtesy to the former. But the writer does not understand how some Musalmans who are said to have lately attended a Shivaji celebration could have been so mean as to be present at an assembly where the hero was worshipped as God and prayers were offered to him for the amelioration of the condition of his people. Surely the Musalmans in question must have been either very obscure persons or mere mercenaries. It is to be greatly regretted that while union between Hindus and Musalmans is urgently required at present, the former should think fit to do such things as are calculated to widen the gulf between the two communities. This indicates that the days of India's misfortune are not yet over.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
11th July, 1906.

Suggestion for stopping the import of cocaine in India.

47. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th July, dwelling upon the injurious consequences of the spread of the cocaine habit in India, suggests that Government had better take steps to stop the import of the drug into this country altogether.

ADVOCATE,
12th July, 1906.

Supply of labour in the United Provinces.

48. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th July, in discussing Mr. Fremantle's Report on the Supply of labour in the United Provinces, says:—No artificial aid or Government interference can do much good, but might do a great deal of harm. We are pleased to find that Mr. Fremantle in his thoughtful report takes this sensible view of the question. On account of increased demand, there is not a little competition, not always of a healthy nature, and even before any one has pressed for it the wages have in the natural operation of the economic law already increased by about 25 per cent. during the last few years, and are daily going up. The cry as to shorter hours of work and better wages, raised on so-called humanitarian grounds, under pressure from and in the interest of the mill-owners and employers of labour of Manchester and Lancashire, is in this sense singularly inopportune and uncalled for. The inbred habits of the people also play an important part in this connection. Their habit of fitful attendance and their incapacity for strenuous work, when attending, are factors to be reckoned with when initiating permanent measures. The wants of the Indian operatives as a class are few; their standard of living is low; what they already earn is sufficient to meet their ordinary requirements. So they can afford to keep away and spend their surplus earning in holiday-making and carousals without any thought for the morrow. Any more increase in their wages under such circumstances at the bidding of the mill-owners and employers of labour of Manchester without the leaven of education and without raising their standard of living can but result in injuring capital and further demoralizing labour, to the ultimate prejudice of the industries. For the same reason we cannot favour the suggestion of more frequent payment, as the evil of fitful attendance would be only aggravated thereby; for it is the common experience of large employers of labour that for a few days after the distribution of chittha the attendance falls. To provide against this, they make deferred payments which, although it causes some inconvenience to the operatives at first, enables the employers to have some hold on their labourers.

SHIFA-UL-MULK,
June, 1906.

A complaint against the railway clerks at Hapur on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

49. The Shifa-ul-Mulk (Hápur), for June, complains, on the authority of a correspondent, that the railway clerks occasionally lodge their relatives in the female waiting-room at the Hápur station, on the Delhi-Moradabad branch of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, which causes much inconvenience to female passengers. On 16th May last the female waiting-room was occupied by one Rám Swárúp, a relative of the Assistant Station Master, so that female passengers had to wait in the sun, exposed to public gaze. One Barkat Ali, who was accompanied by some females, complained to the Assistant Station Master regarding the occupation of the waiting-room in question by men, but he was not heeded.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th July, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

50. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th July, complains that there are no waiting-rooms for female passengers on the stations of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway, so that female passengers on that line are greatly inconvenienced. Mr. Walford (?), travelling ticket checker, takes prostitutes with him in the trains without purchasing tickets for them. Lately he made a prostitute take her seat in the female compartment of a train, and then he himself went in and sitting beside her began to flirt with her. This caused much annoyance to the female passengers in the compartment, and the matter being brought to the notice of the train police guard, the latter had the prostitute removed. Another travelling ticket checker, named Parsotam Nath, instead of going along the foot-board of the carriages for checking tickets when the train is in motion, enters one compartment from another by jumping over the low dividing walls of the compartments and putting his feet with shoes on on the benches on which passengers are sitting. The accountant of the Locomotive Department at Bareilly is largely involved in debts. There already exist six or seven money decrees against him and it is said five or six more similar decrees are soon to issue. It is not known why he is still retained in the service. There is only one way of ingress and egress for all classes of passengers at all the stations on the line ; and the result is that persons travelling higher classes are put to much inconvenience owing to the rush of third class passengers. The authorities concerned should attend to the above complaints.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th July, 1906.

Hackney carriages at the large stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

51. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th July, complains that as the railway authorities at the Bareilly and other large stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway levy tax from carriage-drivers for allowing them to take their carriages within the railway premises and obtain passengers there, the privileged carriage-drivers extort much larger fares from passengers than other carriage-drivers outside the premises do. This practice of taxing hackney carriages on the railway premises had better be abolished for the convenience of passengers.

CITIZEN,
9th July, 1906.

Certain complaints against the Great Indian Peninsula Railway administration.

52. A correspondent of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th July, says :—The other day, on our way to Jhansi, we were at Lucknow. The train for Jhansi was not yet ready. It is a matter for regret that no proper arrangement for latrines exists at Lucknow. The latrines are at a distance from the station, though close to the 3rd class waiting room. The whole neighbouring atmosphere smells so rank and foul that it is almost impossible to check the involuntary nauseating tendency. To add to this discomfort, a tax of one pice is levied by sweepers in charge from every person using them. Surely the Railway is not so poor as to look up to the poor third class passengers for this financial help. However, one may somehow tolerate these inconveniences; but when one is safely seated in a compartment with relatives and luggage, it is not humane to oust one simply to make room for red faced, shamelessly drunk, turbulent Eurasians. For so it actually happened. I took my seat in a third class compartment. Some officer, who was patrolling up and down the platform suddenly stopping before the carriage I was in, babbled out the solemn injunction, "Out, this compartment is not for natives but for Europeans." "Impossible," said I, "since there is no prohibitive placard for Indians at the door." "No matter," he put in, "I say it is for Europeans." Protest was useless. However, I said, "I have paid the coolies once, and if it is that I must shift elsewhere, I am not going to pay any more." "Granted, Babu," he said, with a touch of affected urbanity. Thus for the sake of two Eurasians, a gentleman with six dependents was forcibly ejected, and put to extreme inconvenience, and the whole compartment was reserved for the former.

The train for Manikpur was to start at 8 in the evening, and it was only 2-30 when the mail train took us to Jhansi. There is no covering over the platform where passengers have to get in and down. There is one small shed, but it is not meant for passengers, I was told. No one could stay there for six hours, with the scorching sun overhead. So it was necessary to go to the other side of the platform. The way lay through an overbridge, and it was hot as an oven where passengers are simply baked. I witnessed how an Indian woman fell down in a dead swoon on account of the terrible heat. The Great Indian Peninsula Railway authorities would do well to cover the platform with some sort of roofing.

The road from Mahoba to Charkhari, at least so far as the British territory is concerned, is very ill-paved. The attention of the authorities is invited to the urgent need of improving this road. The road to Charkhari from where the State territory begins presents an enviable contrast, with rows of trees on both sides.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th July, 1906.

Suggestion for establishing some additional sub-post offices at Pilibhit.

53. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th July, says, that as the Head Post-office at Pilibhit is situated in a corner of the town, and there is only one sub-post office which is located near the courts, the public are generally much inconvenienced. Pilibhit though a small town has a flourishing mart, and the postal authorities would do well to establish some more sub-post offices there. Again, there are only four postmen who have to serve the whole town both morning and evening: this number is quite insufficient, and should be increased.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th July, 1906.

Indian Muhammadans and politics.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, says:—The arguments that are employed to persuade Muhammadans to refrain from joining in political agitation are all temporary, and one evil effect thereof is that the Muhammadans, or at any rate the educated section, are holding themselves aloof from the industrial movement known as the swadeshi movement. This is a very serious loss, as we are certain the Muhammadans have great industrial capacity, and their fine work was at one time famous throughout the world. The disadvantages of want of education are being remedied every day, and the time must come when mere service will not satisfy the Muhammadans as it does not satisfy the Hindus. Then it will be recognised that the Hindus and the Muhammadans must form one nation, and no artificial barrier set up between them can stand for any length of time. Whichever section tries to injure the other will suffer itself in the long run, because their interests are mutually inter-dependent. Both under the Hindu and Muhammadan rulers the communities lived at peace and enjoyed equal rights. Even at this moment we find that the Dewan of the foremost Muhammadan State is a Hindu, and not long ago the Dewan of Baroda was a Muhammadan. Neither the Hindu nor Muhammadan has been appointed to a position of equal power or trust under British rule, and the so-called favour to Muhammadans is merely intended to spite the Hindus. Our conviction is that the time is not far distant when, in spite of all influences to the contrary, Hindus and Muhammadans will work together for the common good of their country and countrymen.

DILSHAD,
30th May, 1906.

Complaint regarding the temper of Mr. Adams, Joint Magistrate, Meerut.

2. The Dilshád (Meerut), of the 30th May, received on the 20th July, complains that Mr. Adams, Joint Magistrate at Meerut, is an official of very bad temper and of harsh disposition. His suitors tremble to enter his court, and witnesses and even lawyers are much afraid to appear before him; some pleaders have even given up practising before him. He has, in short, terrorized the whole district. It is reported that he is so carried away with anger at times, that he does not hesitate to strike a man even with a bayonet. He is said to be related to Sir James Digges LaTouche, but this can hardly be true.

URDU-I-MUALLA,
July, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

3. Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for July, contends that, as the removal of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court to Allahabad will as much affect the prosperity of Lucknow, as the transfer of the High Court to the latter town will affect Allahabad, the argument of the Allahabad memorialists against the transfer of the High Court, that the house proprietors and others at Allahabad will suffer loss will be equally true in respect of Lucknow men in the other case. The other arguments produced in favour of Allahabad are equally poor. The editor is, therefore, of opinion that either the existing arrangements should be continued, or, if a change is absolutely necessary, the High Court combined with the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court should be located at Lucknow, which, besides being the most central town in these Provinces, is otherwise naturally fitted to be the capital of the United Provinces.

AL BASHIR,
3rd July, 1906.

Al Bashir on the Allahabad memorial protesting against the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow.

4, Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 3rd July, observes that the Allahabad memorialists have failed to produce any strong arguments in favour of the retention of the High Court at Allahabad. The argument that, because Allahabad is a sacred place of Hindus, the transfer of the High Court from that town would wound their religious feelings is absurd. The sanctity of Allahabad is not due to its being the seat of the High Court, nor was that Court transferred from Agra to Allahabad on account of the latter's sanctity. The editor is, however, sorry to notice that no question in India is raised, which is not given a religious aspect by some interested party. If the religious importance of a town were to be the reason for its claim to be the seat of the High Court, the editor is afraid that the residents of Muttra, Benares, Ajodhia, on the one hand, and of Pirán Kaliar, Bahraich and Deoband on the other, might urge in favour of their respective towns with as much force as the people of Allahabad do in favour of theirs. In the same manner, the question of the location of the High Court has nothing to do with the Allahabad University. Those Judges of the High Court and members of the Bar, who are Fellows of the University, could go down from Lucknow to Allahabad to attend University meetings, as the Fellows of outstations do at present. The Allahabad memorialists further urge that, at the time when the civil station at Allahabad was being built, Government made a verbal promise to the Allahabad people to keep the High Court permanently at that town. But against this verbal promise, the people of Lucknow can produce documentary pledges for the retention of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in their town. As regards the question of financial loss which the transfer of the High Court will entail upon the house proprietors at Allahabad, the editor does not think that Government will refuse to carry out a measure required in the public interest for the sake of a few interested persons. Besides, swadeshism being in such favour in India at present, Lucknow, which is the biggest centre of indigenous manufactures in the United Provinces, will be able to make vast strides in them, if the High Court is removed to that town. Lucknow is superior to Allahabad in many other respects. There is not a single good Urdu newspaper published at Allahabad, nor are there any good books brought out in that town. Again, Allahabad is neither the centre of Sanskrit nor of Arabic learning in spite of its much vaunted sanctity.

KAYASTH
HITKARI,
16th July, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

5. A correspondent of the Kayasth Hitkári (Agra), of the 16th July, strongly disapproving of the proposed transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow, says that, as the High Court has long been at Allahabad, and the members of the Bar have generally constructed their own houses in that town, the transfer of that court to Lucknow will entail a heavy financial loss on them. The owners of a number of private bungalows and hotels will also be great losers in case the High Court is removed to Lucknow. But the greatest loser will be the Kayasth Patshala, most of whose trustees and managers are members of the High Court bar, and, as all of them will have to leave Allahabad, the object of the late Munshi Kali Prasad, founder of the Patshala, in willing away his entire property for its establishment and support, will be frustrated. The Kayasth community, who number about 25 lakhs in the country, and derive special benefit from the Patshala, will thus be the chief sufferers; and they should therefore hold meetings everywhere and memorialise the Government not to remove the High Court from Allahabad. Moreover, Lucknow, which enjoys a bad reputation for the effeminate habits of its male population, can hardly be said to be a fit place for the location of a High Court. The lanes at Lucknow are very narrow, so that it will not be able to provide healthy accommodation for the members of the bar and others who will have to follow the High Court there.

ARYA MITRA,
16th May, 1906.

A European outraging a respectable Indian lady in a railway train on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway.

6. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th May, states that an Indian lady of a very respectable family was lately travelling from Bombay to Poona by rail. When the train was passing between Lonauli and Kirki, a European, named Alfred Dillon, entered into the compartment of the lady, who was in sound sleep at the time, (and outraged her). The culprit has been arrested, and is under trial in the court of the Magistrate at Poona. It remains to be seen whether the European will get off without punishment, or whether he will be fined two or three rupees : this being the general way in which justice is administered in India in cases in which Europeans are the accused.

(b).—Police.

DILSHAD,
30th May, 1906.

Certain enquiries regarding newspapers made from editors by police officials in the United Provinces.

7. The Dilshád (Meerut), of the 30th May, (received on the 20th July,) says—that on the 20th May last two respectable police officials came to the editor's office, and asked him to state how many and what newspapers he received (in exchange), and who were his customers. The editor declined to answer the questions, unless they showed him the orders authorizing them to make such enquiries. On this, the police officials showed him a writing in red ink, which contained such questions as—what newspapers are published within your jurisdiction ? who subscribe to them ? how many newspapers are received within your jurisdiction from other places, and by whom are they received ? do these papers contain articles that are against Government or indecent ? and so on. It is difficult to understand why such enquiries are being made.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th July, 1906.

Approval of the appointment of the first batch of twelve Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, says :—The Government of Sir James Digges LaTouche is to be congratulated upon the wise and judicious selection of candidates for the newly created appointment of Deputy Superintendents of Police in these Provinces. The Secretary of State has sanctioned the appointment of thirty-five Deputy Superintendents of Police, and His Honour has decided that during the current year twelve appointments should be made. There will be four grades of officers of this class : seven have been allotted to the first grade at a salary of Rs. 500 per mensem, ten to the second grade at a salary of Rs. 400 per mensem, nine to the third grade at a salary of Rs. 300 per mensem and nine to the fourth grade at a salary of Rs. 250 per mensem. No appointment has been made to the first grade, and of the appointments made to the other grades three have been made to the second grade. Of these three officers, Pandit Sham Bihari Misra is an M.A. of the Allahabad University, and a Deputy Collector. His career at the University and as Magistrate has been very creditable, and we have no doubt that he will discharge the duties of his new office in a manner which will bring credit to him and to his educated countrymen. Munshi Muhammad Amin is an old Muhammadan Collegian, and in his day was well known in cricketing circles as a very smart and powerful cricketer. He has been for long a Police officer—having for many years held the office of Court Inspector in various districts. He has for the last few years been connected with the Police Training school at Moradabad, where he has proved himself to be a very useful member of the staff. He is a well educated man, and has borne a good reputation in his department, and we have no hesitation in saying that he well merited the promotion. Munshi Mamnun Hasan Khan was a Tahsildar till some time ago, and has recently been holding the office of a probationary Deputy Collector. He is reported to be a man of very active habits, and he comes from a very respectable family. Of the other three officers who have been promoted from Inspectorships, we do not pretend to know anything, but we presume that they have been selected on good grounds. The appointments made to the fourth grade have been made by direct recruitment, and we are extremely pleased to note that all the gentlemen appointed are graduates, two of them holding the degree of LL.B. also.

So far as the graduates of these provinces go, they have every reason to feel satisfied that they are well represented in the list of appointments, and we hope and trust that in years to come, the commendable method adopted by Sir James Digges LaTouche will be strictly followed. What the Police Department wants is the infusion of new blood. The time has long since gone by when the Department could be looked upon as a refuge for the do-nothings of influential families. It is an encouraging sign of the times that the Government should subscribe to what the public have always demanded, viz., the appointment of well educated young men to this Department. We sympathise with the desire of the Government to patronise scions of respectable families and landed classes, but we think it would be a dangerous rule to lay down that family connections, or the mere accident of birth in a particular class, should go a great way in determining official patronage. By all means patronise members of the landed classes, but do not dispense with educational tests. We are really glad that in this instance the Government has shown a praiseworthy discretion.

It has been remarked by some people that too many appointments have been given to Muhammadans, and that having regard to the proportion of the Muhammadan population to the Hindu population of these provinces, so many Muhammadans should not have been appointed. We confess we have no sympathy with such cavillers. It ought to be plain to every right-thinking man that so long as a competent Indian is appointed to any post of responsibility, it does not matter what his caste or creed may be. To our mind it can by no means be an edifying sight to see Hindus and Muhammadans, who have any sense of responsibility, fighting over the distribution of loaves and fishes. It would of course be a different thing altogether if the members of any particular community were excluded, on purpose, from holding any appointments, or if undue favour were shown to one community at the expense of the other. But it would be as unfortunate as it would be mischievous for responsible men to hold that the guiding principle in giving appointments should be not the educational and moral qualifications of candidates, but their religion or caste. Indeed, we may go a step further and hold that there are some appointments which should be given only to those who are by dint of their general qualifications eminently suited for them, and that no considerations of caste or creed should be allowed to affect the decision of the Government. We are glad that we cannot find fault with the Government of Sir James Digges LaTouche in this particular instance. These appointments, we need scarcely say, will be highly prized as time goes on. The success of the new scheme depends as much upon the ability and integrity of the officers who have been appointed now, as upon the confidence which may be reposed in them by the Government, and upon the chances that may be given to them of proving their usefulness in the Department. We hope that they will be treated as Assistant District Superintendents are, and that they will be entrusted with district and investigation work. To treat them as glorified Inspectors or Head Clerks would be as inexpedient and unwise as it would be demoralising for them. We hope and trust that a fair chance will be given to them, and that they will prove themselves worthy of their office.

BHARAT JIWAN,
16th July, 1906.

A high-handed proceeding of a Sub-Inspector of Police against a zamindar in Azamgarh.

9. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 16th July, states that one Bijai Narain, a zamindar in the Azamgarh district, refused to allow a Sub-Inspector of Police to search his house in connection with the theft of some property elsewhere and he was punished by the Magistrate, on the charge of assaulting a police official, with rigorous imprisonment for 15 days and a fine of Rs. 200. On appeal, the Sessions Judge quashed the sentence of imprisonment, and reduced the fine to Rs. 15, on the ground that the Sub-Inspector had no reasonable ground to suspect that the stolen property would be found in the house of the accused, that he wanted to search the latter's house to unnecessarily harass him, and that he was therefore acting wrongfully in seeking to search his house. When the case was taken to the High Court, the Judge, who heard it, remitted the fine of Rs. 15 also, with the remark that a search of this kind was against the law. Would the police, the editor asks, take a lesson from this decision? [The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th July, also notices this case.]

Protest against the proposed establishment of a separate meat-market at Moradabad.

10. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th July, publishes the following article, both in English and Urdu :—It is a most lamentable circumstance that our Hindu brethren try to give the swadeshi movement an appearance of importance by securing the sympathy of Muhammadans and yet these advocates of swadeshism are intent on spreading discord in other ways. They continually make proposals under the pretence of regard for the public health, to remove outside the town meat shops that have existed for centuries, without the slightest detriment to public health, within the Moradabad municipality. Had this proposal been the outcome of a genuine regard for the public health, we ourselves would have willingly supported it; but we assure the authorities that the plea of regard for public health is only a screen behind which our patriotic countrymen try to cause Muhammadans as much annoyance and trouble as they can. In support of this statement, we may refer to the fact that when the same proposal was made in the time of the Hon'ble Mr. Winter, a zealous gentleman, who was never before heard to raise his voice in any matter connected with public health, volunteered to bear the cost of establishing a separate meat market. Had the Hon'ble Mr. Winter not been able, by his innate sagacity, to see through the motives of the proposal, or had he considered the present meat shops at all injurious to public health, he would have willingly accepted the philanthropic gentleman's offer, which would have relieved the municipality of the entire cost of the proposed market. We have equal confidence in the perspicacity of our present Collector, Mr. Harrison, and we are sure that with a little consideration he will discover that this proposal is really a means by which our brethren wish to accomplish the threefold object of depriving the Muhammadans of this city of their long established right and thereby wounding their feelings, of putting them to as much trouble as possible, and of making them the object of the Government's displeasure as the scheme is sure to meet with their strenuous opposition. The scheme, as we have shown above, is not a new scheme, and its advocates try to take advantage of want of local knowledge of every new Collector. We, on behalf of the Muslim public of the city, invite the attention of our able Collector, Mr. Harrison, who is here as the representative of the Imperial Government, to this important matter, and hope that, after consideration of the reasons that led to the rejection of the proposal in the time of Mr. Winter, and also taking into consideration the fact that the acceptance of this proposal will not only have the effect of putting the Muslim public to great inconvenience, but will also hurt the feelings of all the Muhammadans, he will finally reject this obnoxious scheme for political reasons, if for no other.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th July, 1906.

The Town Hall garden at Bareilly.

11. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th July, complains that the Town Hall garden, which was formerly a very pleasant and delightful place of public resort at Bareilly, is now in a most unsatisfactory condition. One Babu Mohan Lal, a late Municipal Member who was in charge of the garden, turned it into a field, and raised crops in it; and the result is that, deprived of most of its fragrant flowers and plants, it has lostits former charm and picturesqueness. The district authorities would do well to restore the garden to its former state, and make it a suitable public resort again.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th July, 1906.

A complaint against sweepers at Agra.

12. The Nasím-i-Agra, of the 15th July, observes that sweepers in India have, from ancient times, been treated as a class of people not to be touched by others, and that it has therefore become the duty of the former to warn passengers on public streets and lanes to see that they do not touch them. But the sweepers at Agra have of late become so bold and insolent that they go along the streets without taking the least care to avoid coming in contact with other persons; and the result is that sometimes rubbish or night-soil falling out of their baskets pollutes the passers by. This causes much annoyance to the people, and especially to the Hindus. The local authorities would do well to see to the matter.

GAZETTE,
16th July, 1906.

Monkeys in the United Provinces.

13. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th July, joins the Naiyar-i-Ázam, of Moradabad, in complaining that the number of monkeys has of late largely increased in the cities and towns of the United Provinces, and that they cause much mischief and injury to the people. They destroy the thatched roofs of houses, carry away all sorts of articles they can lay their hands on, and are generally a nuisance. If they are allowed to go on multiplying in the towns unchecked, they will become an intolerable pest. The municipalities would therefore do well to devise some means of getting rid of these mischievous animals.

The late Allahabad University Examinations.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th July, 1906

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, says:—The student world in these Provinces has a legitimate grievance against the Allahabad University for the unbearable delay with which results of examinations are announced. The results of the Intermediate and Entrance and School Final examinations have been published several months after the examinations, and, even then, it will be noticed, there are some deplorable deficiencies. For instance, the results of candidates belonging to Meerut who appeared at the Final School examination have yet to be announced. This is a state of things which ought to be put an end to at once. Not only does the University suffer in its reputation on this account, but the delay is fraught with inconvenience to students. Colleges open after the summer vacation about the middle of July, and students naturally expect that they will be given ample time to select their colleges, and to prepare for studying at colleges. One practical instance of the mischief of this delay is that the admission of candidates for the Hospital Assistant Class into the Agra Medical School has had to be postponed by about two weeks. The surprises of examinations are many, but it is hardly desirable that another surprise in the shape of suspense should be added to the test. If the examiners who are usually appointed are incompetent, or slow in the discharge of their duties, there is no reason why better and more active men should not be selected. We hope those in power will do the needful in the matter.

Proposed establishment of a Law College at Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th July, 1906.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, says:—So at last it seems that Allahabad is going to have very soon the long-promised Law College. We understand that the Local Government has promised to contribute one lakh of rupees towards the outlay of the initial expenses of the Law College, and that the Faculty of Law has passed a resolution in favour of the establishment of that institution. It will now be for the Syndicate and the Senate to put their seal upon the proposal, and we have every hope that in the next cold weather we shall have here a Central Law College. It is proposed to appoint a whole-time Principal on Rs. 1,000 a month, a Professor on Rs. 400 a month and two Readers who will, each of them, get a monthly salary of Rs. 250. Having regard to the experience of the Madras Law College, and the growing number of candidates at law examinations in these Provinces, the college here should soon become self-supporting. The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, Vice-Chancellor, than whom there is none better qualified to speak on the subject, has written an extremely valuable note upon the subject which we shall soon discuss. Meanwhile we think it is but his due to say that he has earned the thanks of all those who are interested in the growth of education, by his endeavour in this behalf, which constitutes the first step towards realising the ideal of a teaching University in these Provinces.

Students of the Muhammadan College, Aligarh, refused permission by the College authorities to attend a lecture lately delivered by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya at that town on the relations between Hindus and Musalmans.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th July, 1906.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, says:—The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya who just now happens to be at Aligarh on a professional visit, delivered a stirring address on the subject of the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. We are informed that a large number of the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College desired to attend the lecture, but were not allowed to do so by the college authorities. If the information, which has reached us, be true—and no one would be more glad than ourselves to be assured that it is not true—all we can say is that it was extremely unfortunate that the college authorities should have arrived at such a decision. We can understand and appreciate the desire of the college authorities that college students should not be drawn into the vortex of active politics, but it can hardly be maintained with any degree of seriousness that the attendance of college students at a lecture like this can be injurious to them. It is not in this fashion that the minds of young people can grow, or their thoughts can be liberalised. Too much restriction has its own inevitable reaction, and if it is at all desirable that the relations of the two communities should grow more friendly, we can only regret that an opportunity like this should not have been fully availed of by the rising generation of Muhammadans at Aligarh.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th July, 1906.

A temporary strike of the Hindu students of the Wilson College at Bombay.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, republishes the following (from another newspaper?) :—Bombay, July 4. The Hindu students of the Wilson College, about 250 in number, went on strike on Monday last, as the Principal declined to close the College on that day, it being Ekadashi. Last year also this holiday was not observed in this College; and when a representation was made to the Principal, the students were informed that the Principal did not know that the day was a Hindu holiday. In view of this, on Saturday last a deputation of several Hindu students waited upon the Principal, Dr. Mackichan, and requested him to close the college on Monday. Their request was, however, not complied with. On Monday about two hundred and fifty students absented themselves from the college, and, marshalling themselves into a procession, proceeded in three separate parties along the Grant and Chami Roads, shouting "Bande Mátaram." Dr. Mackichan, on being informed of the absence of a large number of Hindu students, visited all classes. It was noticed that the Hindu students were conspicuous by their absence, Parsi and Christian students having held aloof from the demonstration. Dr. Mackichan remarked in the presence of those present that he never for a moment thought that the students of his college would ever follow the example of the Bengali students, and said that he would take severe notice of the conduct of the absentees.

The absentee students attended the college yesterday when Dr. Mackichan informed them that if they did not tender written apology by Wednesday (to-day), they would no longer be considered as students of the college. The college opened at the usual hour this morning when it was evident that the students were not inclined to tender a written apology. After the classes were formed, Dr. Mackichan visited the different classes. All the students standing up, Dr. Mackichan asked them to express their regret for remaining absent from the college without leave on Monday. This the students did, and were asked to sit down. Dr. Mackichan then exhorted them to behave well in future.

DILSHAD,
30th May, 1906.

A swadeshi meeting at Meerut.

18. The Dilshád (Meerut), of the 30th May, states that on the evening of the 12th idem a large public meeting was held at the house of one Pandit Ganpat Prasad, Vaidya, Meerut, under the presidency of Munshi Mukhtar Singh, head master (of the local Government High School ?), at which spirited speeches were made in support of the swadeshi movement After the meeting was over, certain police officers went to Pandit Ganesh Prasad and asked him to give them full particulars of the proceedings of the assembly. The writer does not understand why such enquiries should be made about swadeshi meetings, when Lord Minto himself is said to be in favour of swadeshism and when it is not a political movement.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th July, 1906.

Agitation against the Partition of Bengal.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, says :—We think the leaders of public opinion in Bengal should carefully reconsider their position after the repeated declaration of Mr. John Morley that the partition of Bengal is a settled fact. What seems to have mainly determined the decision of the present Government are the facts that some redistribution of administrative areas was necessary, and that it would be a weakness on the part of a strong Government to give way to a purely "native" agitation. We do not even remotely suggest that the agitation in Bengal should cease, for that would be a fatal blunder, but it must be directed in more positive directions. There is, first, the manner of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's administration to be dealt with. He and his subordinates were evidently under the impression that they could do what they pleased, irrespective of law and order, on the pretext that the new Province was in an excited condition. They have found out their mistake to a certain extent, but they have not yet quite mended their ways. They must be thoroughly disabused on this point, and the right of the subject re-established. Why not hold the broken up Provincial Conference again in Eastern Bengal and see whether the authorities will face another test case? But probably the famine may be an argument against the holding of the Conference. Then the swadeshi movement must now be thoroughly organized, and industrial independence must be striven for in right earnest. So far our countrymen of Bengal have no reason to feel disappointed, and recent events should be a fresh incentive to endeavour.

INDIAN PUNCH,
16th July, 1906.

Swadeshism.

20. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 16th July, contains some Urdu verses from one Gauhar of Lucknow, in which he lamenting the poverty and distress alleged to be prevailing in India at the present time, says that this is principally due to the enormous consumption of foreign articles by Indians in preference to their home-made manufactures. There are hardly four cent. of the population who get a daily full meal. Surely a person who does not love his own country and is not pained at the sight of his fellow-countrymen suffering, is heartless and unworthy to be called a man. The writer is quite convinced that a country that mainly depends upon foreign manufactures for its daily wants can never be prosperous; and so he thinks that he should henceforth use no foreign article in any shape whatever.

COLONEL,
16th July, 1906.

Swadeshism.

21. The Colonel (Moradabad), of the 16th July, publishes a long Urdu poem by one Munshi Piare Lal Raunak, of Delhi, in which he, calling swadeshism a panacea for all the miseries and troubles of India at the present time, makes an animated appeal to his fellow countrymen to pledge themselves not to use foreign goods any more, and to sacrifice everything to ameliorate the condition of their motherland.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,
16th July, 1906.

Swadeshism.

22. The Áwázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th July, publishes a number of Urdu stanzas by one Shaida of Delhi in which he, most mournfully comparing the past glory and prosperity of India with her present abject condition and impoverishment, appeals to his countrymen to awake from their deep sleep and shake off their indifference to the state to which their motherland is being fast reduced. There is no country in the world, which is so rich in her natural resources, and it really sounds a paradox that, with the abundance of wealth in their own house, Indians should become bankrupt. But this is due to their culpable neglect of their indigenous arts and industries, and to their recently acquired love and taste for foreign, gaudy articles. They should surely be ashamed that they are fast preparing the way for the ruin of their country by their love of show and finery. Let them but patronize their home-made articles once more, and they will soon find India becoming rich again.

BHARAT JIWAN,
16th July, 1906.

The partition of Bengal and the swadeshi movement.

23. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 16th July, referring to the reply, which Mr. Morley, in answer to a question put by Sir Henry Cotton, recently repeated in Parliament, that the partition of Bengal was a settled fact, asks the brave Bengalis not to be disheartened by this reply, but to keep up their swadeshi movement with unswerving steadfastness and perseverance which are sure to gain them their object at last. According to Capital, the organ of European merchants in India, there has already occurred a heavy falling off in the import of foreign goods. A marked diminution has also taken place in the consumption of foreign salt in this country. All this is due to the persistent efforts of the Bengalis in the cause of the swadeshi movement, and augurs well. Let the Bengalis but remain true to their vow of swadeshism, and there is little doubt that, when British mill-owners and merchants raise a cry regarding the loss of their trade with India, Mr. Morley will see the expediency of reuniting the two divided parts of Bengal.

ALBASHIR,
3rd July, 1906.

Al Bashir on the Shivaji celebration at Calcutta.

24. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 3rd July, does not understand why the Arya Samaj newspapers should have taken exception to its recent article on the Shivaji celebration lately held at Calcutta (vide article No. 37 on page 352 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906). Shivaji was an idol worshipper, as are his admirers who held the celebration in question, putting up his idol for worship on the occasion. Arya Samajists profess to be opposed to idolatry, and they should not therefore have objected to Al Bashir's remarks on the celebration. The admirers of Shivaji however may say that they hold him in high honour because he released the country from the Muhammadan yoke. But the Mahratta rule made the condition of the country far worse than it was under the Muhammadan Government. Confusion, anarchy and bloodshed prevailed everywhere, commerce was at a standstill, the canals, constructed by the Musalman Kings, were allowed to become dry, villages were sold for nominal prices: in short, the principle of might is right became the order of the day. This state of things continued unchecked until the country passed under the sway of the British Government. Should the British Government retire from India at the present time, her condition would become still worse than what it was during the Mahratta régime, the people having lost their ancestors' energy and industry and become dependent on foreign countries even for the supply of their daily wants. Such being the case, it is a pity that the admirers of Shivaji should pray for the rise of another Shivaji among them, who would probably bring about the same state of things as existed during that man's and his immediate successors' domination.

AL BASHIR,
3rd July, 1906.

Suggestion to punish Government servants who are members of the Nágri Pracharini Sabha, Benares.

25. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 3rd July, is surprised to learn that several Government officers should be members of the Nágri Prachárini Sabha at Benares. The sabha is more of a political than a literary body. During the régime of Sir Antony MacDonnell this sabha memorialised his Government to make Hindi the Court language of these provinces; and then afterwards complained several times to him that the Hindi Resolution, issued by his Government on the 18th April 1900, was not duly carried out by the courts. This action of the sabha could not be regarded as part of the legitimate work of a literary society. However, if the Nágri Prachárini Sabha is not a political society, then the defunct Urdu Defence Association of Lucknow too was a non-political body, and the writer might ask why the then Government threatened to stop State aid to the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, if the trustees of the latter, who were members of that Association, did not dissociate themselves from it. Again, many officers of the Education Department of these provinces, who are members of the Nágri Prachárini Sabha, do their best to get the books published by this sabha prescribed as text-books for schools; while some Deputy Inspectors of Schools are doing all in their power to increase the number of Hindi, and decrease that of Urdu scholars in the village schools. And as practically the whole Education Department in these provinces is in the hands of a single community (Hindus), most serious injury is being done to the cause of Urdu. All this is done in the time of Sir James Digges LaTouche, who is a great champion of Urdu; so that one can well imagine what would be the fate of Urdu if a person like Sir Antony MacDonnell were to become the Lieutenant-Governor of these provinces. The Local Government would do well to make an enquiry as to what Government officers are members of the Nágri Prachárini Sabha, and to punish them for being so.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th July, 1906.

Establishment of a Printers' Union in Calcutta.

26. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th July, says:—As an outcome of the strike in the Government and other presses in Calcutta, a Printers' Union has been established in Calcutta by the disinterested efforts of certain gentlemen unconnected with compositors or their employers. This is a new thing in India, and points to the possibility of labour organizations in future. The Printers' Union has already done excellent work, and large numbers of printers and compositors are constantly joining it. Several differences between compositors and their employers have been referred to the Union and have been amicably settled. Labour is so cheap and so docile in India that the men seem scarcely to be aware that they have any rights as against their employers, and the movement in Calcutta should be the beginning of a change in the history of labour in this country.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th July, 1906.

A suggestion to invest some prominent members of the landed aristocracy in the United Provinces with revenue and judicial powers within their respective estates.

27. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th July, referring to the suggestion of the Arya Gazette (Lahore), that the Maharaja of Benares should be raised to the status of an independent chief, like the Nawab of Rampur and the Maharaja of Tehri, says that it would tend to considerably lighten the administrative work of the Government if proprietors of large landed estates in these Provinces were invested with revenue and judicial powers within their respective estates. There are already some estates in Bengal, such as Mayurbhanja and others, whose owners have been invested with the civil and judicial administration of their territories; and there seems no reason why similar concessions should not be made to some of the prominent members of the landed aristocracy in these Provinces as well. Should the Government receive this suggestion favourably, the writer would recommend that the powers in question should in the first instance be conferred upon three Hindu and three Musalman first-class taluqdars. The Maharajas of Benares, Ajodhia and Balrampur are the biggest taluqdars among the Hindus, and three Muhammadan taluqdars of similar position may be selected for the purpose. It is to be hoped that the Hon'ble Raja Ali Muhammad Khan Bahadar will take up this question in the Taluqdars Association in Oudh.

HINDUSTANI,
18th July, 1906.

A suggestion for fixing the maximum speed of motor cars in the United Provinces also.

28. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 18th July, approving of the order recently issued by the Government of Bombay limiting the maximum speed of motor-cars to 15 miles an hour, says that accidents from motor-cars are likely to occur as frequently in such big and crowded cities as Lucknow, Benares and Cawnpore, as in Bombay. Government would do well to follow the example of the Bombay Government, and not be guided by the opinion of the Municipal Board, Lucknow, which has refused to put any such restriction on motorists in deference to the latter's wishes on the subject.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,

Complaint against the present contractors who are responsible for the sale of good articles of food at market rates at the stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

29. The Naiyar i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th July, complains that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities gave free contracts to one Chunni Lal and Muhammad Husain for selling Indian articles of food at the stations on the line through their own servants or agents, in order that passengers may get good articles of food at the current market rates. But the contractors, instead of appointing their own agents for the purpose, have located shopkeepers at the various stations to carry on their business on their own account, taking much larger sums of money from the latter for the privilege than the railway authorities took from them before the contract system was introduced. The result of the present arrangement is that the shopkeepers sell articles to passengers at very high rates. The present system of contract had better be discontinued, and direct arrangement made with shopkeepers for the sale of articles at the stations at ordinary bazar rates; a copy of the weekly price-list being supplied to each of them through the local tahsildar. If it however be desirable to continue the contract system, the contract should be given to some educated or well-known rich man, who may be relied upon to do the work honestly and satisfactorily.

AL BASHIR,
17th July, 1906.

Suggestion for empowering the police to prosecute railway employes for overcrowding railway carriages.

30. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 17th July, complains that, while the lion's share of the income of the various railways in India comes from third-class passengers, very little attention is paid to the latter's comfort or convenience, which is decidedly against the principle of commerce. Historians of India have written about Black Hole in Calcutta; but if anybody wishes to see a real Black Hole, he should see third class railway carriages during a fair or marriage season, when they are literally crammed with human beings. It is certainly most objectionable that double or even treble the prescribed number of passengers, which is already excessive, should be huddled together in a compartment on the occasion of fairs, &c. There is no reason why the police should not be empowered to take proceedings against railway officials for overcrowding railway carriages, just as they are empowed to do against the driver of a horse carriage, camel-cart, &c. When passengers are prosecuted for breaking a railway rule, why should not railway officials themselves be similarly dealt with for doing so?

Abduction of Indian girls by European missionaries.

31. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th July, observing that European missionaries have of late been adopting very objectionable practices for decoying and abducting Indian girls, refers to a recent case at Santipur, district Nadia, Bengal, in which two English missionaries, who had with them a Bengali woman in a carriage, and spoke harshly to a number of Bengali students who enquired about the lady, were severely belaboured, being beaten almost to death by the latter. This occurred on the 30th June last when the Bengali students referred to were proceeding to the railway station to receive one Babu Bepin Behari Lal, who was to speak at the celebration which was to be held in honour of Shivaji there on that day. It seems that European missionaries have lately been going to extremes in their religious zeal, so that they deserved the treatment they received.

EXPRESS,
19th July, 1906.

Rumour regarding the appointment of Lord Kitchener to succeed Lord Cromer in Egypt.

1. The Express (Lucknow), of the 19th July, says:—The rumour that Lord Kitchener may succeed Lord Cromer in Egypt, is one which, it is hoped, will turn out to be true. Lord Curzon, who is holding himself as a sort of reserve statesman for such posts, will be disappointed of course, but at present we do not want Egypt stirred up as well as India, by injudicious vagaries in the name of statesmanship sauced up with sophistical oratory.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th July, 1906.

Mr. Khaparde's advice to the National Congress to refrain from making any representations to Government in future.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th July, says:—In our last issue we referred to Mr. Khaparde's letter, and said that he had done a distinct service by drawing the attention of the public to some matters in connection with the Congress. But this is all that we can say of Mr. Khaparde's letter. What some of his suggestions really amount to is more than we can say. He would like the Congress to refrain in future from petitioning the Government. Assume that that is done, but how will it work itself out? The Government will be saved from so much worry and trouble, and pursue its course even more complacently than it has done so far with all our petitions and protests. The Congress really aims at representing popular grievances to the Government, but if it ceases to do so in future, it will have given up half of its legitimate functions. It is really surprising to us that any suggestion such as this should have been made. If the Government has not so far paid much attention to the prayer of the Congress, that is no reason why the Congress should stop making representations in future.

Rumoured proposal regarding the appointment of Mr. R. C. Dutta as a member of the India Council.

3. The Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 22nd July, referring to the rumour that Mr. R. C. Dutta is going to be appointed a member of the India Council, observes that blessed indeed will be the day when an Indian is honoured with a seat on that Council. With a view to giving a practical proof of its impartial attitude towards all classes of its subjects, the British Government should fill some of the higher appointments with qualified Indians.

The native levies and the Zulus in Natal.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd July, says:—The native levies in Natal surely under the guidance of British officers, and presumably at the connivance of the Natal Government, have been massacring the rebel Zulus, and have mutilated the corpse of Bambaata, the late rebel chief. The great sensation created in England by this brutal method of warfare is sought to be allayed by the assurance given by the Natal Government that the head of the chief had been severed from his body and brought to Natal for identification, and that the operations have been conducted "with unexampled humanity." The explanations given by the Natal Government have not satisfied the Liberals who demand an Imperial Commission for enquiry, while the Unionists are contented. We confess there has been very little of humanity displayed in the burning of kraals and looting of stores of grain and provisions.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th July, 1906.

Need for giving uniformity to the silver currency in Tonk.

5. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th July, states that kaldár (machine-made or British India) rupees as well as another kind of coin, called Chittor Sháhi rupees, are current in Tonk. The Chittor Sháhi rupees are exchanged in the bazar at a heavy discount, ranging from 25 to 50 per cent. There are six parganas in the State, in four of which all transactions are carried on with kaldár, while in the other two with Chittor Sháhi rupees, with this difference that higher officers are all paid in kaldár everywhere, but the officials of small pay in the latter two parganas receive their salaries in the other coin. This is a very objectionable and unfair practice, and it would be well if the Darbar made universal use of kaldár rupees discarding the other coin altogether.

JASUS,
21st July, 1906.

Alleged maladministration in the Native States.

6. A correspondent of the Jásús (Agra), of the 21st July, in a long article, complaining of general maladministration in the Native States, says that although Government does its best to give Native Princes, during their minority, as good an education and training as possible, yet when they are invested with powers, they badly neglect their duties to their people, and oppress them. The reason for this is not far to seek. When Native Princes are minors, they are placed under the strict supervision and in the good company of able tutors; but as soon as they come into power, this supervision is withdrawn, and the result is that they are at once surrounded by corrupt and interested officials and others, who easily lead them astray. Government should therefore either do away with the Native States altogether, so as to save the residents of those States from the oppression of their careless Chiefs, or should at least appoint some of its own experienced officers as advisers to the Chiefs, for a certain period, when they are given ruling power. It would be better if Government brought the Police Departments of the Native States under its own control, just as it already controls their Postal Departments. In another place, the editor, while advocating reform in the administration of the Native States in general, would on no account agree to their extinction.

Complaints against the minister of the Jaora State.

7. A correspondent of the Jásús (Agra), of the 21st July, says that the present kámdár (minister) has introduced great changes in Jaora, which have unduly swelled the expenditure of that State. He has largely increased the staff of every existing department, founded new departments, constructed many new works, augmented the police force, and filled most of the appointments with outsiders. He has lately appointed a Moghal of low origin as sub-judge, who is an illiterate man and is ever ready to accept a bribe however small it may be. A person, who lived by begging, was appointed to a small post on Rs. 10 per mensem some years ago, and he is now worth four lakhs of rupees. Some time ago, some relatives of the Chief made certain complaints to the Political Agent regarding the oppression of the kámdár, with the only result that their position in the Darbar was affected.

Question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

9. Pandit Krishna Rao, a retired Deputy Collector, writing from Jhansi, to the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 19th July, says that, as Lucknow lies in the centre of the United Provinces, it will be but due that a High Court for the whole Province should be located at Lucknow. Jhansi and Jalaun are situated in a straight line to the south of Lucknow, so that if the High Court is transferred to the latter town, suitors of those two districts will have great convenience in attending it.

Murder of two men at Aligarh.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th July, says:—Some days ago a well known printer and bookseller of Agra, named Sháikh Abdul Gafúr, and his pressman, Mohammad Ayub, were murdered at Aligarh, and their bodies were so burnt that identification was impossible. The police have however traced the murder, and got hold of two murderers who have confessed the guilt, alleging that they were hired by a rival publisher to murder Abdul Gafúr.

Sedition in India.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 22nd July, 1906.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd July, says :— Some years ago there was quite a bumper crop of cases of sedition. The Government in some Provinces prosecuted newspaper after newspaper—in every case a vernacular newspaper—and Magistrates and Judges lost their heads.

* * * * * * *

It is of the greatest importance to consider what effect these measures had upon the people. The best illustration is afforded by the case of Mr. Tilak. By the time he had been some months in prison, the official panic had, to a great extent, died out. He was liberated after a year's imprisonment. Since he had been duly convicted of spreading disaffection against the Government, he should have been avoided by all who desired to preserve a reputation for loyalty. But the result was precisely the reverse. His popularity was immensely increased by his punishment. Instead of being regarded as a convict, he was looked upon as a martyr. By nature Mr. Tilak is more of a student and a scholar than a political agitator, and his scholarship is recognised and admired by European scholars. But, thanks to his prosecution, he is undoubtedly the greatest political power in the Deccan to-day. His word is law to thousands of educated and earnest Deccanis, and among the people his popularity is boundless.

* * * * * * * *

For the last few months we are becoming familiar with another phase, namely, the manufacture of sedition where none exists. How else can we characterise the most reprehensible aud dangerous conduct of the Eastern Bengal Government and the authorities in that Province ? To say that a Lieutenant Governor and Judges and Magistrates manufacture sedition, sounds preposterous, because they have to suppress and not create sedition. But there is such a thing as driving a people to become seditious, and this is exactly what the officials have been doing in East Bengal. The beginning of the difficulty was very simple. People were excited and indignant on account of the partition of Bengal. Sir Bampfylde Fuller is not a Bengal Civilian, and he came as an utter stranger among them. Finding the people agitated and excited, he should have set about conciliating them, and letting public feeling gradually subside. Instead of doing so, he went strutting and swaggering about, ordering people to present him with addresses and illuminate towns in his honour. This the people flatly refused. In his opinion this constituted a rebellious and seditious act, and his officers took their cue from him. Instead of conciliation, coercion became the order of the day everywhere. A Provincial Conference, the most legitimate and constitutional of public meetings, was broken up by the threat of force, unoffending persons were assaulted and a great popular leader was illegally arrested and unlawfully punished. Religious processions were forbidden and broken up, the right of public meeting and public speech was withdrawn, and the whole Province was treated as if it were in a state of rebellion.

* * * * * * * *

If sedition means discontent, it is being most actively promoted by the action of a number of officials. Will the Government deal with the mischief that may arise or with the source of it ? The people of India are not likely to be seditious unless they are driven to it.

The Dadri case in the Bulandshahr district.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 22nd July, 1906.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd July, says:—The question put the other day by Sir Henry Cotton about the Dadri case reminds us that while questions are frequently asked about occurrences in other parts of India, rarely, if ever, is a question put about anything connected with the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. While open to correction, we should like to inquire whether a single question relating to these Provinces has been put in Parliament during the last ten years.

* * * * * * * *

We have read the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge of Aligarh in the Dadri case with much greater astonishment than that of the District Magistrate of Bulandshahr.

* * * * * * * *

In spite of the fact that the Additional Sessions Judge has modified the order of the Magistrate and even acquitted two of the prisoners, we take stronger exception to his judgment than to that of the Magistrate, because it is absolutely lacking in that balance which gives weight and importance to a judicial pronouncement. It is not only special pleading, but it theorises beyond the record—about the most dangerous thing which a Judge may permit himself to indulge in.

Why should it be assumed, as it seems to have been done throughout this case, that European soldiers are to be believed more than Indian villagers. To any impartial scrutiniser it is evident that there is no ground whatever for such an assumption. The soldiers have not hesitated to tell an untruth, when their statement might compromise them. For instance, they said they never approached the village within 600 yards, the limit prescribed by the military authorities being 500 yards. This statement was clearly disbelieved by the Magistrate.

* * * * * * * *

Reversing the facts and supposing two or three villagers had happened to kill one British soldier out of a party of fifty or hundred, we do not think it possible that the soldiers would have shown equal self-control.

* * * * * * * *

In weighing evidence, the Judge experiences no difficulty in attaching credence to that of the soldiers and disbelieving the villagers. He says, in language which is neither felicitous nor judicial :—"In addition to the customary rubbishy alibi evidence, the defence produced witnesses who give some sort of account of the death of Bhim." For a Sessions Judge to generalise on "the customary rubbishy alibi evidence" is a most unsafe thing. It shows that whenever there is a defence in which a plea of an alibi is set up, this Judge regards it with habitual suspicion, for that is what the words "customary" and "rubbishy" mean. We can only say that a Judge who has such settled notions is not judicial-minded.

But there is worse to follow. In another part of his judgment, the Judge says :—"Villagers are probably aware that soldiers are not supposed to shoot close to villages, and it has become increasingly notorious of recent years that villagers are ready (why, it is unnecessary for me to speculate,) to accept any flimsy pretext for interfering with British soldiers, where they imagine that they can do so with impunity. It seems likely that the villagers turned out to drive the soldiers away, not because the latter were doing or likely to do any harm, but simply because they were British soldiers, and, as such, fair game for violence." Where did the Judge find this astounding and most dangerous theory ? Is it anywhere in the record ? Or does it not show that the Judge has been thoroughly schooled and lessoned and drilled by the Pioneer ? If it were true that all villagers look upon British soldiers as fair game for violence, does the Judge understand what it would mean ? And if statistics were collected, how many instances of violence to soldiers (beyond mere allegations) could be cited against the actual killing of villagers ? There is no difficulty in realising the fact that this Judge has mistaken his vocation.

CITIZEN,
23rd July, 1906.

Two recent typical criminal cases under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the United Provinces quoted to show the need for the separation of the judicial and executive functions.

13. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd July, says :—So long as the judicial and the executive functions are not separated, the public are exposed to the risk of manifold evils arising from the anomalous position of the magistrates. As executive officers, they are subordinate to the Local Government, which does not and cannot always exercise effective control over them. From absence of check, they are apt to consider themselves absolutely independent and accountable to none for all that they may do. In their judicial capacity, theoretically they are subject to the High Court. But their pensions and promotions are not regulated by the High Court. Whatever be the quality of their work, so long as promotion by the rule of seniority continues, they are perfectly safe and can afford to defy the order of the High Court with impunity. If there is insubordination on the part of a native officer, he would either be 'sacked' or suspended, or, at any rate, his promotion would be stopped. In the case of a European officer, however, if any punishment at all is meted out to him, it takes the shape of a light censure. It is this difference of treatment which emboldens him to defy law and authority. It is not always that his vagaries are brought to the notice of the public or his superior officials. Even if they are, a mere record of censure is so absolutely disproportionate to the gravity of the offence that we are not quite sure if this will operate as a wholesome check for the future.

Two recent cases have been brought to our notice in which the District Magistrates of Saharanpur and Bijnor play a very prominent part. One Husaini Khan of Saharanpur was being proceeded with under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It appears that, during the pendency of the proceeding, he applied for bail in the Court below, but for some reason or other he did not succeed in procuring his release. He then approached Mr. Justice Richards with an application praying that he might be admitted to bail on lodging Rs. 1,000 cash. This application was granted, and the Court below was directed to release him on bail on his lodging Rs. 1,000 cash. Notwithstanding his Lordship's order, Mr. Bower, District Magistrate of Saharanpur, refused to admit Husaini Khan to bail without his furnishing other security. The act of Mr. Bower in setting at defiance the order of one of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court to which he is subordinate was not only illegal but grossly improper. Final order having been passed in his case by the Courts below, requiring Husaini Khan to furnish security, he applied for the revision of that order by the High Court. In the course of the argument, it was brought to Mr. Justice Richards' notice that Mr. Bower had disobeyed his order regarding bail. In the concluding part of the judgment, his Lordship made the following observation :—

"I wish to make a few remarks about a matter which occurred while the present application (case ?) was pending. This Court by an order on an application for bail directed that the applicant should be admitted to bail on lodging Rs. 1,000 cash. This was the form of bail expressly asked for by the application. Mr. Bower, the District Magistrate, most improperly and most illegally refused to admit the applicant to bail without his giving other security. It is impossible that Mr. Bower, if he had read the application for bail and the order of this Court together, could have been mistaken. He says that a cash bail is illegal in cases under section 110. This was not security under section 110. It was an ordinary application for bail. Mr. Bower acted with great impropriety in disobeying the order of this Court. I direct that a copy of this judgment be sent to him."

We should like to know what action the Local Government is going to take in this matter. It is no light affair for a magistrate to detain a person in prison in contravention of the order of the superior Court. Besides being contempt of Court, it is a serious infringement of the right of liberty of a citizen. A suspected man is as much entitled to the protection of his Majesty's laws as the most immaculate person under the sun. The detention of Husaini during the pendency of the case was absolutely unjustifiable. In the interest of the public, we are bound in duty to bring this case to the notice of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, and we sincerely hope it will not be passed over lightly.

The other case is that of Bakar Husain who under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was ordered by a magistrate 1st class to enter into recognisances to be of good behaviour for a year in the sum of rupees one hundred with two sureties for rupees one hundred each. The case was heard in appeal by Mr. C. E. Wild, District Magistrate of Bijnor, who dismissed the appeal. We are not in a position to state whether the case was rightly or wrongly decided. Sections 107 to 110 of the Code, enacted with the very best of intentions to ensure peace and to protect the commonwealth from the operations of bad characters, are in a variety of cases made the engines of police oppression. In a large number of cases, the proceedings of the courts below have been set aside by the High Court with very strong remarks on the modus operandi of the Police, as also on the evidence adduced by the prosecution, which have been swallowed by the courts below without the least scruple. In the present instance, if the magistrate has erred, we hope and trust the High Court, if approached by an application for revision, will right the wrong. There are, however, certain passages in the judgment of Mr. Wild which appear to us most objectionable. He opens his judgment with these remarks :—"The appellant is represented by two pleaders, which shows that either he has means or has control of funds." Did the fact of the accused person being represented by pleaders influence the decision of the court below ? The magistrate did not think it proper to go into the question as to whether or not the appellant was a man of substance, and the alternative expression that he has control of funds seems to us to be highly suggestive. In this country the education of the masses having been sadly neglected, people cannot manage their own cases, and if they don't engage pleaders, they would be quite at sea. Later on, in discussing the evidence for the accused the magistrate puts in the following delightful sentence : "It brought in Khalil-ur Rahman, who, although an editor, is a respectable man, and whose evidence is entitled to due weight." We are afraid Mr. Wild has done a great violence to his feelings in conceding to Maulvi Khalil-ur Rahman his respectability, notwithstanding the fact that he is the editor of a neswpaper. But all this is nothing as compared with his attitude to the Judges of the Hon'ble High Court, as would appear from the following extracts:—"Great stress is laid on a ruling of Burkitt Judge, in K.-E. vs. Ahmad Husain and another, Weekly Notes, February 8th, 1905, page 134. With reference to that ruling, I would observe that the report of the case is an unauthorised and unofficial one, and in particular the head note is presumably incorrect. It would, if pressed, make out that the learned Judge in question had overruled section 177 (3.)" Again, "In K.-E. vs. Pribhupal Singh, page 134, W. N., August 1898, which is the basis of subsequent rulings, two judges of the High Court held that the magistrate who has to decide on the fitness of sureties must do so upon evidence and not on reports. The learned judges appear to have evolved this rule for themselves, for there is nothing about it in the Criminal Procedure Code. However there it is, and so long as it stands it must be followed." Again, "The lower Court should follow the procedure indicated above, which not only fulfils the requirements of the law but also complies with the opinion of the High Court." Courts subordinate to the High Court are bound to follow the decisions of the honourable judges with the utmost loyalty and not in a grudging spirit, and then it is nothing short of gross impropriety on their part to make comments and criticisms upon the decisions of the honourable judges. The observations of Mr. Wild, to say the least, are most unbecoming. His Lordship Mr. Justice Burkitt has been referred to simply as "Burkitt Judge." The judgments of the Hon'ble High Court have been carped at as though they were illegal. Even the editor of the Weekly Notes has not been spared. All this shows that matters are out of joint, and they urgently call for correction. If the Hon'ble Judges and their decisions are treated with scant courtesy or with ridicule, this may give rise to deplorable results affecting the administration of justice in these provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd July, 1906.

Institution of a criminal suit by a native pleader against a British military officer at Murree.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd July, says:—The case instituted by Mr. Sewa Ram Singh, Pleader of Rawalpindi, against Lieutenant-Grenfell of the 9th Lancers for assault, will be watched with interest all over the country. Shortly stated, the facts of the case are that both Mr. Sewa Ram Singh and Lieutenant Grenfell were driving down from Murree to Rawalpindi in tongas, and, the horses of Mr. Sewa Ram Singh's tonga being of superior quality, his tonga got a-head of Lieutenent Grenfell's, and this so much provoked the Lieutenant, that, at a certain stage where the horses were to be changed, "the accused came running, with a stick in hand, along the road and assaulted the complainant." The stick dropping from the accused's hand, a hand to hand fight ensued, in the course of which the accused gave the complainant a black eye a scratch on the left ear which bled, and a scratch just below the left knee. He also pulled the complainant by the hair. Lieutenant Grenfell is also reported to have said that he was Badshah ka dost and Lat Sahib hamara, and to have indulged in similar other expressions of elegance. While awaiting further developments, we hope the attention of the military authorities will be drawn to this case.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th July, 1906.

Proceedings of a criminal suit brought by a native pleader against a British military officer at Murree.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th July, contains the following :—The criminal prosecution of Lieutenant F. O. Grenfell of the 9th Lancers, under sections $\frac{323}{500}$, 504, Indian Penal Code, by S. Sewa Ram Singh, B.A., LL.B., has excited considerably melancholy interest at Rawalpindi and Murree. At about 12 noon of the 17th instant the court of P. D. Agnew, Esq., District Magistrate at Murree, attracted a crowd of spectators—European and Indian—some British Military officers of high rank having also made their appearance there.

After making the usual preliminary enquiries as to the attendance of the parties and their counsel, the District Magistrate chose to take exception to the presence inside the court room of a barrister-at-law, who, said Mr. Agnew, must make room for the accused's friends, because he held brief for neither party. On protest, however, he was allowed to watch the proceedings.

The parties, the counsel, and the accused's friends having taken their seats, the proceedings commenced with a remark by the District Magistrate that the case might be tried as a warrant case. The learned counsel for the accused, however, urged that the proceedings as of a summons case ought to be followed. And on the complainant's counsel pointing out that the case could not but be tried as a warrant case, the accused's counsel impatiently said that the court nevertheless might treat it as a summons case and join as many as sixteen charges at a time. The court, however, overruled the contention, and ordered the trial to proceed as a warrant case.

Mr. A. W. Parker, Advocate, however begged leave of the court to make a few observations on behalf of the accused, and said that he substantially admitted the allegations in the complaint, and regretted that his client Lieutenant Grenfell should have given cause for such a complaint, that there could be pleaded scant justification for assault under the circumstances, and that he had advised his client to tender an unconditional apology to S. Sewa Ram Singh, complainant, and that in fact he had himself handed over Lieutenant Grenfell's written apology to the complainant's counsel the day before. The District Magistrate thereupon desired to see the apology; and Mr. Azíz Ahmad, barrister-at-law, advocate for the complainant, produced the same which was returned after perusal. Mr. Parker continued that he hoped that sufficient amends would be made to the complainant, and a compromise entered into and certified to court, provided only reasonable time were allowed for settling terms.

The learned counsel wound up by pointing out the fruitlessness of going on with the trial, and threatened to stand upon his client's right to be tried by a jury, should the complainant press all the charges.

The District Magistrate looked at Mr. Ahmad, who rose to speak, but, on Mr. Parker's suggesting that the complainant himself might be asked what he had to say to the proposal, S. Sewa Ram Singh mustered up courage to say that compromise was out of the question, for the assault complained of was too deliberate and degrading. He referred to certain words such as Talím yafta ironically used by the accused in the course of the assault with the sole purpose of insulting the complainant, and of holding him up to contempt and ridicule—Mr. Parker interrupted by saying that his client scarcely knew Urdu. S. Sewa Singh contradicted Mr. Parker's statement, adding further that the accused had scornfully reiterated the words and emphasised them by paraphrasing them as Talím paya hua. Lieutenant Grenfell was heard to mutter naively that he did not know the meaning of the phrase—(It is said that Lieutenant Grenfell has passed the Higher Standard Examination in Persian and Urdu).

Some discussion having ensued, Mr. Parker let fall from his lips a statement which perhaps had better been left unsaid. "Lieutenant Grenfell," he said, "mistook the complainant for a sais." This expression, while calling forth a titter from the European spectators, served but to add insult to injury to the admittedly aggrieved complainant.

Nevertheless the proposal for adjournment was agreed to without demur, and the case was postponed for the 3rd August next at Rawalpindi.

Ill-treatment of an under-trial prisoner in the lock-up at Gorakhpur.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th July, says:—The other day an under-trial prisoner at Gorakhpur piteously appealed to a Deputy Magistrate to be sent to the Jail instead of to the havalat, as he was unable to bear any further ill-treatment to which he was subjected there. The District Magistrate has taken up the matter and is making enquiries.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
18th July, 1906.

Unsatisfactory working of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901.

17. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th July, says that the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901, which was passed in the teeth of a strong and persistent public opposition, has led to a large increase in the number of ejectment and other kinds of suits, instead of diminishing them as was expected by Government. Under the old Act of 1881, Revenue Courts had to try only those ejectment and other cases which were contested; but according to the new Tenancy Act they have invariably to record the evidence of the patwari in all cases, whether contested or not, and to judicially decide them. This has largely increased the work of not only the courts, but also of the already overworked patwaris; and the result is that revenue cases are generally disposed of perfunctorily. It is therefore high time that Government took steps to diminish litigation between the landlord and tenant, and to establish good will between them. A considerable permanent increase should also be made in the cadre of the Provincial Service so as to enable it to cope satisfactorily with the increase in revenue cases.

A dakaiti case at Allahabad and the subordinate police.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th July, says:—The Court of Sessions at Allahabad was occupied the whole of the last week in the trial of the Kydganj dakaiti case, in which five persons had been committed for trial by the Joint Magistrate of Allahabad on the charges of dakaiti, house-breaking, &c. On Saturday, the 14th instant, the case was concluded, and the jury brought in a unanimous verdict of guilty as regards three of the prisoners; the other two being found not guilty by the jury were acquitted by the Judge. The three persons that were found guilty were sentenced, one to three years' rigorous imprisonment and two to two years each by the Sessions Judge on the 16th instant. This case had many peculiar features, and it is to be seen what departmental action is taken by the authorities as regards the police officers concerned, against whom several serious allegations were made by the complainant. We cannot but repeat that it was simply on account of the prompt action taken in the matter by Mr. Straight, the District Superintendent of Police, that the case was brought to a successful issue; the subordinate police officials did not consider the case to be a fit one for chalaning (prosecution). The way that the property was alleged to have been looted in a populous part of the city from a house in a public street, in the presence of a number of persons living close by, without any one daring to interfere, was, on the face of it, so preposterous a story that the Joint Magistrate himself was not inclined to take any immediate action in the matter, when pressed to do so by the complainant. But for the capture of some of the stolen property in the possession of one of the accused, a couple of days after the alleged dakaiti, while taking it away in a gunny bag in a covered ekka close to the Colonelganj police station, and for the prompt action taken by the District Superintendent of Police after the capture, the offence would have passed undetected and unpunished.

A Sub-Inspector of police accused of perjury in Allahabad.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th July, says:—A Police Sub-Inspector is undergoing trial in the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Allahabad, on charges of perjury and furnishing false information under sections 193 and 177 of the Indian Penal Code on the complaint of M. Ganga Sahai, Deputy Magistrate. During the last Muharram there was some friction between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Sarai Akil in the Allahabad district within the sub-divisional jurisdiction of M. Ganga Sahai. The accused police officer, who is a Muhammadan by religion, is alleged to have taken the part of the Muhammadans and to have made certain reports to the Sub-divisional officer, M. Ganga Sahai, which are alleged to be false and to have been made in the interest of the Muhammadan party. He was examined as a witness for the defence by one of the Muhammadan accused, a chaukidar subordinate of his, and in course of his statement he is alleged to have perjured himself. The trial is proceeding.

NASIM-I-AGRA,

An appeal to Sir James Digges LaTouche to have the town at Agra provided with a public library, a public hall and a raised reservoir for the storage of pipe water, before his retirement from the Lieutenant-Governor ship of the United Provinces.

20. The Nasím-i-Agra of the 19th July, says that a public library and a public hall are very much wanted at Agra. The people of Agra also generally suffer from insufficiency of the supply of pipe-water, and the only way in which this complaint can be satisfactorily removed is to construct an elevated reservoir for the storage of water, so that the supply of water therefrom, through the pipes, may be constant. The writer therefore requests Sir James Digges LaTouche to have these wants of the residents of Agra removed before His Honour retires.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th July, 1906.

Protest against the proposed removal of the meat shops from the town at Moradabad to some distance from it.

21. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 19th July, referring to the proposal of the local Municipal Board to remove the meat shops in the town at Moradabad and locate them in a market to be especially constructed for the purpose at some distance, strongly protests against the measure as quite uncalled for, and calculated to cause much annoyance to the Musalmans, whose population is larger than that of the Hindus. All the orders that were hitherto issued by the Municipal Board regarding the flagging of the meat shops, keeping them clean and hidden from the sight of passers-by by a thick screen, &c., have been strictly carried out and observed by meat-sellers, and hence there is no fair ground for the removal of the shops from the localities where they have been for hundreds of years. The fact of the matter is that the Hindu members who predominate on the Municipal Board raise the question of removing the meat shops every time a new District Magistrate is posted to Moradabad. Hitherto they have failed in their attempts; and the writer hopes that Mr. Harrison, the new District Magistrate, will also see the sinister motive of the Hindus, and reject the proposal. It will not certainly be fair to remove the meat shops just to please the Hindus without regard to the consequent dissatisfaction and inconvenience of the Muhammadan residents.

The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th July, also protesting against the proposal, observes that the Hindus who have not yet forgotten the past domination of Musalmans in India, bear ill-will towards them, and do not let slip an opportunity to injure them.

The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 16th July, says that the plea of sanitation on which the removal of the meat shops from Moradabad is urged, is quite groundless, the real object of the Hindus in seeking it being to wound the feelings of the Musalmans.

Adulteration of Indian sugar at Moradabad.

22. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 19th July, complains that pure India-made sugar has now become quite unavailable at Moradabad, the dealers in sugar freely adulerating the Indian article with foreign sugar, gram, flour, and treacle. The local authorities should see to the matter.

Appointment of three Europeans to temporary vacancies in the Indian Educational Service in Bengal.

23. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd July, says:—The appointment of three Europeans, one a newspaper correspondent, another connected with a commercial house, and the third, a private tutor to the (children of ?) Sir Andrew Fraser, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, to temporary vacancies in the Indian Educational Service in Bengal has formed the subject of several questions in the House of Commons. But there is nothing strange in the whole affair. The Indian Educational Service has of late been showing signs of a deterioration, and if all that is necessary to constitute a Professor for teaching Indian boys is a University degree, and nothing more, the time is not distant when people will rightly sigh for the days of a Tawney in Bengal, a Gough or Thibaut in the United Provinces, a Wordsworth in Bombay and a Duncan in Madras. It was men like these who taught the earlier generations of Indians in this country since the establishment of Universities, and it will be men like them and not boy Professors, with too much of the exclusiveness of the ruling class, who can truly enlighten the minds and mould the character of the youth of this country.

A suggestion to throw open the new Technical Class in the Engineering College at Roorkee to all students.

24. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálákankar), of the 22nd July, referring to the Local Government's decision to open a Technical Class in the Engineering College at Roorkee, supports the suggestion made in certain quarters that, instead of admitting only such students to the Technical class as are nominated by the District Boards, the admission thereto should be open, as is the case in the Victoria Institute at Bombay, to all students who themselves may be prepared to pay all their expenses. If this suggestion be adopted, it will enable many a promising student to receive preliminary technical instruction at Roorkee, and then to proceed to Western countries to complete their education.

Coming election of two Members for the Legislative Council of the United Provinces.

25. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th July, says:—The United Provinces seem to have established permanently a reputation for easy-going ways in public life. Within a few months, two of the seats in the Local Legislative Council will fall vacant, and we shall be surprised indeed if even the gentlest ripple disturbs the surface of public interests. It is taken as a matter of course that some men will go into the Council, and so long as some can afford to get in there without disturbing the ease of mind of the electorate, why should anybody worry himself about it? It is to this state of apathy that we have been reduced. And yet we think it is hardly a healthy or promising symptom of life. So far we are not aware of the possible candidates. We take it that the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya will have no opponent in the field, and we should indeed be glad to have him in the Council once again. There is no man in these Provinces who has had a better or larger record of public life than he, and those who know how public movements in these Provinces thrive can say how much they are due to his earnest zeal and public spirit. Then there is the Hon'ble Babu Sri Ram to represent the Lucknow group of municipalities. Neither quite a Congress man, nor quite one who is opposed to it, he has, in his own unobtrusive and conciliatory way, acquitted himself as well as it was possible for him to do. Will he have any opponent in the field? We fear not—though we see no reason why Lucknow should not be able to supply a few more names. We for our part believe that Rai Sri Ram himself will see that the best interests of the country demand that a chance should be given to others who may deserve. Monopolies of all kinds have in the long run a degenerating influence, and no feelings of delicacy ought to come in where public interests are at stake. Will Mr. Ganga Prasad Varma stand for the seat? We hope he may be allowed to prove his usefulness to the Province in the Council, as he has done out of it. As for our Muhammadan friends, we regret that those of them who ought to go to the Council, have, for one reason or another, not yet found entrance into its portals. There is, for instance, Mr. Abdul Majid, Barrister-at-law, who is one of the biggest zamindars in the Eastern Districts. Is there no chance for him? We can only be sorry that the Local Government has seldom shown a happy discretion in nominating Muhammadan gentlemen to seats in the Council. We refuse to believe that the Muhammadan community of these Provinces cannot supply men of brains; but perhaps the Government think that it is not convenient to have too many non-official members of brains in the Council.

ADVOCATE,

Mr. Morley, and Sir Bampfylde Fuller's adminstration of Eastern Bengal.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th July, quotes Mr. Morley's reply regarding the Sylhet execution case—"I regret to say that my view of these proceedings is that they fall short of the high and exact standard of official duty which the Indian Civil Service for so many generations has so notably maintained"—and says:—In simple language, Sir Bampfylde Fuller has failed to do his duty: so says Mr. Morley, the superior authority, to the Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal and Assam, a subordinate. This we take for a plain hint to Sir Bampfylde Fuller to either tender his resignation or submit to be recalled. But will it be so taken by the person affected by the remark? He seems to have developed such a unique indifference to the opinion of people, no matter whether his superior or his subordinate, that one cannot say what he is going to do with the stain put upon his official career. He has the additional misfortune of having up to date put on a record of failures in the new sphere of his activity as in the one he served previous to this. In the one he went counter to the land assessment regulations of the Government of India; in the other he waged a war against students, set Muhammadans against Hindus, and fought against the popular leaders. The way in which the cases in connection with the last affair has ended has been anything but complimentary to his method of handling popular grievances, and to his statesmanship in dealing with large questions The Indian public therefore wait with interest and anxiety for his next move.

Termination of the contempt of court case against Babu Surendra Nath, and the Anglo-Indian Press.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th July, says:—As we fully expected, the Anglo-Indian Press, with the exception of the Statesman, and one or two others, has not a word to say about the termination of the contempt case against Babu Surendra Nath Banerji in the High Court, or about the severe strictures passed upon the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge. Compare this conspiracy of silence with the jubilant howl set up in chorus when Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was first convicted by a Magistrate who knows little of law and less of procedure, and whose insolence was both unmannerly and cowardly, since he insulted a man who could not defend himself. This same Anglo-Indian Press frequently dilates on the shortcomings of the Indian Press and suggests improvements, but we should be sorry to see the Indian Press follow the example of the Anglo-Indian Press in its love of fair play. The manner in which the Anglo-Indian Press treats Indian movements and Indian leaders is hardly realised by our people, and until they do so they will never acquire a proper sense of self-respect. Whatever men in authority may say or do, we think they should not be placed on the same level as the irresponsible, ignorant and malicious Anglo-Indian Press, which presents the Anglo-Indian community as much worse than what it is in reality.

ADVOCATE,

A civil suit filed by Babu Surendra Nath and others claiming damages for the late dispersal of the Bengal Provincial Conference by the executive officials at Barisal.

28. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th July, says:—In instructing for the withdrawal of the case under the Police Act, the Government of Eastern Bengal was not so much desirous of saving Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji from unnecessary harassment, as of not giving an occasion to the popular party to prove that the proceedings of the Barisal officials were illegal. It was, however, necessary that the legality of the circular issued by Sir Fuller's Government should be tested, and an occasion for this will soon be forthcoming. On 14th July a suit for damages of the value of Rs. 10,500 was filed on behalf of Messrs. Surendra Nath Banerji, A. Rasul, Jatra Mohan Sen, Anath Bandhu Guha, Moti Lal Ghose, Ananda Chandra Roy, Aswini Kumar Dutt and Jotindra Nath Roy Chowdhury against Mr. Emerson and Mr. Kemp, in the 1st Subordinate Judge's Court of Barisal for their maliciously dispersing the Provincial Conference. This means prolonged litigation. Will Lord Minto allow it, or, by impartially reviewing the events and punishing those who were responsible for the outrage, make it unnecessary for the Bengali leaders to prove the illegality of the dispersal of the Conference?

Dispersal of a swadeshi meeting at Chandpur in Eastern Bengal.

29. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th July, says:—The position of a ruler who is always in danger of sedition and disaffection can hardly be enviable. There are some men who imagine dangers where there are none, and are always too ready to fight with shadows. Somewhat like this seems to be the misfortune of the members of the ruling class in Bengal. The acquittal of Mr. Banerji does not appear to conclude the farce which has been enacted in Bengal for some time past with such superb skill. There seems to be yet something to follow. The Sub-Divisional officer of Chandpur has now discovered that the seat of sedition has been shifted from Barisal to Chandpur, and that for a Surendra Nath, whom Mr. Emerson had to conquer, he has to conquer one Dr. Abdul Ghafúr who has been talking swadeshi and sedition. The doctor has been asked to hold his tongue—a course of conduct to which Mr. Sarvadhicary would take serious objection—and a meeting has been dispersed. It looks as if there is not only famine of food afflicting the people in those parts of the country, but also famine of commonsense affecting the official classes there.

ARYA MITRA,

Dispersal of a Muhammadan Swadeshi meeting at Chandpur in Eastern Bengal.

30. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th July, states that on the 24th June, several thousand Musalmans held a swadeshi meeting at Chandpur, at which one Dr. Abdul Ghafúr was to speak, but that the Sub-Divisional Officer caused this meeting to be dispersed by the Police, without any regard for the feelings of the Muhammadans. Will not the Musalmans yet believe that the selfish Englishmen are friends to nobody?

An appeal to Indians to promote swadeshism.

31. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 23rd July, publishes some Hindi verses, in which the writer appeals to Indians to use foreign articles no more, if they really wish to improve the condition of their country. An Indian should not accept and use a foreign article, even if it is offered him for nothing. It is only after enduring miseries for a long time, that Indians have now hit upon swadeshism as a certain means for recovering their lost prosperity, and there is little doubt that if they earnestly promote the cause of the swadeshi movement, every one of them becoming its true champion, they will soon be relieved of all their troubles. In conclusion, the writer prays that a day may come when the use of home made articles is advocated in every temple, mosque, church and street throughout the country.

Sir James Digges LaTouche's career in India.

32. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 19th July, enumerating the various posts which Sir James Digges LaTouche has held in India since he entered the Civil Service of this country in 1867, says that, throughout his whole career, His Honour has always maintained a courteous and amicable attitude towards the people. He has no doubt been always inclined, from the very commencement of his service, to specially promote the well being and prosperity of one particular community (Musalmans); but the other communities were not debarred from the blessings of his beneficent administration. In short, he will leave nothing but good memories behind, when he shortly leaves India, and the writer wishes him a happy voyage to England, and enjoyment of good health for many years to come.

Grant of a Kaisar-i-Hind Medal to Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk.

33. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th July, says that the recent grant of a Kaisar-i-Hind Medal to Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, far from giving any satisfaction to the Musalman community, has greatly disappointed his friends and admirers. The Nawab, who is a man of high position, deserved a good title in recognition of the services he has rendered both to his co-religionists and to Government. He has been preparing thousands of young promising Musalmans to serve Government as literary men and in other capacities. It is due to his influence and guidance that the millions of Musalmans, who once looked upon Government with distrust, have now become its most loyal subjects and staunch supporters. Some people call him a naturalist, infidel, Christian and what not, for his endeavours to spread English education and loyal sentiments among the Musalmans, and he patiently puts up with all this. But it is a pity that the Government should not, on its part, think fit even to confer a Knighthood on him.

Paper mills in India.

34. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th July, says:—There is a regular paper famine in Upper India. This is due to Government orders in the execution of which Indian Mills are engaged. They do not get time to manufacture paper for private presses. Hence many a journal which never used foreign-made paper has been forced against its will to use foreign paper. Many vernacular papers in Upper India have to use cheap coloured German paper or Badami paper. We are glad that the swadeshi spirit of the Government has brought about this result. We understand that the directors of the Upper India Paper Mill Company have a proposal under consideration to add a third machine. The Gwalior Mill has also been fully repaired and might soon be found in working order. Mirza Hairat, of the Curzon Gazette, Delhi, whose Islámia Printing Company has proved a great success, hopes to get together a capital of rupees two lakhs to start a paper mill. There is no question that there is room for a good up-to-date paper mill in these Provinces Under proper and cheap management it will pay. After driving away cheap German paper out of the country, it will be a pity indeed to allow it once more to enter our markets.

Mr. Haldane's new Army Scheme, and the military expenditure of India.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd July says:—What is sauce for the goose is not always sauce for the gander. England smarts under the burden of military expenditure for defence. The last Government made heaps of charges impelled by the jingo fever that was on. The Liberals feel it their duty to put some check upon this growth of the military burden which is out of all proportion to the expenditure in other departments. So Mr. Haldane has brought forward a scheme of reduction by which twenty thousand regulars will be asked to quit the colours. As he explained in his speech while introducing the scheme, no reductions would be made in the present strength of the army in India. This at once turned the reduction question into an academic subject for us. But no; Mr. Haldane means to give us some unrest in this matter. We are told by the military correspondent of the Telegraph that Mr. Haldane will charge India an additional sum on account of the cost of training recruits for drafts. Mr. Morley's view on partition as a settled fact, the War Minister's wish to add to the military burdens of India, Lord Elgin's inability to protect the rights of His Majesty's Indian subjects in the Colonies, show what we may expect from the present Ministry: small mercies in personal and sectional affairs, but stone for bread in matters affecting racial, and fundamentally administrative problems. Even Mr. Morley will teach us that there is little to choose between a Liberal and a Conservative in the British policy towards India.

Death of three men in an underground grain store at Deoband, district Saharanpur.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd July, says:—A correspondent writing from Deoband gives an account of an unfortunate occurrence in an underground grain store. A bania received some wheat on Thursday evening, and wishing to store it at once he opened his khatti and sent a man down to receive and store the grain. Many of these grain stores are very deep and some contain 700 or 800 maunds of grain. After the man had been sent down, nothing was heard of him, and another man went down to see what was the matter. He also was silent, and a third man went down. Again there was silence, and it was eventually discovered that all three men had been overpowered by the impure air in the khatti, and, when taken out, they were all dead.

Misbehaviour of a drunken British soldier at Jhansi.

38. A correspondent of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd July, says:—On the 13th instant a drunken soldier was going to the cantonment from the Sipree Bazar in Jhansi. As he could walk with difficulty he availed himself of a bullock-cart, which laden with salt was going to the city from the station. Seeing a soldier occupy the cart, the Bania, who owned the salt, thought it safer to get down. When the cart reached the junction of four roads, one leading to the city and another to the cantonment, the driver led the oxen towards the city, but the soldier asked him to go towards the cantonment. When the driver refused, the soldier beat him with a cane. Whereupon the driver got down, separated the oxen from the cart and fled away. The soldier then attempted to leave the cart and in his attempt fell down on the ground. The soldier then proceeded on foot to the cantonment, and when he reached Bairamji's Kothi he insulted an Indian lady and pushed her. It is to be regretted that neither the police nor the military officers take any notice of such drunken soldiers.

Discharge of the native travelling ticket checkers on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

40. A correspondent of the Jdsús (Agra), of the 21st July, referring to the reduction that is being carried on at present in the subordinate staff of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, complains that while the services of all the native travelling ticket checkers in the Moradabad district have been dispensed with, four or five Eurasian guards (whose posts have been abolished), have been appointed as travelling ticket checkers. This is certainly most unfair.

Reduction of Indian employes on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway

41. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th July, says :—In the reduction that is going on on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, it is only the low-paid Indian employés who have been made to suffer. So far the hair of not a single European or Eurasian employé has been injured. But even in thus turning Indians out no consideration is paid to the claims of individuals and their past services. Our attention has been drawn to the case of Babu Shambhu Dayal, one of the ticket checkers, brought under reduction. In dismissing him no regard was paid to his past services. He had been employed by the Traffic Superintendent some five years ago, and was promoted to his present appointment in 1905. If his services were not required as a ticket checker, Babu Shambhu Dayal ought to have been sent back to the office, and some new assistant junior to him told to go away. Simply because his last appointment was that of a ticket checker, no regard was paid to the length of his service. What wonder if such treatment adds to the discontent among the railway employés !

Cashiership of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line.

42. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd July, says :—We understand that Babu Kali Pado Mukerji, cashier of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, has resigned his appointment, and that arrangement for filling up his post is under consideration of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities. We are told that the Examiner, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Accounts, has offered this appointment to the cashier of the North-Western Railway, Lahore. We do not know this gentleman, but surely we have the strongest objection to such an arrangement. We think the proper course for the Examiner to follow is to invite applications for the appointment, and select the best candidate who is likely to personally supervise the work. The cashier's is an important office. He has to deal with a large number of Railway employés and we do not know if an absentee cashier is likely to meet the requirements.

ADVOCATE,

Cashiership of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

43. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th July, says :—The reasons why Babu Kali Pado Mukerji has been forced to resign the Cashiership of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are not creditable, and it was the duty of the Railway authorities, having regard to the services rendered by Babu Kalipado and his father, Babu Khetter Nath Mukerji, to have asked him to assign reasons why he was throwing up the appointment. He was led to take this step owing to the great insult offered to him a few days ago without sufficient cause. For some time there was a complaint that some coins presented by the Cashier's men at the Bank of Bengal turned out to be base or at times were underweighed. The Police were told that the Cashier was deliberately passing off base rupees on the Bank in the name of the Railway. A search warrant was obtained, and Babu Kalipado was subjected to the indignity of having a search made in his house. This search proved fruitless, and he in utter disgust sent in his resignation, which, we are told, without even the common courtesy of enquiring why he was giving up a remunerative appointment, was readily accepted by the Examiner. Is this the way to treat old servants who have faithfully served the Railway for two generations?

Strike of the Indian employes on the East Indian Railway.

44. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th July, referring to the strike of Indian employés on the East Indian Railway, says:—When all classes of the Indian staff have gone on strike, the situation is grave indeed. It has our sympathy for the simple reason that it is a significant protest against the serious injustice done to Indians by the East Indian Railway Administration by paying them much less than what is paid to Europeans and Eurasians for doing one and the same work, the proportion being much to the disadvantage of our own countrymen.

Complaint regarding the admission of outsiders in the office of the Inspector-General, Railway Mail Service, in supersession of the claims of those already employed there.

45. A correspondent of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd July, writes:—"Sir—The public are very much indebted to you for the able manner in which you always take up your pen to mitigate the hardships of poor clerks. You also exposed many official vagaries in the office of the Inspector-General, Railway Mail Service. I do not know why you have been silent in this respect for some time. Allow me to bring to the notice of the authorities and of your readers two cases of high-handedness in this office. Owing to the appointment of Mr. G. Prussia, as Officiating Superintendent, 5th grade, a Mr. J. W. Dawes, who was very lately transferred from the Clercial Establishment of the Agra and Oudh Secretariat, was appointed as officiating Stock Manager. Mr. Dawes was only in charge of the Stock Depot for a month or so. With effect from the 7th July 1906 he has been transferred to Burma as a Superintendent of Post Offices, being relieved by a Mr. M. A. Sullivan, a clerk of the Inspector-General's office. This latter gentleman was imported from Madras, when two appointments of Rs. 100 each were created with effect from February 1905. He had been formerly a clerk in the Army Clothing Agency at Alipur, and was once dismissed. He was, however, reappointed on a reduced pay, the understanding being that the period he was out of employ would not count. Finding the Military Department too hot for him, Mr. Sullivan invoked the aid of his friends in the Postal Department. Fortunately for him Mr. O'Brien is very sympathetic and offered him an appointment at once.

You will thus see how outsiders altogether innocent (sic) of office work are imported and rapidly rise, the legitimate claims of those already in office being overlooked. That the result of this system cannot but be harmful is evident.

INDIAN PEOPLE.
26th July, 1906.

Alleged intention of the Punjab Government to prosecute the Pánjabee of Lahore for sedition.

46. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th July, says:—The rumour that the Government of the Punjab contemplate starting a prosecution against our esteemed contemporary the Pánjabee has not yet been confirmed, and we hope that it is entirely groundless. In the interest of the Government and the people alike it is sincerely trusted that the Government will not give way to any scare, and act thoughtlessly in the matter. The machinery of law should not be put in motion by the Government against the Press, except when the circumstances are such that such a step is imperatively necessary. As for the Pánjabee, all we can say is that its strong and pungent language has never appeared to us to border upon anything objectionable, and there is no reason why the Punjab Government should be so thin-skinned as to resent strong criticism. For, after all, the Pánjabee, assuming that it has been guilty of causing bitterness of feeling between the Indian and European communities, has not been guilty of any crime of a different character to that which is daily committed with impunity by the Anglo-Indian papers some of which have made it their vocation to ridicule, malign and scurrilously abuse even the best of our countrymen and English friends. Do the Government think for a moment that the sort of language which has disfigured the pages of the Pioneer and the Englishman for sometime back whenever they have had to refer to some of our most prominent men and movements, is really bridging the gulf between the two communities? We do not say that, because some of the Anglo-Indian papers mistake their vocation and abuse their position, the Indian papers should follow suit. But what we urge is that the Government will be extremely ill-advised in making any invidious distinction in its treatment of the two.

Mohsin-ul-Mulk on the relations of Indian Musalmans with the Sultan of Turkey.

JASUS, 14th July, 1906.

1. The Jásús (Agra), of the 14th July, says that Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk lately wrote in the papers that Indian Musalmans have only religious sympathy with the Sultan of Turkey, and that, should a war break out between the British Government and a Muhammadan power, it would be the duty of Indian Musalmans to fight on the side of the Government against their own co-religionists. Was it due to any pressure from Government that the Nawab was led to pen such an article? This was surely downright sycophancy on the part of the Nawab, and it has given deep offence to the Musalmans in general.

Al Azíz (Agra), of the 28th July, says that though no Indian Musalmans consider the Sultan of Turkey to be their sovereign in any sense of the word, still as he is the protector of the sacred cities of Mecca and Medina and rules over crores of Musalmans in Turkey, Arabia and Asia Minor, he is entitled to be called the Khalifa of Musalmans. It is therefore absurd to say that Indian Musalmans can look on an expedition projected against Turkey with equanimity, and not even take the liberty to inform the British Government that a war between England and that country will cause them grief. A correspondent of the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 26th July, also takes the Nawab to task for the opinions he has expressed on the relations of Indian Musalmans with the Sultan, and calls him a flatterer and hypocrite.

The Sultan of Turkey and the Muhammadans of India.

OUDH AKHBAR, 30th July, 1906.

2. In the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 30th July, a Musalman correspondent from Sitapur points out that the Sultan of Turkey, though not a Kuraishi, should still be regarded as the Khalifa of Musalmans, inasmuch as he is the protector of the two sacred places, Mecca and Medina; that the fact of these two cities being in his dominions makes his position much more exalted than that of other Muhammadan sovereigns; and that Muhammadans would not have the same freedom in performing their pilgrimage as they have at present, should the sacred cities in question be under a Christian power. The writer also quotes passages from Arabic books to show that Musalmans are bound, by their religion, to give allegiance to God, the Prophet, and their ul-ul-amr, which according to some means the ruler, while others take it to imply the theologians. The writer considers the latter view to be correct.

The Muhammadans of India and Turkey.

AL BASHIR, 31st July, 1906.

3. Al Bashír (Etawah) of the 31st July, remarks that Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk has, in a number of articles, very correctly stated that the Muhammadans of India have religious sympathy with Turkey, and that those Musalmans, who hold a contrary view, are either servile sycophants, or are not at all in touch with Islam. But he has added very rightly also that Indian Muhammadans have no concern with Turkey as a political power, though he thinks it only natural for them to feel aggrieved at any injury done to the Turkish power. The Musalmans of India have special reasons to sympathise more with Turkey than with any other Muhammadan power. Sympathy for Turkey was excited in the hearts of the Musalmans of India for the first time when the late Sultan Abdul Aziz Khan was, during his visit to England, entertained at the India Office by the Secretary of State as representative of Indian Muhammadans, and was assured by him of their hearty goodwill for him. Again when war broke out between Russia and Turkey, the entire Anglo-Indian Press was unanimous in inducing the Muhammadans of India to sympathise with Turkey, and raise subscriptions in aid of the Turkish wounded in the war. Later on, Mr. Gladstone seemed to regard the extinction of Turkey as the mission of his life; and he began to excite Christians against Musalmans. Then the possession of Egypt by the English, the weakened state of Turkey at the conclusion of the Russo-Turkish war, the outbreak in Armenia, the rebellion in Crete, the war between Greece and Turkey, the general hostile attitude of the English press towards Turkey—all have tended to grieve Indian Musalmans. They moreover felt sorry to see that the Musalmans were oppressed in Russia, Java, Tunis and Algeria, by the various Powers concerned, but not the least sympathy was evinced by Christians for the oppressed. These circumstances led Indian Muhammadans to argue in their minds that, if European Christians could express their sympathy with their co-religionists in other countries, there was no reason why they should not sympathise with their Turkish co-religionists. But their loyalty ought not to be doubted if the Musalmans tell the Government that they would feel aggrieved in case England declared hostility against Turkey. They think they are entitled to point out that the friendship of Turkey is more beneficial to Government than that of France, Japan or Russia.

AL AZIZ,
28th July, 1906.

Egland and Turkey.

4. Al Aziz (Agra), of the 28th July, says that, if England does not think fit to change its present foreign policy, she will meet with disaster one day as Napoleon Bonaparte did in the field of Waterloo. The European Powers might have been able to solve the Eastern problem to their satisfaction thirty years ago; but it has now become too difficult a matter, for England or any other single Power. It is true that Turkey is not so great a power now as it was in times gone-by, but still she is formidable enough

UNION GAZETTE,
28th July, 1906.

An appeal to the Musalmans in India and in other countries to contribute towards the cost of repairing the Zubedah Canal in Arabia.

5. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th July, states that the Sultan of Turkey has formed a committee to raise subscriptions for putting in order the Zubedah Canal in Arabia, which is in a very dilapidated state, and calls upon the Musalmans of India and of other countries to contribute towards the repair of the canal which will be of much use to the pilgrims to Mecca.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th July, 1906.

The Anglo-Turkish dispute regarding Tabah.

6. The Agra Akhbár, of the 28th July, publishes some Urdu verses written by one Agha of Bulandshahr, in which he represents England as holding a dialogue with Turkey regarding their dispute about Tabah. England imperatively asks Turkey to withdraw her forces from Tabah in ten days, or she will punish her with her formidable guns. Turkey, making little of England's threats, says that one European power (Russia) has already had to eat humble pie in a contest with an Asiatic power (Japan), and England would do well not to court a similar disaster at the hands of another Asiatic power. It was therefore useless for England, notorious as she was for her deceitful practices, to intimidate Turkey. England was not at all a fit match for Turkey. The English have a shameful fashion among them, which no really civilized people would tolerate. They allow their wives to be openly in the company of other men in the Hyde Park.

AL BASHIR,
31st July,
1906.

Islam in Japan.

7. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 31st July, says that the inclination, which the Japanese are said to have shown for some time past to adopt Islam as their religion, has attracted considerable notice from many an English newspaper, for English statesmen apprehend therefrom a great political revolution calculated to make Japan the most powerful country in Asia, and to lessen the influence of European powers in the East. The best course, which the editor can suggest to British statesmen in the circumstances, is that they should forestall Japan by adopting Islam as their state religion, and thereby make Great Britain the greatest Power in the world. Happy indeed would be the day when King-Emperor Edward VII, becoming Musalman, came to be called the Khalifa of Musalmans and Commander of the Faithful, and Muhammadans began to pray for him in their khutba (congregation service). This religious change, if brought about in England, will lead the British sovereign to be loved and honoured, much more even than the Sultan of Turkey, by the Musalmans on the face of the earth.

ADVOCATE,
29th July, 1906.

Return of one Muhammad Raza Khan of Bareilly from Medina.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th July, says :—Muhammad Raza Khan of Bareilly, whose detention at Medina had caused some stir in the Muhammadans of Rohilkhand, has now returned to his home.

OUDH AKHBAR,
1st August, 1906.

A suggestion to the Czar to abdicate his throne in favour of King Edward VII.

9. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 1st August, referring to the present unsatisfactory state of things in Russia, observes that it would seem that the Czar is quite incapable of ruling over his people. His Majesty had better abdicate his throne in favour of King Edward VII of England, and retire to private life on a suitable pension; or at least lease out his empire to the British Government or some other Power for, say, twenty years, to establish peace and order therein, which he himself is unable to do.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th July, 1906.

The National Congress and the Musalmans in India.

10 The Áwáza-i Khalq (Benares), of 24th July, in an article, headed "the National Congress and the Musalmans in India," remarks that the views of the National Congress are at one with those of the Liberal party in power in England. Why should the Congress be regarded as an unlawful assembly? Are not its leaders such as enjoy social and political distinction in the eyes of the British Government? Are not its members men of whom India can be proud? Can any other assemblage boast of counting, amongst its members, such renowned persons as Mr. Bonnerjee, Mr. Banerjee, Mr. Bose, Mr. Rahmatullah Syani, Mr. Tyabji, Mr. Hume, Mr. Nourojee, Mr. Bradlaugh, Mr. D. A. Wacha, the late Maharaja of Durbhanga, Mr. Romesh Chandra Dutt and others? Have not the orations of the speakers in the Congress stirred the greatest men of Europe? Do not the greatest supporters of the British Government and leading Anglo-Indian papers, like the Pioneer and the Englishman, credit the utterances of Congressmen with being couched in most becoming and respectful language? Did not such respectable members of Parliament as Mr. Caine express regret at not being able to attend the sittings of the Congress? Then what a pity it is that there are some who consider that the Indian National Congress is not properly constituted, and that its aims are not commendable!

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th July, 1906.

A suggestion for the National Congress to adopt certain humorous resolutions at its next session.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th July, publishes a communication as follows:—SIR—I beg to propose that the following resolutions be passed at the next Indian National Congress, and hope you will be good enough to second them:—

I.—In order to promote administrative convenience, and remove, for all time, causes of bickering on the part of the various religious communities of India on account of the different treatment meted out to them by different Viceroys and Lieutenant-Governors, this Congress, concurring with the Bishop of Lucknow, prays that the work of the Christian missionaries in India may be accelerated by the Government of India converting all the people of India to the Christian religion. Thus the English Government will be established permanently in India.

II.—Whereas it is expedient to check the growth of litigation in India, this Congress recommends to the Government of India that the court-fee on all plaints may be raised, and that Magistrates and Judges may be allowed to charge the successful suitor a sum in payment of their salaries which they may be left free to fix for themselves, and further that all salaries paid to them from the Government Treasury be discontinued.

III.—In order to avoid famine expenditure and also to reduce the number of unemployed agitators, this Congress is of opinion that the Spartan law of old should be introduced into India, and that every native of India, who may be infirm or diseased or of braggart disposition, should, in the interests of humanity and peaceful government, be removed.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th July, 1906.

Wholesale exclusion of Indians from the Political Department in India.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th July, says:—In the scheme that was recently published for the reconstitution of the Political Department, no one could have failed to notice that of the one hundred and odd names on the list not one is that of an Indian. All appointments in the Political Department are held by either Civilians or Military officers, but not a single Indian member of the Civil Service is employed in the Political Department. It cannot for one moment be urged that Indian Civilians are not sufficiently qualified for the Political Department, and the only inference left open is that Indians are excluded as such, or because they are not sufficiently trusted. This is a state of things that ought to be brought to the notice of Mr. Morley by some member of Parliament. Why are all Indians, even when they obtain a very high place in the Indian Civil Service Examination, kept out of the Political Department? There is no Indian Political Resident, there is not even an Assistant who is an Indian, though Indian Civilians have held the offices of a member of the Board of Revenue and Commissioners of divisions. In all the Secretariat offices belonging to the Government of India and the Local Governments there is not a single Indian. It is clear that this invidious distinction and a disqualification that must be attributed to race cannot be perpetuated, and the sooner the Secretary of State intervenes the better for all concerned.

JASUS,
14th July, 1906.

Complaint against two revenue officers in Jaipur.

13. A correspondent of the Jásús (Agra), of the 14th July, complains that Hamid-ul-lah Khan and Pandit Jai Nath, who are high-placed revenue officers in Jaipur, practise much high-handedness and oppression on the people. They readily dismiss them, and ill-treat their subordinates very much.

JASUS,
28th July, 1906.

Jaipur.

14. The Jásús (Agra), of 28th July, deprecating the hostile attitude which Babu Sansar Chandar, the Prime Minister, is alleged to bear towards it, exhorts His Highness the Maharaja of Jaipur to have its issues regularly read out to him, so that he may learn from it how corruption and oppression are rife in his State. His Highness should take special notice of the misconduct of Bálji, Ram Nath, Chand Mal, Govind Singh, Bhim Singh and some other officials. Some of the officers who preside over the criminal courts in the State are not only men of no education, but they are also very old and have almost lost their eyesight, so that they have to be led to the bench. A correspondent of the same paper elsewhere bitterly complains of the tyranny and extortion of one Chaube Baijnath, the Munsarim of Dhaula Jagir, who pays rupees ten thousand per annum to Babu Sansar Chandar and Thakur Umrao Singh to allow him to do as he pleases. The Munsarim of Jagir Thathra also misbehaves himself in the same way.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th July, 1906.

Suicide committed by Mansab Ali, the District Magistrate, Rampur, accused of bribery, and the Minister.

15. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th July, says that Munshi Mansab Ali, District Magistrate of Rampur, finding that the charges of bribery brought against him were likely to be proved, committed suicide by taking opium on the 18th of July. It is strongly suspected that the Minister, who stayed for a long time with the deceased on the last day of his life, had a hand in the termination of his life by poison. The deceased was the right-hand of the Minister. It is also reported that the Minister has resigned making over the charge of his duties to the Chief Secretary. He sent to his home beforehand all that was worth taking away from Rampur.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
24th July, 1906.

Death of Mansab Ali, District Magistrate, Rampur.

16. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of 24th July, says that three different stories are current regarding the death of Mansab Ali, District Magistrate, in Rampur. According to one of these he committed suicide. The second story is that the Minister Abdul Ghafur, fearing some unpleasant disclosures in the course of the trial of Mansab Ali on the charge of bribery brought against him, caused his death by poison. The third story makes the Nawab of Rampur himself responsible for the death of Mansab Ali who knew all about the bad habits and misdeeds of His Highness. The Nawab is reported to have recently seen the Lieutenant-Governor, and to have allowed the Minister to proceed on leave for the present.

The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th July, suggests that a commision should be appointed to enquire into the administrative affairs of Rampur, and, referring to the improbability of Minister Abdul Ghafur, who has gone on leave at present, returning to his post, says that Government would do well to see that a man of respectable family and good character succeeds him.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th July, 1906.

Compulsory education in Baroda.

17. The Awáza-i Khalq (Benares) of the 24th July, says that the Government of Baroda has decided that, except in villages whose population is below 500, education will be compulsory. This will entail an additional expenditure of Rs. 3,25,007. Baroda is the first Native State that has resolved upon imparting free education to its subjects.

JASUS,
28th July, 1906.

The Minister in Jaora.

18. The Jásús (Agra), of 28th July, withdraws the complaint it published against the Kámdár (Minister) of the Jaora State in its issue of the 7th idem (vide article 4, on page 416 of the "Selections" of the United Provinces for 1906), observing that the information, which was communicated by an enemy of the Kámdár, was unfounded.

SAHIFA,
26th July, 1906.

Assault on an Indian pleader by a European military officer in Murree.

19. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of 26th July, referring to the assault by Lieutenant Grenfell on an Indian pleader in Murree, observes that the accused, in case he pleads guilty, will be let off with only a fine. Would similar punishment be meted out to an Indian behaving in like manner towards a European?

CITIZEN,
30th July, 1906.

Prosecution of Lieutenant Grenfell by Sewa Ram Singh, Vakil, for assault in Murree.

20. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 30th July, says:—With reference to the assault committed by Lieutenant Grenfell of the 9th Lancers on Sewa Ram Singh, pressure is being brought to bear on the complainant to compound the case. From the facts that have reached us it appears that no provocation was offered by the complainant. He was guilty of no wrong either of omission or of commission. The Murree road was not the private property either of the complainant or of the accused, and the former was quite within his rights to drive his tonga, even if it overtook that of the accused. But it was gall and wormwood for the Sahib who was no less a personage than "Badshah ka dost" and could say "Lat Sahib Hamara" to see the tonga of a kala admi outstrip his. This was followed by the use of the time honoured lathi, as an illustration in perspective of the truth of the above. The accused, while admitting the facts stated by the complaint, tries to take shelter under the plea that he mistook the complainant for a syce. This amounts to an aggravation. It adds insult to the injury. Even supposing that the complainant was a person of no better social position than a syce, was that a reason that he should receive a hammering at the hands of Lieutenant Grenfell, because the latter enjoys the friendship of our Gracious Sovereign, and has labelled the Viceroy with the ticket "reserved?" We have had enough of such cases. Although acts of individual violence, they make the Government unpopular, and we can have no patience with any fresh freak. We do not know if the accused has offered an apology. He has offered a pecuniary compensation to the complainant; and his General has asked the complainant's pleader to plead mercy for the accused. Ordinarily, in such a case, we should have recommended a compromise. If the accused is repentent, offers an unqualified apology and submits to pay a decent pecuniary compensation to the complainant, the matter ought not to be pushed any further. The accused has in his veins the thin blood of youth, and what has happened is the result of his rashness and folly. The complainant has however refused to compound the case. From the duty that he owes to the public, he may be justified in thinking that it is desirable that Lieutenant Grenfell should be made an example of. The purpose of punishment is primarily to act as a check on the future propensities of an accused person; but secondarily, its object is either disabling, retributive or reformative. The ruling race ought to know that the laws which govern this country do not admit of a distinction of colour. With the march of time, people are more and more becoming conscious of their rights, and are not prepared to put up with any lawlessness on the part of any person even though he be Badshah ka dost.

OUDH AKHBAR,
28th July, 1906.

Question of the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow.

21. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 28th July, says that representative meetings were held and resolutions passed at Kheri and Sitapur on 13th and 21st idem respectively; recommending that, if the amalgamation of the highest tribunal at Oudh with that for the province of Agra has become absolutely necessary, the combined High Court should be located at Lucknow.

ADVOCATE,
29th July, 1906.

Complaint regarding the Police and the Magistracy in India being generally averse to releasing accused on bail.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 29th July, says:—Of all classes of people in the world, offenders against law and order have the hardest lot to bear. The very fact that they are accused of having committed some misdeeds, deprives them of the sympathy of the majority. They thus become easy victims of the machinations of the police, and of wrong ideas of prestige on the part of magistrates. And in this country, where the magistrate is not unoften both judge and prosecutor, the fate of the under-trial prisoner is unfortunate to a degree. One very easy way for the police to harass an accused person is to refuse bail, and magistrates are in a body averse to granting bail easily. The complaint is not without an echo in England, though not in the aggravated form we find it here. As it is, the lynx eye of the Lord Chief Justice has not failed to notice its prevalence. In the course of his charge to the grand jury in a case at the Salisbury assizes, his Lordship is reported to have made the following remarks:—"The Magistrate did quite right in sending cases to the assizes when the prisoners were not on bail, for it was most important that in such cases the trial should take place as early as possible. The attention of the Home Secretary and the Lord Chancellor had recently been called to the fact that bail is not sufficiently granted when there is no great reason to suppose the prisoner would not appear to take his trial. As far as possible, bail should always be given, except in cases where there is a probability of the prisoner's escaping." We commend these very sensible observations to the notice of all trying Magistrates in India. Coming, as they do, from such a high authority, we hope they will carry weight in the proper place.

BHARAT JIWAN,
30th July, 1906.

Assault by a European on an Indian lady in a train between Bombay and Poona.

23. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 30th July, says that a young European, named Albert Dillon, has been convicted and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 200 for assaulting the wife of Professor Gajjar of Bombay, while she was travelling in a second class reserved compartment between Poona and Bombay. The sentence would be much severer if it were an assault by an Indian on a European lady. One does not know when even-handed justice will come to be meted out to Europeans and Indians, irrespective of creed or colour? The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th July, expresses similar views on the case.

Frequency of the crime of nose cutting in Azamgarh.

24. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 30th July, says:—Cutting off the nose of one's adversary has been a form of retaliation, which may claim for itself the sanctity of custom and prescription. This however has not found favour with the legislature, and people are not competent, in view of the criminal laws of British India, to emphasise their grievance on one's nose as the centre of gravity. Some of the butchers of Azamgarh, annoyed with the treatment they received at the hands of a Meat Inspector, thought that the best way of redressing their grievance was to remove the objectionable nose from the latter's face. They made an attempt but did not altogether succeed. They were prosecuted and punished. This however had no salutary effect on the other members of their profession. A certain number of them recently attacked the same Meat Inspector and cut off his nose. They have been convicted, and a decent sentence of imprisonment has been passed on them. Let us hope this will make them wiser. Another case is that of the Sarbaráhkár of the Dubori estate in the same district. He was unpopular with the ryots. He was assaulted by a goodly number of them, and after receiving a jolly good beating, his nose was removed clean from the stump. This was followed by the following incident. A certain person went into the presence of the Sub-Inspector of the neighbouring police station. He deposited the 'nose,' and, with swagger and bravado, described himself as the author of the tragedy. Upon being confronted with the Sarbaráhkár, the latter however refused to identify him. Times are sadly out of joint, and we hope the District Magistrate of Azamgarh will put down this form of lawlessness with a strong hand.

The Kotwal of Etawah firing at two chaukidars.

25. A correspondent, in the Jásús (Agra) of 14th July, states that the Kotwal of Etawah, while going his rounds at night, challenged two men who were sitting quietly at some distance, and would not answer. They had a lantern with them, which they concealed when challenged a second time. This led the Kotwal to take them for thieves, and he fired at them. The matter was reported forthwith to the Superintendent of Police who sent them at once to the hospital, and the shots were taken out of their bodies next day. It is alleged that there were some chaukidars with the Kotwal, while he himself was on horseback, so that, if he had suspected the men to be thieves, he could have had no difficulty in arresting them.

Comments on Mr. Morley's speech on the Indian Budget.

27. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 30th July, commenting on Mr. Morley's late speech on the Indian Budget in Parliament, says that, truly speaking, it is the tax on land that presses hard on the people, and not the salt tax as Mr. Morley supposes. As regards the appointment of a Commission to reform the Viceregal Legislative Council, Mr. Morley, does not definitely say what reform he seeks to introduce into that Council. It is a matter for congratulation that Mr. Morley does not consider the demands of the National Congress to be revolutionary in any way; but the question is whether he is prepared to grant any of them. Mere lip sympathy with the aspirations of Indians is useless: they should be accompanied by a desire to promote them. Mr. Morley remarked that it is necessary that "the Government of India must remain personal and English almost absolutely." Does this not mean that the West should ever remain the ruling power and the East slave? There are very few Indians who will be carried away by Mr. Morley's glowing language.

A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 31st July, is highly dissatisfied with Mr. Morley's refusal to have the salary of the Secretary of State for India placed on the Civil Service estimates. The writer also disapproves of the continuance of a personal Government in India, which Mr. Morley advocates. A personal Government can be useful only when the people have a sovereign of their own race. A republican form of Government will suit India much better than a personal Government.

The new drains at Benares.

28 A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of 29th July, says:—The new drains constructed with so much care and caution at Benares are still dormant and not worked, simply because the whole system is not completed as yet, and none can tell when it will be completed. But these new underground drains have in many instances created many difficulties, and danger to houses, streets and lanes, inasmuch as the old drains laid according to the requirements of the citizens and bygone circumstances, have, in many places, come in contact with the new ones which obstruct the smooth working of the old existing system of drains, with the result that many house holders find supreme difficulty in clearing their drains, which threaten the foundations of their houses. Some times the streets and lanes are choked up with foul drain water owing to the action of the old drains being hampered by the new ones; and this especially in the rainy season, becomes dangerous to houses. Had the new drainage system been completed, and their working commenced, this dangerous state of old underground drains would never have happened. What is still worse the underground water pipes, which are in contact with the old drains, become contaminated with filthy drain water. Serious complications have been created by the new underground drains, and habitations over them are threatened with downfall. The Municipal Board ought to take some prompt steps to remove this lurking danger in a manner that should ensure the safety of the houses which would otherwise surely be endangered seriously. To our thinking—and many agree with us—the new drainage system should be completed as soon as possible. Our city fathers are supremely indifferent to the fate of their houses, and if they remain callous and careless, they will have to pay dearly for their fault.

A complaint regarding the neglect of his duties by the halqabandi school teacher at Parichhatgarh, district Meerut.

29. The Bráhman Samáchár (Parichhatgarh, district Meerut), for March, received on the 27th July, complains that the teacher of the Government (halqabandi) school at Parichhatgarh, district Meerut, spends the greater part of his time in exorcising evil spirits from persons, so that he attends little to his school duties. He keeps a false register of the attendance of scholars. If a complaint is made regarding his neglect of duty, he gets some well-to-do men, whom he serves as an exorcist of devils, to testify to his being a hardworking teacher. If the authorities want to know the real state of things in the school, they should pay it a surprise visit. A private school, called Rám Pathshala, has newly been opened at Parichhatgarh, where good education is given, but the tuition fee is annas eight a month, so that boys of the poorer classes cannot go there; but well-to-do boys readily seek admission into this school, preferring to pay a higher fee here than pay half an anna a month in the other school, where no education worth the name is given.

MOHINI,

Rumoured resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

31. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 27th July, has received news that a rumour is current in Calcutta and other places in Bengal that Sir Bampfylde Fuller has sent in his resignation of the Lieutenant-Governorship of Eastern Bengal. The observations, which Mr. Morley lately made about Sir Bamfylde Fuller in connection with the Udai Patni execution case, amounted to declaring that His Honour was not fit to be a Lieutenant-Governor, and had brought the Indian Civil Service into discredit. Surely if a high-placed officer like Sir Bampfylde Fuller does not give up his appointment when such words, as Mr. Morley used have been uttered about him, there will hardly be an instance of greater shamelessness than this. It is therefore quite probable that Sir Bampfylde has resigned. It is further reported that the people in Bengal are very jubilant at Sir Bampfylde's resignation, holding harikirtans, and shouting Bande Mátaram in great glee.

The swadeshi movement has now spread all over the country, and there is a general tendency to use swadeshi articles everywhere. If this movement, for which the people have been preparing for the last 20 years, is kept up, the country will probably once more acquire that prosperity and wealth which led Sultan Mahmúd to invade her 23 times, and which brought about the accidental discovery of America by Columbus.

Growing demand for indigenous sugar in India.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 29th July, says:—In Upper India the demand for Indian-made sugar is growing greater and greater. In all big towns of the Punjab and the United Provinces everywhere one subject of talk in the bazars is how to drive away beetroot sugar from India. In Cawnpore over 30 per cent. people have taken a vow not to use beetroot sugar. Sweetmeat-vendors using foreign sugar had to close their shops. The halwais are putting up signboards declaring that if anybody should trace beetroot sugar in their shops, they would pay a voluntary fine of Rs. 101. Meetings on the subject were held in the last week in Lucknow. What is more reassuring is that the question of supply is also receiving attention. In Unao, a Cawnpore Marwari firm of Ramnath Baijnath is setting up a big sugar mill. In Cawnpore another Marwari is getting out up to date machinery. In Shahjahanpur the khansaries are again up and doing; the cultivators who had taken to poppy cultivation are again growing sugar-cane. In the Punjab two factories are being opened at Lyallpur and Peshawar respectively. The orthodox feeling against cheap sugar is very bitter. It can be driven away in no time if only there is constant supply, and if the cost of manufacture is reduced. The excessive cheapness of German sugar is due to the sudden fall in the demand.

An alarmist view of the agitation in Bengal, and the alleged need for keeping the British army in India at its present strength.

36. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th July, says:—A European, who claims to have considerable knowledge of the country, has written an amusing letter to the Pioneer, in which he declares to have seen the spectre of sedition and disloyalty stalking over the country. The Pioneer does not think there is anything serious enough to make the Government uneasy: indeed it dismisses the present agitation with supreme contempt. It opines, and here we must say that it is not altogether wrong, that revolutionists cannot be evolved out of such men as are leading the agitation in Bengal and elsewhere. But still the army must be kept at its present strength to preserve internal order. What splendid logic? But why should any one be logical when it costs nothing to be illogical? It seems the Russophobists are fast evolving into Bengalophobists, or else we should not hear, in these days, of the army being kept at its present strength to maintain order in the country. Fortunately there are not many instances of the Gurkhas being called out to maintain the internal order and peace of any town.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th July, 1906.

Alleged connection of the strike on the East Indian Railway with the anti-Bengal Partition agitation and the swadeshi movement.

37. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th July, says:—When the agitation against the Partition of Bengal was first started, the people of Bengal had no idea beyond resorting to the usual method of holding public meetings and petitioning the authorities against the proposed measure.

* * * * * * * *

By the time the partition had been actually accomplished, a change had come over the attitude of the people affected by the measure. Faith in the efficacy of protests and public meetings had disappeared. The boycott of foreign, and specially English goods had been suddenly introduced and accepted with all the enthusiasm produced by a new remedy. The market was affected; the importers of foreign goods were suddenly left with a large quantity of goods on their hands, for which they could find no market. New orders were not booked, and the manufacturers of Lancashire were threatened with considerable pecuniary loss. About this time the Manchester Chamber of Commerce went out of its way to advise the leaders of the agitation to abandon the boycott. This, if anything, helped to hearten the movement. The negative feature of the boycott movement was supplemented by the swadeshi movement, and industries were revived with marvellous rapidity.

Matters were made worse by the appointment of a singularly incapable man as the first Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal, who, instead of dealing with the situation judiciously; and tactfully, proceeded to suppress the public excitement with a high hand, which had the effect of exasperating the people still further. Reports of the most contradictory description were being circulated on all sides. Several Anglo-Indian papers went on repeating that the boycott movement had dismally failed and the agitation itself was dying out. Sir Bampfylde Fuller and his subordinates were congratulated on their strength and vigorous measures. Then came several sensational incidents, chief among which were those connected with the dispersal of the Provincial Conference at Barisal. And now it is evident that we are not in sight of the beginning of the end. Either the situation has never been properly grasped, or the truth cannot be ascertained on account of the garbled and misleading reports that are being given to the public.

During the last few months strikes have broken out in various parts of the country. In Calcutta the tramway men and printers struck work first, then there have been strikes in Bombay, in the Punjab and elsewhere. In Calcutta an attempt was made to establish a connection, we cannot say with what success, between the strikes and the boycott and swadeshi movements. But the most remarkable theories are being circulated in connection with the strikes on the East Indian Railway. A large number of employés on various sections of the line have struck work, and it is being definitely rumoured that the strike is being engineered by the partition agitators. The most sensational reports are being published of the work of the strikers. They are credited with aiming at paralysing the working of the railway, cutting off telegraph wires, threatening those who do not join them, and intimidating European railway officers. And all this is ascribed to the influence of the leaders of the partition agitation and the swadeshi movement.

We can easily understand that the chance of discrediting the partition agitators and representing them as a dangerous class has proved irresistible to our Anglo-Indian contemporaries.

* * * * * * * *

Assuming that the present strike is being organized by the swadeshi agitators, can the latter in that case be regarded as powerless and noisy demagogues who make more fuss than anything else? On the one hand we are being persistently told that the agitators represent no one, that they have no following, and that their criticisms should be treated with contempt. In the same breath we are informed that the army should be maintained at full strength, and that the agitators have organised an extensive strike along several hundred miles of railway. Even if we take it that the truth lies in the middle, it is perfectly clear that the leaders of the agitation are by no means to be despised and are not utterly powerless.

* * * * * * * *

There is so little foresight and judgment among those who are so anxious to involve and discredit the leaders of the partition agitation that it has never occurred to them that if the strike were really part of the agitation the Eastern Bengal Railway system, and not the East Indian, should have been first taken in hand. The Eastern Bengal State Railway runs through the districts most affected by the agitation, and it is worked entirely by Bengalis. A strike on that line would be complete and effective. Why was not that railway taken in hand first? Our conviction is that the leaders of the partition agitation have had nothing to do with the inception of the strike on the East Indian Railway.

The Calcutta High Court on Mr. Surendra Nath's prosecution at Barisal.

38. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 30th July, says:—Mr. Morley expressed a desire to know what view the tribunals of justice in this land would take of the doings of his Lieutenant in Eastern Bengal. In one case, at least, he can now see that the High Court of Calcutta has, in terse, cutting and contemptuous language, condemned the tactics of the authorities, and the tyranny and oppression that resulted from them. In acquitting Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji, the High Court of Calcutta has done only bare justice to British justice, ordinary common sense and fair play. It has exposed in a most ruthless manner the gross meddlesomeness of the executive, and its tampering with law, and the fundamental rights of individuals and public bodies. Mr. Emerson or Mr. Kemp or Sir Bampfylde Fuller, whoever it be, had no business to meddle, in the first place, with the arrangements of the leaders at Barisal. In the second place, having meddled with them, they had not sense or tact enough to manage their initial folly. After arresting Mr. Surendra Nath, for no reason, they dared to haul him up hurriedly before a too zealous and shallow Magistrate who sentenced him forthwith. The entire proceedings are a shame to the usual formalities that are observed even in the most barbarous land.

There was the High Court after a cunning Sessions Judge had made futile efforts to bolster up the injustice of the stupid executive, but what amount of trouble and expense Mr. Surendra Nath had to bear before he could appear before the High Court, and get justice done! Thanks, however, to the fair fame of British Justice: our people have still one solace, that of getting redress in one tribunal at least. If ever the High Courts in India came to be regarded as deteriorated and demoralised, that would be the worst day both for England and for India.

Larger employment of Musalmans in the public service in the United and other Provinces.

39. The Gauhar-i-Shahwár (Lucknow), for July, highly approving of the circular recently issued by the Government of Eastern Bengal, regarding the larger employment of Musalmans in Government service in that Province, observes that the Government of the United Provinces also would do well to take to appointing Musalmans in place of the "bare headed" (Bengalis) who swarm the public offices at present. The writer further expresses a wish that some educated Musalmans of these Provinces be sent for employment to other provinces where, owing to the want of sufficiently qualified Musalmans, almost all public appointments are held by Bengalis.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th July, 1906.

Distribution of Government appointments between Hindus and Musalmans during the régime of Sir James Digges LaTouche in the United Provinces.

40. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th July, publishes a letter as follows:—"SIR,—In your issue of the 8th July, I noticed, not without a deep sense of regret, 'Observer's' letter. I have nothing to say against the general ideas expressed about the new police arrangement, but it is in connection with a little sentence, perhaps dropped unconsciously, that I want to make a few remarks. I am alluding to the invidious distinction he has thought proper to make between Hindus and Muhammadans. It is, alas! chiefly due to such over-enthusiastic patriots that the two communities are always at daggers drawn with each other. He knows, at least let us hope so, as well as anybody else that no one cares two pins for his criticism, but the pernicious work will have been done all the same.

Taking the assertion on its merits, I am obliged to say that our observing friend has not had much to do with statistics. If he will only take the trouble of finding out how many places are filled up by Musalmans in the judicial department—a service almost monopolised by that community at one time—he will have no occasion to smart under the injustice done in the present case to any great extent.

And after such generous explosions we are expected to be united into one! The present is too thickly hidden in the darkness of selfishness and prejudice to let one cherish any such fond hope! "Pro-congress though a Musalman."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th July, 1906.

Distribution of Government appointments between Hindus and Muhammadans in the United Provinces during the régime of Sir James Digges LaTouche.

41. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th July, says:—"SIR,—I have seen the letter of a 'Pro-Congress though a Musalman' in your issue of the 19th July. The writer tries to make out that the Muhammadans, far from receiving Government patronage in excess of their dues, have a complaint in the matter, and alludes to the fewer number of Muhammadans in the judicial service. It is no doubt sound policy to be swallowing everything up to indigestion and yet keep complaining of starvation. It needs no effort to prove that the Muhammadans are the favourites of the present régime, and that their interests have been promoted right and left, regardless of their number and importance. To everybody having anything to do with a Government office this is plain: but if there is any doubt I shall be satisfied with a return showing the number of Musalmans in the ranks of Deputy Collectors, Tahsíldárs, Naib Tahsíldárs and in ministerial offices before the commencement of the present administration and to-day. Even in the judicial service, the number of Muhammadans, though fewer than the Hindus, is yet larger than what it was five years ago. As the head of the Local Government, and in order to remove misunderstanding for all time, Sir Antony MacDonnell laid down a ratio in which appointments should be distributed between Hindus and Muhammadans. Is that ratio, I ask, being observed?

The Hindus in their desire to maintain friendly relations with the Muhammadans have lost a good deal of ground, and it is time they should give up all false notions and stand up for their rights. It will be in the recollection of everybody what a hue and cry the Muhammadans raised against Sir Antony MacDonnell, and openly charged him with favouring the Hindus, although he did nothing more for them than bare justice. Why do, then, the Hindus hesitate to make their grievances known when their interests are being so ruthlessly sacrificed by Sir James Digges LaTouche? Hindu leaders, Hindu councillors and Hindu newspapers are witnessing the spectacle unmoved in order to humour the Muhammadans.

My friend says "it is, alas! chiefly due to these over-enthusiastic patriots that the two communities are always at daggers drawn with each other." This is indeed a sublime sentiment, and a good dodge to shut up the mouths of the aggrieved. I do not ask that the Muhammadans should be deprived of their share in Government service. I simply ask that both the communities should receive their fair share and nothing more. Why should one community receive more than it deserves at the cost of the other? I do not know what our Muhammadan brethren would have said if they had been to-day as badly treated as the Hindus. The Hindus have always been trying to be friendly to that community, but have never succeeded to any great extent. To the Government, the Muhammadans would run and say, "My Lord, we are not disloyal: it is the Hindus who agitate and question the justice of your actions." To the Hindus, they say "we are considering what line of action we should adopt," while all the time they are benefiting by cajoling the Government and the Hindus. They seldom assist the Hindus in the removal of the disabilities under which both the communities are labouring, but they do not hesitate to take advantage of the positions won by the Hindus. The Muhammadans still say that they have not joined the Congress; nevertheless keeping all self-respect aside they quietly step into the Legislative Councils. They proclaim from the housetops that they have no sympathy with the swadeshi movement, yet it is none but Muhammadan weavers who are growing rich at the cost of Lancashire. The Aligarh College has been founded with the donations of Hindu Chiefs and the public; but how many Muhammadans have sent donations to the Central Hindu College, Benares? What is, however, intolerable is that, though benefiting so largely through the Hindus, they make a show of putting the Hindus under especial obligation. I know of a Muhammadan swadeshi worker who thinks he is doing some eternal good to Hindus by co-operating with them in furthering swadeshi sales. Even my critic signs his nom de plume "Pro-Congress though a Musalman," as if he was making some sacrifice by declaring himself in favour of the Congress. No Hindu would choose that nom de plume, for it is meaningless, but Muhammadans would not scruple to do any absurd thing for the sake of hoodwinking some short-sighted officials. If the Government of India somehow begin to look with favour upon the Congress, the Muhammadans would to-morrow, by a stroke of magic, become ardent Congressists.

A suggestion for holding in India an annual celebration in honour of Ahmad Shah Abdali.

42. A correspondent of the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 24th July, does not understand why the Bengalis should hold an annual festival in honour of Shivaji, who was but a selfish, greedy, treacherous and murderous freebooter, and not celebrate Ahmad Shah Abdali who broke the power of the Marathas who had spread confusion and anarchy throughout the country. Besides, Ahmad Shah never practised deceit to throw his enemy off his guard. The writer at any rate, thinks that the Musalmans in India should inaugurate an annual celebration to commemorate Ahmad Shah from next year.

The Shivaji celebration.

43. A correspondent, in the Jásús (Agra), of 28th July, observes that no Muhammadan with a spark of national pride in him can join the Shivaji celebration. The Hindus, and more particularly the Bengalis, have made a serious mistake in starting this celebration at the present juncture. Shivaji attempted to extirpate the Muhammadans from India. The writer does not at the same time approve of the suggestion made by a correspondent in the Paisa Akhbar of Lahore in January last that the Musalmans should take to celebrating Ahmad Shah Abdali. The present need of India is that the Hindus and Musalmans should cultivate goodwill between them, and neither community should do anything that is calculated to wound the feelings of the other. The swadeshi movement which Hindus have started cannot successfully be carried on for any length of time, without the co-operation of Muhammadans.

Zamindars of the Agra Province invited by the Talukdars of Oudh to meet them at a meeting in Lucknow for discussing some question of common interest.

46. The obvious object of the meeting is innocent enough. The conscience of the Taluqdars of Lucknow has now been aroused, and they think they should so enlarge the scope of the British Indian Association as to take their unfortunate brethren of the bigger Province under its wings. Under ordinary circumstances the attempt might appear to have something of the creditable about it; but, having regard to the present Allahabad-Lucknow controversy, some awkward questions suggest themselves to one's mind. Why this sudden exuberance of feeling for the zamindars of the Agra Province? Is it not attempted to throw a bait to these zamindars? Is it not a clever manœuvre to get round the zamindars of this Province, and to get them to lend their support to the advocates of Lucknow in the matter of the High Court question? We shall be indeed happy if our fears prove to be unfounded.

The strike on the East Indian Railway.

48. The Jásús (Agra), of the 28th July, says that the native employés on the East Indian Railway have probably learnt to express dissatisfaction by strike from the European guards who lately refused to work for three days. The swadeshi movement was perhaps one of the exciting causes of this strike. The strike first began in the Sahebganj district, and then spread soon as far as Delhi; but the railway authorities took immediate steps to increase the salaries of their discontented subordinates. The Bengali employés however were not so easily satisfied, and they sent up a long representation containing some very absurd requests, circulating at the same time copies of the representation in other districts. Some of the employés in Delhi got this representation reprinted and submitted it with their signatures to the Agent of the line. This representation, by the way, contained nothing about the grievances of the native guards, probably because they were mostly Musalmans. Mr. Newton, the station master of Tundla, in a short speech pacified his subordinates, and thereby prevented them from going on strike. Similarly the subordinate staff at Agra refused to strike work under the salutary influence of the Station Master.

The writer concludes with the assurance that the Musalmans employés in the district of Delhi are prepared to work wherever the strike may be at its worst.

Strike on the East Indian Railway.

49. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th July, says:—When the Indian staff of the Loop Line of the East Indian Railway threatened a strike some days back, the Traffic Superintendent was all courtesy and kindness. He went up to the men, heard them patiently and promised full redress of their grievances. In the end the hopes held out proved mere words plentiful verbiage, and no action.

* * * * * * * *

The men then submitted a memorial to the General Traffic Manager, requesting him to frame rules as regards their pay, promotion, leave and arrangement of residential quarters, on the lines suggested by them. Failing this, they intimated that their resignation would follow on fourteen days' notice.

* * * * * * * *

A conference was arranged between the representatives of the aggrieved and the General Traffic Manager. The first meeting was held on Friday, the 20th instant. Mr. Huddleston met the delegates of a number of districts He was given a categorical list of the grievances of the Indian station staff. These were ten in number, and demanded:—(1) General increase of pay; (2) Promotion according to seniority and merit; (3) Station Masters should not be kept at non-lifting stations for more than five years; (4) Better application of leave rules; (5) Punishment should be inflicted by the District Traffic Superintendent after proper enquiry; (6) Matters regarding pay, promotions, etc., should be dealt with by the District Traffic Superintendent; (7) Stations with sidings should have three Assistant Station Masters, and those without sidings, two; (8) Removal of restriction in pass rules regarding the age of children of the staff; (9) Restoration of handling rate to the former rate of Rs. 3 per 1,000 mds.; (10) Protection against the ill-treatment of the Indian by the European and Eurasian Staff, which frequently occurs. The meeting concluded without coming to any conclusion on the first day.

Saturday was one of hard reckoning. The absence of Mr. Dring, the Agent, created some misgiving in the minds of the delegates, and Mr. Huddleston was in a mood that seemed anything but friendly. The discussion hung round the question of pay. The authorities promised some concessions. Then Mr. Huddleston asked one of the delegates if he was satisfied with the proposed arrangements and increase granted. The representative felt he could not give any definite reply without consulting his clients. Similar questions were then addressed to another delegate who appeared in no way satisfied. He assured the General Traffic Manager that he could not guarantee the acceptance of the terms offered, as he himself felt they all fell far short of the demands made. Mr. Huddleston could keep his pent-up wrath no more. He burst into anger and informed the representative last addressed that his services would not be required, and that he would at once be given a month's pay in lieu of a month's notice. Unhappily for all concerned, the petulence shown from a quarter wherefrom better things could be expected had an effect quite the reverse of what was wished for. The delegates did not cower before the General Traffic Manager, but firmly though courteously told him that as all had come in a representative capacity the dismissal of one meant dismissal for all. They then dispersed. The sequel—a strike before its time, precipitated by the tactless way of Mr. Huddleston's dealings in a delicate situation.

* * * * * * * *

The authorities and their henchmen, the Anglo-Indian press, have at once raised the cry of Babu agitation behind the strike, and for the very best of reasons. They want to secure the big posts for Europeans and Eurasians, but have the responsible work done by Indians on very low wages, irrespective of the fact that prices of articles and ill-will of Anglo-Indians towards Indians have gone up, and the Indian staff, particularly the Bengali employés, are ill-disposed to putting up with both disabilities, unless they make up their minds to "die in harness." And the railway administration in India is no philanthropic or patriotic work. The authorities want to take more than the day's work from the Indian staff, and in an inverse ratio to their wages, and to pat those of their own flesh and blood at the expense of the Indian employés, and expect nothing but praise from all sections in this country for this beautiful arrangement. And as the Indian employés do not agree to this operation to bring about their death by inches, and educated Indians feel it their duty to aid their less fortunate countrymen in getting only their dues, they are called names, howled at as agitators, mischief-mongers, and what not.

We can assure all railways that any hope of manning their offices and lines purely with Europeans and Eurasians is but moonshine. Such a course would raise the cost of maintenance, and seriously affect efficiency. They cannot do without Indians in India positively. Let them not run against a stone wall, bump against it and fall flat on the ground.

BHARAT JIWAN,
30th July, 1906.

The East Indian Railway strike.

50. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 30th July, commenting on the East Indian Railway strike, remarks that the Railway authorities concerned do not yet seem disposed to remove the causes that have led to it. They are labouring under the impression that it will be possible for them to carry on business without the aid of Indians. As the strikers are purely Indians and chiefly Bengalis, the question is assuming a racial character. The Directors of the Railway are probably not in possession of full and true facts. The Pioneer, the Englishman and other Anglo-Indian papers are trying to minimise matters by asserting that the strike has not in any way affected the proper working of the line; but the fact is that confusion and mismanagement prevail everywhere: passengers do not get tickets in time, or are given wrong tickets, there have been hair-breadth escapes from collisions, and so on. It is highly expedient that the Directors should take early steps to put an end to the present state of things. Europeans cannot be expected to work as efficiently as Indian employés.

SANSAR METRA,
31st July, 1906.

The East Indian Railway strike.

51. The Sansár Metra (Allahabad), of the 31st July, enumerating the various difficulties that Eurasian and European booking clerks are said to find in issuing tickets to passengers, and the inconveniences to which travellers are put owing to the inexperience of the former, remarks that it is almost impossible that the railway authorities should be able to carry on work without the help of Indians; and winds up a lengthy article with the suggestion that the grievances of the Indian strikers should be attended to at an early date.

JASUS,
August, 1906.

Strike on the East Indian Railway.

52. The Jásús (Gahmar, district Ghazipur), for August, referring to the strike of Indian employés on the East Indian Railway, says that these men must be very much discontented indeed, otherwise they would not have taken to this extreme course to express their dissatisfaction. It is to be hoped that the Railway Agent will not allow the strike to go on long, so that the line may continue to enjoy the good name it has earned by its past excellent work.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th July, 1906.

Need for a railway line between Unao and Madhoganj in Oudh.

53. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 26th July, urges the need for the construction of a railway line between Unao and Madhoganj in Oudh. The part of the country through which the proposed line will pass is very fertile, and has several large grain marts, so that the line, if constructed, will bring in a large income to Government, and afford the people much convenience in travelling. Government would therefore do well to extend to Madhoganj the recently sanctioned Rae Bareli-Unao line.

ADVOCATE,
29th July, 1906.

Cashiership of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

54. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th July, says:—There has been a slight inaccuracy in our note about the cashier, Oudh, and Rohilkhand Railway. The police had not searched his house, but only his office and staff. The Examiner has however issued notice, and has invited applications for the cashier's appointment.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
24th July, 1906.

Indiscriminate dismissal of employes on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line.

55. A correspondent in the Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of 24th July, says that the Deputy Traffic Superintendent on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line is making wholesale dismissals of subordinate employés without sufficient reason. He has altogether done away with the posts of travelling ticket checkers, without considering the evils that would ensue from such a course. He has also dismissed a large number of the clerks in his office, and work is accumulating. His Office Superintendent, who is a Bengali of over 55 years of age, is very rough and ill-tempered in his treatment of up-country men, though he is very well behaved towards his Bengali brethren. (Some other papers also complain of the wholesale dismissals of men on the line).

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
24th July, 1906.

The contractors for the supply of Indian articles of food at the stations of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

56. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 24th July, says that the complaints which the Naiyar-i-Ázam has, for some time been making regarding the supply of Indian articles of food at the stations of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway by the agents of Chunni Lal and Muhammad Husain, the contractors, are wholly unfounded, and actuated by ulterior motives.

CITIZEN,
30th July, 1906.

Certain grievances of the clerks in the office of the District Traffic Superintendent, Allahabad.

57. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 30th July, says :—On Friday the clerks in the office of the District Traffic Superintendent, Allahabad, besieged Mr. Strachey, the District Traffic Superintendent, and represented their grievances with respect to hard work and starvation pay, protesting against the practice of superseding the claims of deserving men, for which they held their present Chief Clerk, Babu Khetter Nath Chakerburty, mainly responsible. Mr. Strachey had the wisdom to adopt a conciliatory tone, and promised that an increase would be granted to each clerk as soon as the strike was over. The strikers all along the line continue to be the masters of the situation, and are quite sanguine as to the result of the contest. Reports are being circulated through Anglo-Indian papers, containing a garbled account of the affair, with a view to discourage the strikers. But the latter are firm to the dismay of the railway.

MOHINI,
31st July, 1906.

Complaint regarding the excessive overcrowding of the special trains run on the occasion of the late Kailásh fair in the Agra district.

58. The Mohini (Kanauj), of 31st July, complains that the special trains carrying passengers to the late Kailásh fair, held at the distance of two miles from Sikandra in the Agra district, were unusually overcrowded, as many as 26 passengers being huddled together in a single compartment. Surely the railway authorities should have taken steps to provide sufficient carriages against the expected rush of passengers on the occasion.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th July, 1906.

Five fanatic Kabulis at Lucknow.

59. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 26th July, states, on the authority of a local correspondent, that a few days ago five Kabulis appeared in Muhalla Narahi at Lucknow, and gave out to the Sunni residents that they were, by the order of the Sultan of Turkey, making a tour in India with a view to compelling all Sunnis to clip their moustaches, and regularly say their prayers in mosques. They further asserted that they held a document authorising them to do so, signed by all the Musalman rulers as well as by Emperor Edward VII. The Kabulis, began to seize Musalmans on the public roads, and to clip their hair and their moustache, whipping into compliance those who did not willingly submit to this operation. They even dragged some Musalmans out of their houses, with the result that their action has created quite a panic among the Sunni Musalmans. The Kabulis are at present staying in the Sadar Bazar or Aminabad. The police do not appear to have taken any action yet against the fanatics.

RAHBAR,
28th July, 1906.

Alleged stoppage of the meetings of the Dharma Sabha at Moradabad.

60. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th July, referring to a communication that recently appeared in the Amrit Bazar Patrika (Calcutta), complaining that the district authorities had stopped the meetings of the local Dharma Sabha at Moradabad, says that the complaint is quite unfounded. In the course of his lecture one day a member of the Sabha remarked that men like Gokhale, Tilak and Surendra Nath were fit to be worshipped, to which some members took objection; and then one of the latter probably made some complaint to the police authorities on the subject. The result was that the Assistant Superintendent of Police paid a visit to the temple where the Sabha held its meetings, and made enquiries as to the name of the Sabha, its object and the name of its Secretary. Beyond this he did nothing. As the temple was not the property of the Sabha the owner has since then disallowed the latter to hold its meetings there any more.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

AGRA AKHBAR, 28th July, 1906.

Suggestion to the editors of native newspapers for organising a committee to exercise check on the conduct of their papers.

61. The Agra Akhbár, of 28th July, expresses regret that certain native newspapers should be so extravagant and reckless in their criticisms of Government measures as to bring the entire native press into bad odour with the Anglo-Indian press and Anglo-Indians. The writer is afraid lest the papers whose tone is moderate should come to grief along with those indulging in rabid denunciations, and suggests that a committee should be organised by the members of the native press, whose duty should be to exercise some check on the conduct of their papers.

The teaching of Koran in Algeria and Aligarh.

AL BAYAN,
22nd July, 1906.

1. THE Al Bayán (Lucknow), of 22nd July, remarks that the Government of France has abolished the teaching of Koran in the Muhammadan schools of Algeria, and has closed certain mosques where the Koran used to be taught in particular. It has been announced officially, that schools are to be opened in every city for imparting education in French and Arabic. The editor sees nothing strange in this information, as rumours are afloat in India likewise that Government wishes to have the English and Arabic languages taught in the Aligarh College under its supervision, so that such of the schools where religious education is given to Muhammadans may cease to exist. He thinks however that this rumour is unfounded.

Prohibition of teaching the Koran in the schools and mosques in Algeria.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st August, 1906.

2. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st August, observing that though various nations have long been doing all in their power to injure Islām, the latter has continued to hold its own, and to benefit mankind by its moral teachings. France has lately prohibited the teaching of the Koran in the Muhammadan schools and mosques of Algeria. This is surely due to religious prejudice and hatred. The Sultan of Turkey, on the other hand, allows complete religious toleration to Christians in his dominions. God cannot allow His Muhammadan subjects to be long oppressed by France and other countries in this way; and He is sure to soon visit with His wrath those who are always devising means to prevent the spread of the holy Muhammadan religion.

The Sultan of Turkey, and the Musalmans.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st August, 1906.

3. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-ám (Agra), of the 1st August, who puts his thoughts in the shape of a dream, announces that the present Sultan of Turkey is a Qutub who, according to the views of Muhammadan theologians, dispenses good and evil to all created beings according to their deserts, in consonance with the will of the Almighty. Such a Qutub comes into existence from time to time according to the requirements of the world. The writer is glad to find that the Sultan of Turkey is the selected Qutub at present, and thinks that it is on this account that the conduct of all Musalmans is at present characterised by a zeal for bettering their condition, and by a strong faith in the Sultan.

Advice to politicians.

PUBLIC NEWS,
for July, 1906.

4. The Public News (Meerut), for July, deprecates the attitude of certain agitators, who find fault with the British administration whether rightly or wrongly, and instil in the minds of youths zeal and a feeling of hero worship by impressing on them the deeds of Garibaldi, and Sivaji. It suggests that the actions of Government should not be scrutinized with an eye of suspicion, and cites the case of a certain constable in Meerut who was noticed making inquiries about the newspapers that a certain gentleman there received.

Indians in the Transvaal.

AL BASHIR,
24th July, 1906.

5. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 24th July, remarks that England holds out threats of war if any of its subjects are oppressed in Arabia or Turkey. The same attitude is adopted in case of the oppression of Indian subjects in Persia, Arabia, or Afghanistan, but the Government of India finds itself helpless in the case of oppression of its subjects in British colonies. This is what happened in respect of the Transvaal. But now that the Transvaal is under the British Government, Mr. Morley lately made a statement in Parliament that the Indians in the Transvaal will receive better treatment, and that he will assist the Government of India in the matter.

The attitude of English representatives towards Egyptian newspapers.

AL BASHIR,
24th July, 1906.

6. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 24th July, remarks that the publication of two weekly journals in Egypt has been stopped, owing to their containing certain inflammatory cartoons in connection with the Tanta affairs. Certain philanthropists in England deprecated the action of the representatives of their country in Egypt; but their voice proved too weak to produce any beneficial results.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
31st July 1906.

Indian element in the India Council in England.

7. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 31st July, hails with delight the news regarding the proposed appointment of a distinguished Indian in the India Council in England, and announces that Mr. R. C. Dutt is the first Indian on whom this honour is to be conferred.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
1st August, 1906.

The representative element in the Legislative Council.

8. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 1st August, referring to Mr. Morley's remark in his Indian Budget speech relating to the extension of the representative element in the Legislative Council, points out the desirability of appointing Hindu and Muhammadan representatives in proportion to the population of each community, leaving the low class Hindus like Chamars and Kolis out of consideration, inasmuch as they are Hindus only nominally; and are connected almost equally with both sections of Indians. This will give a proportion of two Hindus to one Muhammadan.

AL BASHIR,
7th August, 1906.

The Muhammadan element in the Congress.

9. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 7th August, remarking on the speeches of Mr. Gokhale and Mr. Naoroji criticising the speech of Shaikh Abdul Kadir delivered on the subject in the Indian Association, expresses dissent with their remarks regarding the equal distribution of high posts between Hindus and Muhammadans. It remarks that these gentlemen clamoured only recently over the somewhat unequal distribution of posts held by Tahsildars and Deputy Collectors, the Muhammadan element slightly preponderating at the time. He also reminds us of the tyrannical sway of Sir Antony MacDonnell who was extolled for unjustly curtailing the number of Muhammadan Tahsildars and Deputy Collectors and conferring the vacancies thus created on Hindus.

The outcry raised over the partition question in Bengal is the result of similar ideas.

HINDUSTANI,
8th August, 1906.

Muhammadans and the Congress.

10. The Hindustáni (Lucknow) of 8th August, adverting to Shaikh Abdul Qadir's speech in the London Indian Association, remarks that the speeches of Mr. Justice Amir Ali and Mr. Theodore Morrison are not less interesting than that of Mr. Gokhale.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th July, 1906.

The tomb of Bahadur Shah at Rangoon, and the Government of Burma.

11. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 8th July, received on the 2nd August, quotes some passages from the correspondence that passed between one Abdus Salam Rafiqi and the Government of Burma regarding the question of repairing the tomb of Bahadur Shah the last Delhi king buried at Rangoon, and regrets to find that the Government has not only refused to repair the tomb at its own cost, but has also declined to permit any private gentleman to do the same. The late Lieutenant-Governor held out some hopes in the matter to Mr. Rafiqi, but his successor is unwilling to consider the claims of Bahadur Shah, either as a king of Delhi or as a great Urdu poet. The late Amir Abdul Rahman Khan of Kabul has noted in his autobiography that no reliance should be placed on the British Government, for its policy changes with the change of its rulers. The question of repairs to Bahadur Shah's tomb is a fair illustration of this remark.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
28th July, 1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

12. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of 28th July, does not approve of the invitation to the Amir of Kabul, on the ground that Eastern Bengal is at present famine stricken, and India will be charged with the expense incurred by his visit, as has been the case on the occasion of other royal visits to India and of the visit of the Sultan of Turkey to England.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st August, 1906.

The proposed visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

13. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st August, with reference to the proposed visit of the Amir of Kabul to India remarks that his subjects may not like the idea of his becoming too intimate with the Government of India, and he himself may not like to come to India leaving Kabul in the hands of his brother, Nasrulla, who has recently returned from England after receiving some training in politics. The writer is afraid that India will be burdened with the expenditure to be incurred on the Amir's visit, as has been the case on previous occasions.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
31st July, 1906.

The state of affairs at Rampur.

14. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 31st July, states that now that Maulvi Abdul Ghafur Khan has left Rampur, stories of all sorts are afloat. Maulvi Abdul Ghafur Khan is said to have been under the impression that the Nawab dared not interfere with his doings. Some say that he got a share in the profits from the excise lessees, and from purchasers of villages sold by auction; some allege that he took a large amount of money on the pretext of making a search for Zia-ul-Haq the pamphleteer, and of securing his arrest; others again allege that the quantity of timber sent out of the state by the minister and by Mansab Ali was so large that a sum of seven hundred rupees had to be paid by them on account of octroi duty.

On the other hand Abdul Ghafur's party alleges that though the Nawab kept up appearances, yet such things as were done to bring the minister into odium happened with the knowledge and connivance of the Nawab.

The death of Mansab Ali is said to be due to suicide by poison committed according to some, in consultation with the minister; others said that it had been encompassed by the Nawab's party to save the Nawab from exposure. There is yet another version, that he died of heart disease.

It is alleged that Muti Ahmad is in trouble owing to his friendship with the late Mansab Ali, and the minister, and that Haider Husain's misfortunes are the result of his endeavours in securing the arrest of Zia-ul-Haq the pamphleteer.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th August 1906.

Rampur.

15. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of 5th August, points out that the minister has purchased a village worth eighty thousand rupees in the Moradabad district, and built a house which has cost several lakhs in Meerut. It suggests that considering that the sum total of his pay ever since Abdul Ghafur began as a constable cannot cover this amount, the village should be confiscated and made over to the Rampur State.

ADVOCATE,
9th August, 1906.

The Rampur Ministry.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th August, says:—However Maulvi Abdul Ghafur might try to conceal the fact, the vernacular papers of Mosadabad insist that Mansab Ali is one of his near relations, and that his departure from the State is not simply due to his illness. Be that as it may, if the Local Government be again asked to lend the services of one of its officers, it should take greater care in making the selection, and see that the man so selected is of decent education. Now that the pamphleteer Zia-ul-Haq is under arrest and his trial is to follow soon, the Local Government should take measures to enquire if there was any truth in the allegations made by him. Such an enquiry is necessary, not only in the interests of the Nawab of Rampur, but in that of the Government also. Zia-ul-Haq has moved the Government of India, to transfer his case from the Courts at Rampur to the British Courts. But it seems no orders have been passed on the application.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd August, 1906.

The Indian People on Residency Surgeon's humorous inducement of the married women at Udaipur to evacuate their houses during the prevalence of the plague.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd August, says:—The following paragraph appears in the report on sanitation, dispensaries and jails in Rajputana: 'A propos of giving advice, the Residency Surgeon at Udaipur laughingly promised the married women of the capital that they would all have male children next year if they vacated their houses and went into camp for two months until the plague subsided, and their houses were disinfected. The women were delighted at the prospect held out to them, and said they would go into camp every year on these terms. I visited the camps several times and found them perfectly contented and happy in spite of the cold weather, and I feel sure that all male children born within the next twelve months in the city will be put down to the camp episode.' The doctor who writes in the first person singular is the Residency Surgeon of Ajmer. What is the difference between these doctors and the witch doctors who promise impossible cures? The poor savages at least profess to believe what they practise, but these doctors have practised what is nothing but a heartless joke which is certain to be ultimately found out by even the simple Udaipur folk. We do not think specious promises of this kind should be made or approved on any account.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

HINDUSTANI,
1st August, 1906.

The transfer of the High Court.

18. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 1st August, notes that a public meeting was held at the Shah Mina ka maidan on the evening of the 1st instant; and it was resolved, that should the High Court and the Judicial Commissioner's court be amalgamated, the new High Court thus formed, should be located in Lucknow, and that a deputation be sent to lay this representation before Government. Chaudhri Nasrat Ali, Khan Bahadur, and Rai Din Dayal were the prime movers of this meeting, and it was presided over by Mahant Sant Bakhsh Singh, Talukdar.

OUDH AKHBAR,
3rd August, 1906.

The High Court.

19. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 3rd August, in dealing with the question of the amalgamation of the Judicial Commissioner's Court with the High Court refers to the concessions made infavour of Lucknow ever since the mutiny, and to the understanding arrived at between the Government and the large and powerful body of the Talukdars of Oudh on the subject. The proceedings of the majority of the meetings held at various places, and the opinions of newspapers are in favour of the location of the combined High Court at Lucknow. Even a section of the Allahabad community holds similar views. Lucknow is a city of great historic importance, and stands second to Delhi alone in this respect. The cost of a new building in Allahabad will by far exceed that in Lucknow. It will besides be difficult to select a proper site in Allahabad: but not so in Lucknow. The employés in the High Court will be able to secure houses at a much lower rent in every quarter of Lucknow, where food is not only much cheaper, but can be purchased at one's own door. It is to be hoped that the promises made by the Government to the residents of Oudh, and all other connected matters will receive due consideration before the final decision of this question. The transfer of the Judicial Commissioner's Court to Allahabad will be opposed to public opinion and the principles of Government It will be viewed as an act of extreme hardship and the large body of the Taluqdars of Oudh will become distrustful of the sincerity of Government.

The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th July, takes a different view and thinks that the Judicial Commissioner's Court should have been amalgamated with the High Court at the time of the amalgamation of the Provinces. Lucknow is properly speaking not a central place, and besides the High Courts at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay do not occupy central sites. The High Court at Allahabad has greater facilities for the disposal of cases on the original and appellate side than it can have in Lucknow, and the fact that owners of house property have sufficiently benefited in the past to sustain any real loss is no sufficient argument.

The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 1st August, advocates the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, and among other reasons in support of its view, points out that Lucknow is a railway centre, and much difficulty will ensue, if a Bench of the High Court is established in Lucknow, and the several offices concerned remain in Allahabad; that socially Lucknow is the greatest centre in the United Provinces: it contains the largest cantonment, and not being a centre for large religious gatherings, can be expected to remain free from plague. It is closer to Naini Tal, the seat of Government during the hot weather; it contains the largest number of schools in the United Provinces, has been unanimously selected as the proper place for the new Medical College, and will amply accommodate the new comers from Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th August, 1906.

The Lieutenant-Governor's recent reply to the Oudh Talukdars' deputation at Lucknow regarding the question of the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow.

20. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th August, referring to the Lieutenant-Governor's recent speech at Lucknow, regarding the question of the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow, says:—It is no use for the Government to take shelter behind the plea that the High Court at Allahabad wanted a new building and an additional Judge. The whole responsibility for this agitation lies with the Government and we must confess to a sense of great disappointment at the manner in which it has been dealing with the question. Has not the Government got the courage to say what it does really think about the matter? Let the Government say that it wants the amalgamated courts to be at Lucknow or Allahabad, and wait for public opinion. There seems to be absolutely no justification for giving rise to a controversy and then telling the people, "Oh! You have been quite mistaken, we don't want you to discuss what you have been discussing, you had better think of the real issue now." We should not be surprised if after this speech of Sir James LaTouche the agitation were to take a new turn and add to the bitterness of feeling which it has already created. It seems to us that the people know their mind very well and it is the Government alone which seems not to know its mind, or at any rate it is not disposed to express its mind in the matter.

ADVOCATE,
5th August, 1906.

Question of the amalgamation of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court with the Allahabad High Court, and of the location of the amalgamated Court.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th August, referring to the Lieutenant Governor's recent reply to the Oudh Bar Association at Lucknow, regarding the amalgamation of the Oudh Judical Commissioner's Court with the Allahabad High Court and the location of the amalgamated court, says:—We are afraid that there has been some misunderstanding and the position now taken up by Sir James LaTouche is a position which was never properly understood by the people. The press communique issued by the Government had declared that in the opinion of the Government the best solution of the problem of the reform of the judicial administration of these provinces was amalgamation of the Allahabad and Lucknow Courts, and that the only question for decision was whether the amalgamated High Court was to be located at Lucknow or Allahabad. Public opinion has declared itself on the point. Had it been invited to discuss the advantages of a solution, the wisdom of which was apparent to the Government, it would have done so. There was no necessity for the public to discuss the point when the Local Government had in two communiques declared its own opinion and that of the Government of India, that the amalgamation of the two courts was necessary in the public interest. Even the Taluqdars who had all along said that they were opposed to amalgamation, did not offer any opposition at the present moment to amalgamation, knowing as they did, that the Government of India and Local Government were of one mind on the point, and so they must yield to the inevitable.

* * * * * * *

The position that, if the people do not express themselves in favour of amalgamation, there should be none, though required for the welfare of the United Provinces, raises many questions. Did the Government consult the people in carrying out the amalgamation of Oudh with the then North-Western Provinces? When the Revenue codes of the two provinces were amalgamated, was any occasion given to the people to express their opinion? When the jurisdiction of the Board of Revenue was extended to Oudh, nobody in the province of Agra nor any one in Oudh was consulted. The people, however, like the arrangement, because it has been to their advantage. They will prefer a single court to separate courts because it will be to their advantage.

* * * * * * *

Will the declaration that the present state of things should be allowed to continue give any satisfaction to the general public? Is it in the interest of the United Provinces as a whole that there should continue to exist two High Courts, one at Allahabad and the other at Lucknow, within a distance of 120 miles? These questions have to be clearly answered; and answered not in the interests of a handful of gentlemen whether they be members of the Bar at Allahabad or at Lucknow, whose interest might suffer by the removal of the court from one place to another, or in the interest of house-owners of either city. These questions have to be answered in the public interest, in that of the masses of the people. Their answer to the question will be for one instead of two High Courts in these Provinces. How is it possible that there should be any other reply than this? To declare that the present arrangement is good, that it helps the better administration of justice, is to make an allegation which is quite opposed to public feeling.

* * * * * * *

There is a general dissatisfaction throughout the Province with the civil justice imparted in Oudh Courts. It means no reflection on the officers presiding over these Courts, but on the system under which they are working. The dissatisfaction will continue so long as at the head of the Court in Oudh continues to be a civilian Judge. Whenever we have a conscientious Judge who cares less for the quantity of work done than its quality and is not unmindful of the nature of justice administered, the dissatisfaction is at the lowest ebb; when we have men who care more for a clear file than for the consciousness whether the people who come to the Courts go home satisfied with the justice given to them, or find little difference between the disposal of an appeal and drawing of a lottery, the discontent is great.

* * * * * * *

The Government may shelve the question for some time to come, but it will be a great mistake to keep it longer in an unsettled state.

The reply given by Sir James Digges LaTouche, the probability hinted by him of the smaller being attracted by the bigger, may lead only to one consequence, that is to a greater effort on the part of the Taluqdars and people of Oudh, as also on the part of the people of the Agra province, who declare that the location of the amalgamated High Court at Lucknow will be of advantage to them, to continue the agitation so as to assure the Government that they do want amalgamation and that too at Lucknow. The agitation will gain strength in favour of amalgamation. Sir James Digges LaTouche cannot open the question now in the remaining months of his term of office. But the supporters of amalgamation must prepare the ground and must have the support of public opinion, when the question is opened next and, let us hope, for the last time for final settlement.

HINDUSTANI,
8th August, 1906.

The amalgamation of the High Court.

22. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 8th August, referring to the speech of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, in reply to the deputation from the Bar Association of Oudh, remarks that it was expected that the question would come to be finally settled. The public opinion except in districts very close to Allahabad, seems to be in favour of locating the High Court at Lucknow. The views expressed by the association of tradesmen in Cawnpore, and the Bar Association at Mussoorie are the views of the European and Eurasian population on the subject. If Government wants any further assurance on the subject, the British Indian Association of the Taluqdars and the Bar Association of Oudh should take steps to satisfy Government on the point.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th August, 1906.

Prosecution of a Vakil in Bijnor under section 409, Indian Penal Code.

23. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of 5th August, referring to the case under section 409, Indian Penal Code, against Qazi Nazar Husain, a pleader of the Bijnor district, remarks that though the offence was non-bailable, the court in the exercise of its discretionary power, has admitted the accused to bail, and that the pleaders as a body are endeavouring their utmost to defeat the ends of justice, and it is to be feared that the poor cultivators and zamindars will not have justice done to them in the matter. The case is one calling for the attention of the Local Government.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th August, 1906.

Prosecution of a vakil at Bijnor.

24. One Nazar Husain, a vakil at Bijnor, and the editor of the Qulqul has written to the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 6th August, to say that the charge of criminal breach of trust brought against him is due to official antagonism, caused by his criticism of the conduct of the District Magistrate in permitting a rais to hold a nautch in the local hospital; and by his strictures on the proceedings of the municipal board. The writer states that he realized from court, in connection with a partition case the sum of Rs. 17, under instructions from his client. The latter instead of coming to him, paying up his fees and giving a formal receipt for the money, put in indendently a second application for the same sum. The officer dealing with partition cases brought this to the notice of the District Magistrate who sanctioned the prosecution.

ADVOCATE,
9th August, 1906.

Sardar Sewa Ram Singh versus Lieutenant Grenfell at Rawalpindi.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th August, says.—The hearing of the case against Lieutenant Grenfell, Badshah-ka dost, was resumed in the Court of Mr. Agnew, District Magistrate of Rawalpindi, at Rawalpindi on Friday as previously announced. The court room was crowded by Europeans, mostly military officers, who went to see the proceedings. The complainant Sardar Sewa Ram Singh was examined at length on oath when he reiterated the main incidents mentioned in the plaint. While the examination of the Sardar was going on the Indian gentlemen present were shocked to notice the District Superintendent of Police openly assisting the accused in his defence. It must have been the first instance in all India to see the head of District Police openly siding with a self-confessed law-breaker. Charges were then framed against Badshah-ka-dost under sections 323 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code and at the suggestion of the accused's counsel section 334 was also added, though it was strongly opposed by the complainant who suggested only 500. The objection was overruled by the magistrate. The accused claimed to be tried by a jury. At this stage the proceedings closed, the hearing being adjourned to the 6th September at Murree.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th July, 1906.

Complaint by under-trial prisoners against the Jail officials.

26. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 20th July, referring to a charge under sections 392 and 323, Indian Penal Code, against Raja Ram and Bindesri of Gorakhpur, says, that the accused appearing before the court of Babu Chandu Lal, magistrate 1st class, on the 12th July, brought serious charges of ill-treatment and torture against the officials of the district jail. They requested the court to pass sentence on them at once and desired that they might not be sent to the jail lock-up. Besides being beaten, Doms were ordered to strike them with brooms dipped in urine. The court ordered a rubkar to be submitted to the District Magistrate regarding this matter for his information.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th August, 1906.

Embezzlement in the Sadar Tahsil at Gorakhpur.

27. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 4th August, referring to the embezzlement case in the sadar tahsil of Gorakhpur, invites the attention of its readers to circular No. 10, Department IX, paragraph 20, which holds the treasurer responsible for defalcations. The tahsildar was on duty elsewhere on the day the offence was committed, and the question of his responsibility could be considered only if the treasurer were exonerated and the case ended in his acquittal. The tahsildar is only the supervising officer, and is not responsible primarily. The good work done by Munshi Ahmed Husain, and his absence on the day of the occurrence, entitle him to consideration, and the sum in respect of which defalcation has been committed should not be realized from him.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI,
6th August, 1906.

Embezzlement of court-fee stamps in Etah.

28. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of the 6th August, says that court fee stamps of immense value have been embezzled in Etah. A number of officials are under suspension. Such a state of things is very deplorable; and it is these things that give the opponents of the Congress occasion to laugh in derision at natives. Etah has a European Superintendent of Police, and no complaints are heard against that department. It is to be hoped that Government will look into the administration of this district, and this might bring to light certain other matters detrimental alike to the interests of the public and the Government.

ARYA MITRA,
8th August, 1906.

Arms Act case.

29. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 8th August, objects to the light sentence of six weeks' rigorous imprisonment passed on one Muhammad Husain for being in unlawful possession of cartridges.

Gambling in Agra.

30. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 8th August, attributes his suicide by poison of a gambler to the immense loss that he had sustained, and remarks that gambling is carried on extensively in muhalla Lohár Mandi, and that the local police should take necessary steps to stop the offence.

ARYA MITRA,
8th August, 1906.

Crime in Agra.

31. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 8th August, notices the occurrence of an unusually large number of thefts and other offences in Agra, and invites the attention of the police to the matter, calling on them to take necessary preventive measures.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd July, 1906.

Pickpockets in Cawnpore.

32. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 23rd July, says that four persons had their pockets picked during the week, but the cases remained undetected. Can the police do nothing to stop pocket picking?

TUHFA-I-HIND,
4th August, 1906.

A dacoity with murder in Bijnor.

33. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th August, says that a dacoity was lately perpetrated at the house of one Munshi Ashfāq Ali Khān of Bali in the Najibabad Tahsil. His mother was seriously injured by the dacoits, and at length succumbed to the injuries. The police were unsuccessful in their investigation. A complaint was subsequently filed before Munshi Ram Singh, Magistrate first class, who after a careful inquiry has committed the case to the Court of Session. It is strange that the dacoity case was not sent up by the police. Attention is also invited to two or three murder cases in which likewise the police of Bijnor have remained unsuccessful.

ZULKARNAIN,
7th August, 1906.

Cheating at Muzaffarnagar.

34. A correspondent in the Zulkarnain (Budaun), of 7th August, reports from Muzaffarnagar that a certan hakim who passed himself off as an alchemist and charmer has disappeared after cheating a local bania of a sum of Rs. 250 on the pretext of turning silver into gold Some other persons are said to have been cheated by him in the same way.

OUDH PUNCH,
9th August, 1906.

The Police and Ekka-walas in Lucknow.

35. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of 9th August, notes that the Ekka-walas at Goldarwaza in Lucknow have to make some payment to the station police on duty, and this is hard on them.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st August, 1906.

Mr. Morley's speech on the Indian Budget.

36. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st August, remarks that Mr. Morley's speech on the Indian Budget in the House of Commons is calculated to lead to many beneficial results. As regards his statement that the Government of India must remain personal and not self-governing, it is to be regretted that India is not inhabited by one nation so that such a Government might be usefully established.

RIYAZI-FAIZ,
28th July, 1906.

Sale of meat in Moradabad.

38. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit) of 28th July, invites the attention of the Collector of Moradabad and of the Local Government to the opening of a separate bazaar for the sale of meat on sanitary grounds. The Muhammadans seem to disapprove of this idea on ground of inconvenience. The editor points out, that the Hindus form the bulk of the population, and often have to take circuitous routes in order to avoid shops where meat is sold. He considers that undoubtedly the sight is offensive to some people, and that the request for a separate bazaar for the sale of meat is not an attack on Islám as has been suggested by certain Muhammadans.

SANSAR MITRA,
7th August, 1906.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
1st August, 1906.

Establishment of the Shia conference at Agra.

40. The Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 1st August, says:—The Shias of Shahganj (Agra) have started a conference to consider the needs of the Shia community. A correspondent gives the following advice:—The aims and objects of the Shia conference should not be such as to clash with the educational conference of Aligarh, but should devote its energy to matters affecting the Shia. The conference should have its central committee at Lucknow, Patna or Agra, and sub-committees should be established at places where the Shia population is numerous. It should report twice a year on the Shia population, their means of subsistence, and the number of boys who can come under training. It will also be the duty of the committee to report the number of boys whose parents have the means of imparting education to them, and the number of such as cannot do so. The sub-committees should also collect subscriptions locally, to cover the expenses of the conference, and for purposes of education, which would be remitted from time to time to the General Secretary of the Shia conference. This sum will be credited in the name of the Shia conference with the Bank of Bengal. The members of the central committee will be honorary members.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,

Reclamation of waste land.

41. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 20th July, referring to the recent Resolution of Government regarding the reclamation of waste lands regrets that the recommendation of the Famine Commission has not been accepted by Government on the subject. The concessions which Government offers to the people for reclaiming or improving land are hardly liberal enough, and the writer does not think that every land-owner will accept the proposed terms. Government should at any rate see that the rights of the tenants are not affected.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th August, 1906.

Mr. H. Z. Darrah's administration of the famine relief measures in Bundelkhand.

42. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th August, says:—Mr. H. Z. Darrah, Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, who has been placed specially on famine duty and has been touring through the affected districts, is still camping at Jhansi. His hold on the famine administration has been firm, and he has spared no trouble in doing what, according to his lights, would make for efficiency. He has undoubtedly been indefatigable and has bestowed time and care on all details of the work. His subordinates, however, whom I had opportunities of meeting every day, are not very liberal in their praise of him. If it were the complaint of one individual subordinate I would know what it means, but it is general almost without exception, as far as the lower ranks are concerned. Probably Mr. Darrah is a hard taskmaster, probably he is too strong, and not being an official myself I am unable to say anything one way or the other. There is however no doubt about one point; Mr. Darrah is a Civilian administrator bound by rules and orders, and for famine administration we require a philanthropist and a humanitarian.

Many people will wonder that there should be any punishment in a famine camp as there is in a public office or in the jail. Yet, like naughty clerks who delay the preparation of official returns, famine-stricken people on relief works are fined. This fine means a reduction of their daily wages. Each worker is allowed a pittance every day barely sufficient for him to keep body and soul together, and has a fixed task allotted to him to perform. This task is however not determined by the worker, but by another who has never known what penury is, and what an emaciated constitution is capable of, and who is often arbitrary. Suppose, then, that a worker getting 1½ anna a day fails to complete by evening the work that is apportioned to him. He is fined half anna and gets only one anna that day, He is thus still further weakened on account of the less food he gets to eat, and if the process is continued and is not stopped in time by the supervising agency the man is soon doomed and goes to his grave. Dependents of workers get much less and more often than not do the workers suffer on account of their dependents.

Work on famine camps is done departmentally as well as through contractors. Contractors have their own interests to further, and it is easy to see that the people paid through them cannot be as fairly dealt with as by the departmental agency. I heard complaints that not only were the workers paid less by contractors, but that they were not paid every day. This caused much hardship, and I am glad that orders were issued for the payment of wages each day. Underpayment, it seems cannot be checked. Some canal work is also being pushed forward and I have heard that labourers do not take so kindly to canal work as they do to regular famine relief works. I am not aware why this is so, but the wearer best knows where the shoe pinches. In many places I heard that villagers had pice with them but had to travel long distances to buy rations. On account of the failure of the crops, people who had some grain did not readily sell them, and professional banias do not live in all villages. This inconvenience added to their sufferings.

Gratuitous relief continues to be given through the tahsildars and muhalla committees. Efforts have been made to trace needy people and afford them relief. There have undoubtedly been voluntary applications for relief, but hundreds of men and women had to be sought out and given the much-needed succour. I know of some extraordinary cases that will bear mention. Two brothers went with their muhalla people to the tahsil to apply for relief. While they were waiting there for the Tahsildar, somebody taunted the brothers for seeking gratuitous relief and they returned home forthwith. Of course no relief was given them, and I have actually come to know that they passed days upon days without food. Yet these people were no better than humble ekka-drivers. They had a horse for which no purchasers were found and he strayed and died. The case of these brothers was brought to my notice very late, and I have arranged that they will now receive relief. Everybody seems to know one or more cases of this kind.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd August, 1906.

Rumoured resignation by Sir Bampfylde Fuller of the Lieutenant-Governorship of Eastern Bengal.

43. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd August, says :—Rumour is still busy with the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, though there are no signs of its coming.

* * * * * * *

If mischievous people now say that the emoluments of office have a stronger fascination for Sir Bampfylde Fuller than a sense of dignity they have sufficient justification. With regard to the famine also, it cannot be denied that he did not realise the full gravity of the situation until his attention had been drawn from outside, and now he has told the Bengal Chamber of Commerce that a public meeting in Calcutta and an appeal for funds are unnecessary.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation.

44. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th August, says :—Sir Bampfylde Fuller has resigned. Hurrah for the British Raj! It is not a rumour any longer but a stern fact since the Pioneer, the staunch and worthy henchman of Shaista Khan II has sorrowfully announced the great news. There is an explanation appended as happened in Lord Curzon's case. It is said that the famous first Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has resigned in preference to withdrawing a recommendation about the disaffiliation of two schools. Possibly; it might have been the last straw that broke his back but withdrawals were being heaped thick upon him and Uday Patni's case was a broad hint for any one. We believe Sir Bampfylde Fuller has been practically compelled to resign, and our most grateful thanks are due to Mr. John Morley for the quiet but splendid firmness he has displayed. United Bengal and the leaders of the agitation have our warmest congratulations upon this signal victory. The Government also must be congratulated upon the wisdom displayed by it, though late. Mr. Morley has now an opportunity of reconsidering the whole question of partition and putting an end to the agitation in Bengal.

ADVOCATE,
9th August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation.

45. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th August, remarks as follows :—Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation is no ordinary event. Lieutenant-Governors have resigned in the past before the expiry of their terms of office; they have resigned owing to some differences with the authorities at Simla or Calcutta. But we are afraid, seldom has any Governor resigned under the circumstances in which Sir Bampfylde Fuller has done. To say that the event will pass away without creating some effect on the Indian mind, is to say that the Indian public is unable to draw proper conclusions from events that happen around it. The reasons assigned for the resignation are clumsy and, if true, simply show how Sir Bampfylde Fuller showed his zid even when experts differed from him in matters in which he was not the sole master. The reasons assigned for the resignation, are that he had, at the instance of the Director of Public Instruction in Eastern Bengal, recommended the disaffiliation of two schools of Sirajganj, named Victoria School and Banwarilal Institution, for the unruly conduct of some of their boys. It is alleged that the boys had waylaid a cart laden with English cloth and assaulted a bank manager; and that the teachers had instigated the boys to commit the mischief. The matter came up before the Syndicate of the Calcutta University, which by its constitution is more official than non-official body. An enquiry followed. As a result, the Syndicate considered that the recommendations of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's Government were not proper; hence it almost unanimously, against one solitary vote of the Director of Public Instruction, declined to inflict the severest punishment that could be proposed by the Government on the institutions. Sir Bampfylde Fuller moved the Government of India to interfere in the matter. This Lord Minto declined to do. And this so enraged Sir Bampfylde Fuller that he threw up his appointment. Now the question was not so serious that a Lieutenant-Governorship should have been staked over it. Hence we refuse to connect this resignation simply with the irritation caused by the University's unwillingness to accept certain recommendations. Sir Bampfylde Fuller has resigned because he did not find full support from the Government of India or the Secretary of State for India in his high-handed proceedings.

The news of the resignation has been received throughout Eastern Bengal with feelings of joy and satisfaction. One may not like this outburst of public rejoicing on an opponent's fall but one must place oneself in the position of the oppressed and harassed Bengali before one can understand his feelings. He feels that a thorn has been taken out of him. All the same the feeling in our opinion should be one of gratefulness to Lord Minto and Mr. Morley. Lord Minto had been accused of sitting mute, of doing nothing. His Excellency, whether spontaneously or at the instance of Mr. Morley, refused to support all the acts of zabardasti of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. He in anger had said that he would play Shaista Khan, if people did not cease from expressing their dissatisfaction of the partition measure, by the policy of passive resistance; but Sir Bampfylde Fuller while hurling the threat, forgot that he was called upon to rule India on English principles and not by Asiatic methods, and the people had in expressing their dissatisfaction, adopted the English and not oriental methods of expressing their indignation.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's place will be taken by the Hon. Mr. Hare, at present officiating Lieutenant-Governor of Lower Bengal. He is known to be a quiet sort of man. Let us hope he will carry on the administration by inaugurating a policy of conciliation. The people of Eastern Bengal have also great responsibility. Let them fully realise it. The agitation against partition they will not allow to subside, till they have succeeded in having it altered. But the greatest care shall have to be taken to see that the agitation does not encourage lawlessness and that no occasion is given to the opponents of educated Indians to say that they instigate lawlessness. Who knows that the new Lieutenant-Governor might not, after a few months' experience be in a position to report that the partition instead of smoothing the administrative work has made it more intricate and that it is impossible to carry on an administration against the wishes of the people? But such sympathy the people of Eastern Bengal will gain only when they, while carrying on their agitation with moderation, see that no cause of unnecessary provocation and irritation be given to the new Lieutenant-Governor.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller is certainly a triumph of popular and constitutional agitation, and we shall deserve the credit of the triumph, if we know how to keep ourselves under control and not allow ourselves to be carried away beyond the limits of law and reason.

ZINDA DIL,
July, 1906.

Swadeshi movement.

46. The Zinda Dil (Cawnpore), for July, while discussing the deplorable condition of India, says that the swadeshi movement should have the sympathies of the Congress which alone can promote its cause. It also suggests that another movement should be taken up along with the swadeshi enterprise in order to prevent the necessaries of life (agricultural produce) from being exported to foreign countries because the export of grain is the chief cause of the poverty of India.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd July 1906.

Swadeshi movement.

47. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 23rd July, states that the capitalists and merchants of India are not taking a hearty interest in this movement, and there has been no decrease so far in the amount of foreign articles imported into the country. Leaving fancy articles out of consideration, India has not yet been able to do away with even such articles of foreign manufacture as cigarettes, pencils, knives, cloth, mirrors, pens, inkpots, paper, umbrellas, needles, thread, &c. It is often seen that those advocating the swadeshi movement are seen using things of foreign manufacture.

OUDH AKHBAR,
4th August, 1906.

Swadeshi movement.

48. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow) of 4th August, remarks that the zeal for swadeshi articles and dislike for exports have subsided, and are now within proper bounds. It is sure to produce permanent good results. A large section of the Indian public have taken to swadeshism permanently; and are doing their best for the good of their country. A large number of spinning mills and weaving factories are working advantageously in various parts of the country.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th August, 1906.

An appeal to Indians to practise self-sacrifice in promoting the cause of their country.

49. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th August, in an article, headed the "Service of the Country" writes:—The Hindu doctrine about karma is eminently reasonable and satisfactory. Why are we under a foregn rule, while savage tribes which have neither our ancient civilization nor our enlightenment do not bend the neck to any foreign power? If we are very low in the scale of nations we have deserved it by our own lack of energy and sacrifice. It is no use trying to lay the blame on others when all the blame really belongs to us.

The phenomenal success of Japan has brought about a great revolution in a large number of settled ideas, chief among which is that Asiatics as such are not inferior to Europeans. But other Asiatic races have yet to prove that they are as capable as the Japanese. As soon as any nation deserves to rise, it does rise and no power can keep it back. The example of Japan is supposed to be very stimulating for the people of India, but in what respects have we followed the example of Japan? How many of us for instance have realised that the real secret of Japan's success is to be found in a single quality—sacrifice.

* * * * * * * *

Of what use to the country are men who hanker after titles and whose loyalty and public spirit are officially praised! Will these men advance the cause of their country by an inch? They merely represent what Herbert Spencer calls "a mean, cowardly abandonment of the claims of manhood."

You find that submission to authority decreases as morality and intelligence increase.

No matter what our station in life may be, no matter how humble our position, we are all in a position to render important service to the country, and let that be our highest ambition that we may be nameless sowers, in order that those who may come after us may reap the harvest.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th August, 1906.

Swadeshi movement.

50. The Hindosthán (Kalakankar), 7th August, reports that the Government Stores Committee in Calcutta has enquired from the Trade Association if articles of swadeshi manufacture of the same quality as those supplied to Government officers at present, can be had at a moderate cost, and has been informed in reply that such things can be supplied at a cheaper rate, if Government affords Indian manufacturers the opportunity of making tenders for goods wanted, and that Government will have fresh articles at its command at all times, and will be saved the cost of maintaining the Store Department in the office of the Secretary of State.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th August, 1906.

Swadeshi movement.

51. The Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 7th August, notes that the mahajan Mandal of Baroda has passed a resolution interdicting the use of sugar of foreign manufacture on pain of incurring the displeasure of the community.

Sugar of European manufacture.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th August, 1906.

52. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 8th August, notes that a meeting was held at Dhampur and it was resolved that sugar of European manufacture should no longer be used on religious grounds. Those offending the resolution will be liable to fine.

A similar meeting with similar results has been held in Bareilly.

Fight between the Police and the students of the Medical College, Agra.

ARYA MITRA, 8th August, 1906.

53. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 8th August, refers to a squabble between the police and the students of the Medical College, Agra, at the Jhula fair and notes that both parties have sustained injuries. It recommends a compromise and does not approve of the idea of a criminal prosecution.

The Hindus and Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 23rd July, 1906.

54. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 23rd July, referring to the remarks of the Akhbar-i-Am charging the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam with creating discord between Hindus and Muhammadans, states that the fines imposed on the Hindu students of the Kishoreganj school, were given to the Anjuman Islamia of Mymensingh according to the wishes of the local authorities. Innumerable pamphlets were published by Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal, inciting Muhammadans against Hindus, assuring them that Government would not interfere with, but rather would help the Muhammadans. The authorities have taken no steps to put a stop to pamphlets of this sort, and by their attitude have made it clear that Hindus were in disfavour with them, and that Government would like to see them trampled down. They cannot clear themselves of these charges. The prominent Muhammadans however are sorry for what has happened, and are making efforts to prevent discord between Hindus and Muhammadans.

New light on the Barisal incident.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 1st August, 1906.

55. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 1st August, expresses its fullest concurrence with the views of the Pioneer on this subject, and remarks that considering that the Hindu population in Barisal is only half the Muhammadan population, the strong measures taken by Government were necessary in the interests of Hindus. Every one acquainted with the real state of affairs will be of opinion that what Mr. Banerjee did or intended doing, could not in any way be beneficial to the interests of the Hindus of Eastern Bengal, and that his strong national zeal, had for the time being overcome his reason. The circumstances attending the Barisal incident reflect great discredit on a national leader like Mr. Banerjee. The editor says that he has for some time remarked that the National Congress is really very selfish.

Feeling of independence in Eastern Bengal, and its results.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 1st August, 1906.

56. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, in its issue of 1st August, 1906, remarks that the British rule was in the beginning hailed with delight, and afforded contrast to the misrule of the dynasty it supplanted. As time went on succeeding generations, that had no idea of the former misrule began to criticize the policy of their rulers, who made certain alterations according to the needs of the times, and gave them such rights and privileges as seemed proper. The Indian public seem, however, to think that they should have everything they desire all at once, and their complaints are beginning to assume a practical shape, and if the state of feeling now prevailing in Eastern Bengal overspreads the country, undesirable results might ensue. Lord Curzon seems to be chiefly responsible for the present state of affairs. There is no doubt that India is inhabited by various nations and this is a strong check against any widespread rising; and Indians can never attain prominence in consequence. Free social intercourse and inter-marriages between Hindus and Muhammadans will be the work of centuries; and until this can be accomplished India will remain under foreign sway; and this being so it is desirable that there should be a feeling of harmony between the rulers and the ruled. Lord Curzon's policy can work only so long as the different nations cannot combine; but as evidenced by what happened in connection with the plague, this is not impossible. It is therefore desirable that the public should not be compelled to wrest from Government what they really deserve as a right. It is likewise desirable that the public should not grow impatient over their demands; and seek to have forthwith what they should really acquire after a century.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd August, 1906.

The Anti-Bengal partition agitation and the strike on the East Indian Railway.

57. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd August, says:—Let us assume that the strike is due to the influence of the leaders of the partition agitation. What does that prove? It proves conclusively that the leaders of the agitation are the real leaders of a large section of the people, and their influence is steadily increasing.

* * * * * * *

From public demonstrations the agitation is passing to the stage of passive resistance, and is naturally creating great consternation among those who never expected the agitation to go so far.

Is repression any remedy? Has it not been tried with a vengeance in Eastern Bengal and has it succeeded? It is absurd to say that the agitation is confined to the Bengalis. It is spreading to all classes of people and strikes have been reported from all parts of the country. The spirit of unrest is abroad and it has been invoked by the late Viceroy of India. Even the casual observer cannot fail to note that the present agitation has had no parallel in this country. It was confidently predicted that the agitation would subside as soon as the partition had been carried out. That prediction has been falsified. Next it was vehemently declared that the boycott was ephemeral. On the contrary, it is being maintained with great vigour.—And now new elements of disturbance are being introduced. The leaders of the agitation are being abused, but the very great compliment of acknowledging them as real leaders is being paid to them. They have—to believe their detractors—organised strikes among printers, tramway men, and railway men. They may go on to public offices, hackney carriage drivers, cartmen and others and paralyse industry and business. Is the power of such men to be despised, or are they to be treated as rebels? Statesmanship would reply neither the one nor the other. Give them a patient hearing, redress their legitimate grievances and enlist their sympathy and influence on the side of good and wise administration.

AL BASHIR,
7th August, 1906.

The representative element in the Legislative Council.

58. The Al Bashir (Etawah), of 7th August, remarking on the proposed increase of the representative element in the Legislative Council, says, that in case a commission is appointed, the Muhammadans should object that their representatives cannot sit in the council until the present mode of selection is modified, and until it is decided that Muhammadans have an exclusive right to elect their representatives. It is probable that the rule can be modified if Muhammadans take sufficient interest in the matter. This is fully illustrated by what has happened in the past.

RAHBAR,
7th August, 1906.

The Army and its expenses.

59. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th August, says that the question of curtailing expenditure in the Army is under consideration in England, and the Minister for War has pointed out that it is necessary to maintain a force for preventing foreign attacks and for preserving peace in the country. The Venkateswar questions the need for maintaining a force for preserving internal peace, and the Rahbar answers by saying that it is necessary, to enforce the orders of rulers like Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

HINDUSTANI,
8th August, 1906.

The Militia in India.

60. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 8th August, expresses its regret at the present tenor of the speeches on the subject, delivered by Mr. S. S. Thoburn, former Financial Commissioner of the Panjab. He does not advocate the selection of men for the militia from the whole of India, and wishes to exclude educated men altogether. The editor is glad at finding that Anglo-Indians are beginning to feel the need of taking a larger portion of Indians into the Army, for the protection of their country, and hopes that when the time comes responsible posts will be conferred on Indians irrespective of creed or nationality.

AL BASHIR,
24th July, 1906.

Indians versus Europeans.

61. The Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 24th July, referring to the assault by a European on an Indian vakil in Murree, remarks that racial feeling is apt to influence the minds of opposing factions in a country like India, which is inhabited by many races. The teaching of Christ enjoining upon His disciples to turn their left cheek in case one should smite them on the right, was due to the fact that the first converts to Christianity belonged to a very low class of people. All this is since very much changed. Indians should know that it is absurd in these days to think of retaliating in the case of an assault by an Englishman; and that an assault by a native on an Englishman is sure to entail a charge of attempt at murder on the native besides involving the neighbouring Indians also in trouble.

RAHBAR,
7th August, 1906.

Indians and Europeans.

62. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th August, expresses its regret at finding Europeans and Indians coming to blows. The Indians, he says, do so only when driven to the wall, and deplores the attitude of the ruling nation in this respect. As an instance he cites the case of a civil surgeon in Assam, who got offended with his assistant surgeon, and began to assault him, but when the latter turned round, and refused to submit to this treatment the civil surgeon was silenced. When our fair skinned rulers can ruin our prospects with one stroke of their pen, their cowardly assaults are superfluous.

BHARATENDU,
April, 1906.

Celebration of the birthdays of great men of India.

63. The Bhárátendu (Benares), for April, while referring to the celebration at Benares of Sivaji's birthday exhorts Indians to pay similar homage to Maharaja Partab Singh, Ranjit Singh, and other great rulers in India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
8th August, 1906.

Sivaji's anniversary, and the attitude of Muhammadans.

64. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár, of 8th August, comments rather strongly on the hostile attitude adopted by the Muhammadan community towards the celebration of the anniversary of Sivaji. The writer fails to understand how it affects the Muhammadans. They can hold aloof from the celebration, but have no business to take offence at it. He asks if Muhammadans would have been pleased with Sivaji, if he had befriended the interests of Aurangzeb and lost sight of the claims of Shahjahan, and had thereby proved himself an ungrateful feudatory; would Muhammadans have desired Sivaji to remain in prison, to which he had been relegated on accepting the treacherous invitation of Aurangzeb, without attempting his freedom? They perhaps would have wished him to allow himself to have been murdered by Afzal Khan instead of saving his life by his strategy, or that four lakhs of Hindus, who applied for the remission of the Jaziah tax, should have been allowed to be trampled to death underneath the feet of elephants. Sivaji was undoubtedly a brave Rajput, whose government was on so strong a foundation that one sees his descendants amongst the ruling chiefs and allies of the suzerain Power of the present day, while no trace is left of the boasted greatness of Ahmad Shah.

ARYA MITRA,
1st August, 1906.

Assault by a European on a native lady.

65. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st August, expresses its extreme reprehension at the conduct of a European named Mr. Dillon in outraging the modesty of Professor Gajjar's wife while travelling by rail in a first class compartment, and remarks that the gulf between the ruler and the ruled is being widened from day to day by similar misdemeanours on the part of Europeans.

RAHBAR,
7th August, 1906.

Assault by a European on a Native lady in a train.

66. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th August, remarking on the sentence of a fine of Rs. 200 in default to two months' simple imprisonment passed on a European for outraging the modesty of a respectable parda lady between Poona and Bombay while travelling in a train, reminds us of the case of Seth Siddiq who was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment for a similar offence committed on a European lady. The Magistrate trying the present case characterizes the sentence as severe and considers such a sentence necessary to enable ladies to travel by rail without difficulty. The editor considers that even handed justice is not meted out to the Indians and Europeans alike; and is of opinion that the law administered to the two nations is different.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th August, 1906.

Assault on native women in a train at Soron.

67. A correspondent in the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 8th August, reports the assault on certain native women at the Soron Railway station by certain railway employes and adds that their ornaments also were robbed.

RAHBAR,
7th August, 1906.

Assault by a Deputy Commissioner.

68. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th August, remarks that Mr. A. C. Cowie, I.C.S., Deputy Commissioner, severely whipped a boy whom he found on a jamun tree in front of the Mission house. The boy lodged a complaint in the court of the Assistant Commissioner, who dismissed it as trivial. The editor remarks that it would appear that Europeans are incapable of committing heinous offences, and regrets that such injustice is compelling the public to take the law into their own hands.

QULQUL,
23rd July, 1906.

Prohibition of singing at Bijnor.

69. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 23rd July, remarks that an order of the District Magistrate prohibiting singing and playing on musical instruments after 10 P.M. is extraordinary; and the more so, that it has been passed in the month of Sawan when Indians have, from time immemorial, been accustomed to amuse themselves in this way.

AL BASHIR
24th July, 1906.

Muhammadans in the Telegraph Department.

70. The Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 24th July, refers to an application submitted by the Eurasian residents of Coorg and Mysore to the Government of India, requesting the employment of their girls in the Telegraph Department, and points out that the percentage of Muhammadans in the Telegraph Department is very low, but no representation has been made on their behalf in the matter nor has Government taken their case into consideration.

HINDUSTANI,
1st August, 1906.

An important need in the United Provinces.

71. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 1st August, states that the Maharaja of Ajodhya having invited certain zamindars of the Province of Agra to consider the question of their eligibility as members of the British Indian Association, Rai Nihal Chand has taken the opportunity of addressing a memorandum to zamindars inviting them to consider the grievances that the zamindars and the public have had during the last twenty years. The Rai Sahib has quoted instances where the officers concerned in the administration of the United Provinces have admitted that these Provinces do not receive the same treatment as others; and though the Government and the public of these Provinces have been unanimous for a long time in thinking that full justice is not done here, still our grievances are not attended to, in spite of the promises held out from time to time. It will no doubt (says the editor) be a great gain if the Local Government strengthens its hands by adopting the opinion of the Taluqdars.

SITARA-I-HIND,
4th August, 1906.

Complaints against the veterinary hospital assistant of Moradabad.

72. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 4th August, reports that there are complaints by local butchers regarding the mode adopted by the local veterinary hospital assistant of branding goats and sheep.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th August, 1906.

Death of Lady Curzon.

73. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 8th August, comments on the death of Lady Curzon as being a judgment on her husband for his policy in India.

ARYA MITRA,
8th August, 1906.

Prevention of smoking among children.

74 The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 8th August, referring to the strenuous efforts made in London and America to stop smoking amongst children, notes with regret that the attention of our Government and of the Government of India has not yet been directed to this matter.

ADVOCATE,
9th August, 1906

A country boat drowned in the Jumna at Muttra.

75. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th August, says :—A correspondent telegraphs from Muttra that a country boat with a number of pilgrims on board capsized on the Jumna on Friday last. Seventeen dead bodies were recovered and four persons are missing.

HINDUSTANI.
1st August, 1906.

The East Indian Railway strike.

76. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 1st August, after enumerating the grievances of the Railway employés, says that up-country men would probably be not willing to go to Bengal on Rs. 20 or Rs. 30 per mensem, and that persons drawing such low salaries are fully justified in asking for an increase of Rs. 10 each, at a time that famine is prevailing in the country. The strike is not the outcome of any political agitation. There is not a city in Northern India where the wages of the labouring classes have not risen.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd August, 1906.

The Bengalis, and the East Indian Railway strike.

77. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 3rd August, remarks that if the strike on the East Indian Railway debar Bengalis from getting appointments on the line in future, owing to their being considered unreliable, it will be equally desirable that they should be excluded from Government service. This will give the Bengalis an excellent opportunity to direct their attention to reviving their arts, industries and agriculture, which will surely lead to their social advancement.

OUDH AKHBAR,
4th August, 1906.

The strike on the East Indian Railway.

78. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 4th August, considers that a strike is one of the evils introduced by European civilization. The strike on the East Indian Railway has caused much loss to the public and to the Railway Company. The General Traffic Manager convened a conference to consider the grievances of the railway employés and got so offended at the station master of Kongar claiming equality of pay with Europeans and Eurasians on the ground of equal responsibility of the natives and Europeans, that he dismissed the station master forthwith. The strike has extended down to the menials. The writer condemns this conduct of the General Traffic Manager. It is desirable that the Railway authorities should overlook the fault of their subordinates, if it could be called a fault.

The Najm-i-Bázigh (Moradabad), of 1st August, notes that men have been imported from the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and other lines, and work will soon begin as usual. The agitators who are travelling all over the line are not meeting with any appreciable success.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th August, 1906.

Two different versions of the effect of the strike on the East Indian Railway

79. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th August, says:—The parallel versions that are appearing in the two sections of the Press on the strike on the East Indian Railway would themselves afford much matter for thought. Why is there such a serious conflict in the presentation of the same facts? And yet the two accounts are at such striking variance that it is impossible to reconcile them. Who, for instance, will believe the Anglo-Indian paper that there has been no inconvenience in consequence of the strike? Can a large number of trained hands be removed at once without the work being thrown out of gear and suffering? A race question is being made out of the affair and Eurasians are said to be more satisfactory than the old hands. What about the scale of pay? What about the complaint that the new hands are insolent to passengers and the line is becoming unsafe for Indian ladies to travel by? We hope there is some truth in the report that the officiating Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal was up at Simla to discuss this question, among others, with the Viceroy. The issue does not rest entirely between the strikers and the railway authorities. The East Indian Railway is an important system of railways and there is a large travelling public concerned. If the railway authorities can dispense with the strikers and get other efficient men well and good, but in any case the crisis must soon come to an end, and the smooth and safe working of the line must be restored. Our own impression is that the strike is only the first one of its kind, and unless the railway authorities are more reasonable, strikes on a larger scale will follow. The Anglo-Indian papers are playing the game of the capitalist, and are exciting race-feeling, but labour movements are not suppressed by these methods.

OUDH AKHBAR,
7th August, 1906.

The strike on the East Indian Railway.

80. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 7th August, remarks that in certain quarters the strike is attributed to the agitation of Bengalí Babus in connection with the partition of Bengal, and that men have been deputed to incite people to wire cutting and to assaults on European and Eurasian railway employés. The Muhammadans are coming forward and taking the place of the strikers on the lines. The editor thinks that English education has taught the natives of India to claim equality with European and Eurasian employés, and that the strike cannot be attributed to the partition of Bengal.

MOHINI,
7th August, 1906.

Strikes on the East India Railway.

81. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 7th August, says:—An appeal has been made to the Railway Board to consider the grievances of the strikers on the East Indian Railway. An appeal on the subject is also being made to the new Lieutenant Governor of Bengal who will, it is hoped, give the matter his special attention, and thereby save many poor native families from being starved. A large number of the strikers who have spent their lives in Railway service join the strike only on account of pressure brought to bear on them, and their case deserves consideration.

HINDOSTHAN,
9th August, 1906.

Strike on Railways and hardships of the employes.

82. The Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 9th August, referring to the suit for damages in the sum Rs. 12,000 instituted by the widow of the station master of the Punjab North Western Railway against the Secretary of State on the ground of her husband having been compelled to work till his health so completely broke down that he died two days after his leave had been granted, remarks that the refusal of leave to the employés of the Railway has also been one of the causes which have brought about the strike.

HINDUSTANI,
1st August, 1906.

Wholesale dismissal on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

83. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 1st August, expresses its regret at the wholesale dismissal of Indians on the Oudh und Rohilkhand Railway, and fails to see why European and Eurasian employés likewise should not come under reduction, if it is really intended to reduce the staff.

RAHBAR,
7th August, 1906.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

84. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th August, remarks that the guards in Lucknow and Moradabad gave intimation of an intended strike in case their grievances were not considered by 1st August; and hopes that the claims of the white men will be attended to.

It then refers to the unfortunate lot of the clerks, who have become loaded with work owing to recent dismissals for which the Deputy Traffic Superintendent is responsible. The new budget has been sanctioned, and though other departments have given promotions to their deserving clerks, nothing can be expected on this line. The chief officials however it thinks will be benefited. The office Superintendent is sure to have a lift of fifty rupees, and probably his fraternity will come in for their share. The recent dismissals have led to a saving of three quarters of a lakh which goes to the Government treasury.

Certain natives however are in the good books of the Deputy Traffic Superintendent, notably Madan Mohan contractor, and nobody cares to enquire into his questionable conduct.

HINDUSTANI,

Railway to Asiwan.

85. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 1st August, suggests that, the Supreme Government having sanctioned the opening of a railway line between Rae Bareli and Unao, there seems nothing to prevent its being connected with the Madhoganj branch. The length of the line will remain within the limits sanctioned, and it will pass alongside of Safipur, through Asiwan, Moradabad, Bangarmau and other important mercantile places. They are besides inhabited by educated men who are employed in various departments, and the tomb of Maulana Shah Fazl-ul-Rahman is the scene of a large annual gathering in Moradabad.

OUDH AKHBAR,

Proposed Railway branch line between Unao and Madhoganj.

86. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 7th August, supports the Hindustáni in advocating the necessity for opening a branch line from Unao to Madhoganj (1) because there is a large annual gathering at the tomb of Maulana Shah Fazal-ul-Rahman in Moradabad, (2) because Asiwan, Miyanganj, and certain other marts of trade are situated on or about the proposed line, (3) because the locality is inhabited by a large number of educated men in the public service.

INDIAN PUNCH,
7th August, 1906.

Assault by Railway employes on the female carriage.

87. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of 7th August, reports that four employés of the Rajputana Malwa Railway entered the female carriage between Budaun and Kasganj and tried to outrage the modesty of the female passengers, whose honour was saved by the timely intervention of the guard of the train.

VII.—Post Office.

AL BASHIR
7th August, 1906.

Postal receipts for newspapers.

88. The Al Bashir (Etawah), of 7th August, remarking on the complaints from subscribers regarding the non-receipt of newspapers, suggests the desirability of proprietors of newspapers being furnished with receipts for newspapers delivered on payment of a commission of two annas per cent.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

MUSAFIR,
30th July, 1906.

Satan, and Christ.

89. A correspondent of the Musâfir (Agra), of the 30th July, under the non de plume of Satan has addressed a letter to Jesus Christ informing him that his disciples are very irritable and tyrannical, and that he should come down from Heaven and preach the gospel lest their behaviour should rob him of the little good name that is still left to him. His Heavenly Father is blamed for not permitting him to come down at once from Heaven, and he himself is accused of having brought his mother into disgrace from his very infancy. His crucifixion is attributed to the sighs and curses of his mother.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd August, 1906.

Contradiction of the report regarding the alleged stoppage of the meeting of the Dharm Sabha at Moradabad.

90. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd August, says :—Pandit Banmali Shankar Misra, Secretary, Dharm Sabha, Moradabad, writes to say that the Punjabee was misinformed about the Dharam Sabha. The Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police did not stop the Sabha, and there is no consternation or excitement of any kind.

ADVOCATE,
9th August, 1906.

The Vivekanand Mission at Madras and the Bengali convert from Benares.

91. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 9th August, says:—An unfortunate case has occurred in Benares. A young Bengali boy under 20 has left his parents and joined the Vivekanand Mission at Madras. His brother went all the way from Benares to bring him back but failed. Now summonses have been obtained against the head of the Mission at Madras to produce the boy at Benares within a fortnight.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

AL BASHIR,
24th July, 1906.

Native newspapers.

92. The Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 24th July, remarks that the press is one of the several boons introduced by the British rule in India. In England the newspapers are mostly owned by companies, and are edited by capable men, while in India they are the property of single individuals, and are mostly in the hands of incompetent persons. It is to be regretted that restrictions are from time to time being imposed on the native press, and that Government regards it as instumental in agitating public opinion against its interests. It also thinks that a strong article appearing in an Anglo-Indian newspaper may not be objectionable, but if it appears in a native paper it has every chance of being treated as seditious. Besides, an editor publishing as editious article is considered an offender in the eye of the law, while the papers republishing it, with a note to the effect that it is a republication, are not at all responsible.

Egypt.

OUDH AKHBAR,
14th August, 1906.

1. THE Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 14th August, commenting on the views of a European on the subject, asks if Egypt still belongs to the Egyptians, and if the Khedive has still a right to real government over them. It asks if there was any justification for undermining his authority, and what would be the course indicated by justice. "Might is right," is the answer the paper gives to these queries. A right of protection which has become deeprooted has been obtained over the Egyptians, and they alone can be blamed in the matter. The educated Egyptians do not favour the present arrangements, and would prefer to manage their own affairs. Their desire, however, though not unnatural, can be of no avail, as the Egyptians as a whole do not appear to be prepared to subvert the existing order of things.

The Aligarh College and Turkey.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
14th August, 1906.

2. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of 14th August, says, with reference to an article in the Paisa Akhbar of 5th July, that Sakha and certain others, whose minds are prejudiced against the College, are still taking a wrong view of the matter in spite of the opinion already expressed by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk on the relations between Turkey and the Aligarh College in the Institute Gazette of 30th May. The telegram sent by Shaikh Abdullah was not a telegram from the trustees of the College, and was nothing beyond the expression of the opinion of a single individual. Those who are in touch with politics know well that Turkey is no longer so weak as to be subdued by any power that chooses to think of it, nor is the British Government so indiscreet as to commence hostilities with Turkey on trivial matters. If the Government of the Sultan succeed in establishing its reputation of being really powerful, the world will soon see that the small Powers that have been holding out threats of war, will vie for its friendship. The Muhammadans as a body sympathize with the Sultan, because the two sacred cities Mecca and Medina are under his protection. The college authorities have genuine sympathy for Turkey, but it is characterized by tact and wisdom. The seal and the insignia of the college, the dress and the mode of life of the students all clearly indicate the true sympathy that the college has with Turkey; and go distinctly to prove the falsity of the charge of our being sycophants to the British Government, and of having no real sympathy with the Sultan.

(b).—Home.

Treatment of the Zulus by the Natal troops.

ANAND,
24th July, 1906.

3. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 24th July, considers the conduct of the residents of Natal in maltreating the Zulus after a victory to be a blot on the British rule.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught as Commander-in-Chief of India.

EXPRESS,
2nd August, 1906.

4. The Express (Lucknow), of 2nd August, says:—We have no doubt whatever that the appointment of the Duke of Connaught would be very popular so far as the Indians are concerned. One effect of it would be that a certain kind of Anglo-Indianism, of which the latest exponent was Lieutenant Grenfell in Rawalpindi, would be somewhat at a discount. One of the great problems to be solved is how to bring the rulers and the ruled into sympathy, one with the other. We believe that the presence of a member of the Royal Family in India will largely contribute towards this desirable end.

The forthcoming Congress.

HINDUSTANI,
25th July 1906.

5. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 25th July, received on 16th August, says that the Reception Committee has not yet been formed, and there is a split in the camp in Calcutta. It is no secret that a certain section of the Indian public feels that the promises made and the hopes held out by Government cannot be relied on, that the British Government is selfish in its principles, and that it will not allow itself to be led by public opinion. This class holds that the Indians should endeavour to be independent, that the relations between the rulers and the ruled show a want of sympathy, and that the burden of taxation is heavy and causes discontent.

There is no doubt that the attitude of Lord Curzon much perturbed the public mind, but the editor hopes that Indian public opinion will not countenance a change in the modus operandi of the Congress, which cannot but lead to dangerous results.

HINDUSTANI,
15th August, 1906.

The need of a Political Association for the United Provinces.

6. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 15th August, says that the need of a Political Association for the United Provinces has been felt for a long time. It was resolved at the close of the Congress sittings at Lucknow in 1898 to do something in this direction; and the matter was discussed again in December last at Benares. Hafiz Abdul Rahim who takes a deep interest in political matters, suggested that the idea should be given a practical shape, and that a political conference be held during the Easter holdidays at Aligarh, with a view to establish this Association. This however could not be done owing to the short term of Easter holidays, and it is now suggested that the leaders of public opinion in the United Provinces should take steps to hold the conference at Aligarh at an early date.

URDU MUALLA,
for August, 1906.

Students and Politics.

7. The Urdu Mualla for August says that it is desirable that students should not take a practical share in political movements and agitations, as the harm that will accrue will be considerably more than the good they can do by doing so. Every student however can spare two or three hours from his studies, and he should spend these spare hours in the study of politics, as frequently opportunities have arisen such as have taxed the utmost resources of the nations concerned.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th August, 1906.

The Provincial Conference.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th August, says:—With the settlement of the High Court question the only hitch in the holding of a Provincial Conference has been removed, and we think there should be no difficulty now in arranging a date during the long vacation. There is a growing feeling among the leaders of both Provinces that we have failed in a public duty in not having held a Provincial Conference all these years. It had been practically decided that a Conference should be held this year at Aligarh, when this unfortunate controversy arose about the location of the High Court, and a good deal of energy was distracted and dissipated. A Conference is needed not only to discuss local questions and local needs, but also to promote a feeling of sympathy and of mutual help between the provinces of Agra and Oudh. We hope it will be possible to arrange by correspondence at an early date the preliminaries of the Conference. To the best of our knowledge the citizens of Aligarh will warmly welcome the first Provincial Conference. We further hope that it will be possible for Pandit Bishambhar Nath to accept the invitation to preside at the Conference. Should, however, the state of his health forbid such an effort we venture to suggest that a representative of Oudh should be invited to preside, the province of Agra paying this compliment to Oudh. The next Conference may be well held at Lucknow, when we hope the compliment will be reciprocated.

BHARAT JIWAN,
13th August, 1906.

British policy in India.

9. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 13th August, says that it is evident from the article by Mr. Bryan, a leading American, in the Sun, that the British policy in the administration of India is looked down upon by other civilized nations of the world.

GAZETTE,
16th August, 1906.

The Railway strike on the East Indian Railway and Indignation Meetings in Calcutta.

10. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of 16th August, holds up the Bengalis to ridicule, and characterizes their conduct in respect of the indignation meetings to condemn the conduct of the Railway authorities, and to support the strikers, as foolish in the extreme. The speeches of Babu Bipin Chander Pal, Babu Sham Sunder Chakravati, Babu C. R. S., Barrister-at-law and others on the subject are stigmatized as imprudent. The editor calls particular attention to the remarks made by G. R. N. Roy, calling King Edward VII only a nominal king, and urging that the Bengali nation should be the real sovereign. He regards this utterance as savouring of lunacy, and as calculated to inflame the minds of the ignorant masses. He is afraid that these little things will go a good way to endanger the peace of the country, and this objectionable remark should therefore be dealt with properly.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

ANAND,
31st July, 1906.

Education in Kabul.

11. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 31st July, says:—The Amir of Kabul has issued instructions that educated men alone will be taken into Government service, in future.

Will not the Muhammadans of India take a lesson from this order and cease endeavouring to secure Government service by favouritism.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
7th August, 1906.

Jaipur.

12. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra) of 7th August, denounces the present state of affairs in Jaipur. He recommends that the reins of Government be placed in the hands of some capable man, who has the capacity to manage and devise. He points out that those appointed at the head of the several departments do not know their duties, and that the police arrangements are defective.

Balji is the medium between the Maharaja and his subjects, and their grievances never reach the Maharaja's ears.

Babu Puran Chander Sen, the younger brother of Babu Sansar Chander, who is at present at the head of Municipal affairs, is an honest hardworking officer, and might with advantage replace his elder brother. The gate of the wall enclosing the city is still closed at 9 P. M., and this is a source of great inconvenience to passengers arriving by night trains.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

Jaipur.

13. The Jasus (Agra), of 14th August, says:—That it was arranged in consultation with the Resident that certain important cases disposed of by the members of the council should be placed before the Maharaja for order of confirmation, and that persons dissatisfied with the decision of the council could obtain copies on unstamped paper without payment of any copying fees and go up in appeal before the Maharaja in Council. For some time, such appeals were heard regularly on Thursdays, but the practice was soon relaxed, so that this highest tribunal of appeal has not had one single sitting for several years past. Another serious defect is, that the very member against whose order an appeal is preferred, sits in council with the Maharaja.

The Intelligence Department likewise has done nothing for several years past, and one Sheo Narain who did some good work recently, is in the bad books of the Prime Minister, while another clever detective, Mir Hasan, is hand and glove with Balji.

JASUS,
14th August 1906.

Jaora.

14. The Jasus (Agra), of 14th August, says that all the lucrative appointments in the state are held by non-residents of Jaora, who make as much money as they can, and leave the state when it suits their convenience; for instance one Ali Mazhar who was appointed as General Superintendent, has disappeared after embezzling a sum of about twenty thousand rupees from the state, as well as swindling the shopkeepers of several hundreds. The Chief Judge is so old and decrepit that his sarishtadar has to support his hand while he is signing papers. The residents of Jaora on the other hand get very low salaries and seldom rise to fifteen rupees per mensem.

The Police Department is at present attracting most of the respectable young men of Jaora, who however have no prospect of promotion all the same. The Superintendent of Police can hardly write his name properly. The Court Inspector is a capable man, and it is very much doubted if the department would be able to work, if these two officers were to withdraw from service.

AKHBAR-I-JASUS,
7th August, 1906.

Tonk.

15. The Akhbar-i-Jásus (Agra) of 7th August, complains of the bullying behaviour of one Abdul Rahim residing in Mohalla Deswalan in Tonk, an ex-convict who has been in police employ. He is constantly annoying respectable people to satisfy his enmity or his greed, and only recently he enticed away a respectable neighbour to an secluded spot, tied him hand and foot to a tree, beat him severely, and after wounding with a sword, left him on a charpoy at his door. He disappears after committing an offence, and returns home when the hue and cry is over. It is indeed strange why the Tonk police take no steps against this man.

JASUS,
4th August, 1906.

Tonk.

16. The Jásus (Agra), of 14th August, learns from a correspondent that the conduct and character of the sons of the Nawab of Tonk is unsatisfactory, that a certain person has been turned out of Tonk for teaching them bad ways, and that one of the sons of the Nawab has been confined to the kila.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th August, 1906.

The seat of the new High Court.

17. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 8th August, gives preference to Lucknow over Allahabad and says that if a choice is made from the United Provinces as a whole, Agra would be the best place for the location of the amalgamated High Court, because (1) it was the seat of the Sadar Dewani Adalat originally, (2) it is situated in the centre of the United Provinces, (3) it enjoys a pleasant temperate climate, (4) it contains the world renowned Taj Mahal and a large number of other beautiful buildings, (5) there is sufficient accommodation for the building and for those who come here on the transfer of the High Court, (6) the Prince of Wales gave preference to Agra over every other city in India on account of its beauty and good climate.

GHARWALI,
July, 1906.

The transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

18. The Gharwali (Dehra Dun) for July, says:—The question of the transfer of the High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow is not one which the Government can decide at an early date and suggests that the public interests will be thoroughly considered before any change is ordered. It gives preference to Allahabad, as there litigants can put up very comfortably with their priests and pandas.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th August, 1906.

Committal of accused to sessions without evidence in King-Emperor versus Lalla and others, section $\frac{457}{511}$, Indian Penal Code, Cawnpore.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th August, says:—The learned Judge of Cawnpore in a very able and instructive judgment acquitted the three accused, who were represented, and sentenced the fourth man Sultan Singh to transportation for life. The case is specially important for the remarks which the learned Judge has made on the committal order of the Magistrate, as regards the two accused Ram Charan alias Lalla and Abdul Aziz. It is not an uncommon practice with the mofussil Deputy Magistrates to commit all sorts of cases, good, bad, or indifferent, to the Sessions Court, without troubling themselves to see if the cases are worth committal, sometimes merely to remain in the good books of the police, in other cases from a feeling of hesitation to take the responsibility upon their shoulders.

(b).—Police.

ANAND,
17th July, 1906.

A high-handed proceeding of the police in Azamgarh.

20. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 17th July, received on 13th August, referring to the conviction of one Bijai Narain, a zamindar in the Azamgarh district, on a charge of assault, and his subsequent acquittal by the Hon'ble High Court, suggests that the police should be taken to task since their action has been held to be illegal.

ANAND,
17th July, 1906.

A dakaiti case at Allahabad and suspected complicity of the local police.

21. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 17th July, received on 13th August, referring to a recent dakaiti case at Allahabad says that it appears from the statement of one of the accused in court that the Kydganj police were aware of its being impending prior to the dakaiti. This is exactly a case of the guardians of our property playing the thief.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
31st July, 1906.

Police.

22. The Nasim-i-Agra of 31st July, received on 16th August, notes that thefts in the city are on the increase, and people have their pockets picked in broad daylight. The local police should have their eyes open.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th August, 1906.

High-handedness of a constable in Agra.

23. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th August, notices the conduct of a constable who was seen beating a respectable looking gentleman all along the way from Sabzi Mandi to the kotwali at Agra. The victim of this violence, who appeared to be a student, is said to have offended the constable, by pressing a biscuit-seller to supply him with some biscuits before giving the constable his perquisites. Be the cause of this altercation what it may, the course pursued by the constable is highly objectionable, and it is to be hoped that the city kotwal will show no undue favour to his subordinate in the matter.

INDIAN PUNCH,
14th August, 1906.

The tyranny of police.

24. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of 14th August, compares police officers to Shaddad, an oriental tyrant, and their circles to the garden of Shaddad which purported to be the facsimile of paradise. They have an easy time, and take part in worldly pursuits, for which they have more than ample time at their command. The scene of their visit is usually rendered nothing short of hell, and the inhabitants of the locality they visit have in this very world a foretaste of what a great sinner may expect to find hereafter.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

The Police arrangements in Agra.

25. The Jasus (Agra) of 14th August, says that the police in England and in India are both invested with the same powers, but the arrangements in India, particularly in Agra, are very unsatisfactory. For example ekkas going to the dárgáh of Shah Abu Ali have to enter through one route, and to effect their exit through another, but the rules on the subject are not observed owing to the laxity of surveillance and corruption on the part of the police on duty. It cites an instance of a gentleman being dragged through the bazar to the kotwali. The police again does not interfere when it should, for example they remained neutral during a fight between two banias in Rawatpara.

OUDH AKHBAR,
16th August, 1906.

Police.

26. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 16th August, refers to the murder in Kachhar of a European gentleman and eight chaukidars in 1893, and says that a dying declaration was made by a woman in the case, alleging that she and the rest of the deceased were assaulted most brutally by a Kabuli and certain residents of Kachhar. The then local police sent up for trial certain residents of the Mainpuri district who were convicted and sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge. The sentence, however, was not carried into effect, as the High Court upset the sentence. Ten men have recently been arrested in connection with this case. Of these three have made confessions. It is necessary that the then police should be called upon for an explanation and should be dealt with according to their deserts for having sent up seven innocent men for trial for murder in 1893.

QULQUL,
6th August, 1906.

Cheating by means of the value payable system.

27. The Qulqul (Bijnor) of 6th August, received on 18th August, warns the public of the disgraceful mode of swindling adopted by an anonymous sender of value payable parcels from Meerut, who, instead of giving his name in the prescribed form, enters the words Muhtamin ishaat Islam (the Manager of the Propagation of Islam). He sends a plan of the Kaba hardly worth half-an-anna and charges a rupee or two as its value.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR,

Contracts under the Excise Act.

28. The Khichri Samachar (Mirzapur), of the 11th August, invites the attention of Government to the standing orders on the subject of giving leases under the Excise Act and suggests that the amount of the lease should not exceed the average for the last ten years, and prays that these orders be kept in view by all concerned.

Repairs to the Bradlaugh Memorial Hall in the Punjab.

29. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 24th July, requests the Punjab Government to undertake the repairs of the Bradlaugh Memorial Hall which has been burnt recently, and suggests the desirability of Government abandoning the idea of purchasing the land for other purposes.

ANAND

System of levying octroi duty.

30. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 31st July, remarking on the innumerable hardships one is subjected to when taken to an octroi post, and the illegalities and iniquities of the persons who collect such duties, pray for the abolition of octroi duties suggesting the imposition of some other tax in its place.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR,
11th August, 1906.

Cholera in Mirzapur.

31. The Khichri Samachar (Mirzapur), of the 11th August, reports the outbreak of cholera in Mirzapur, and suggests special sanitary measures in infected quarters.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th August, 1906.

Shops for the sale of meat in Moradabad.

32. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th August, says that no intimation was given to the members of the Municipal Board that the question of closing certain meat shops was to be considered at the meeting held on 28th July last, that there is nothing to show where any shops are to be opened in place of the seven shops closed by the sub-committee, and that it is rather hard that males under the age of sixteen should not be allowed to go about selling meat in the city.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

Municipal arrangements in Agra.

33. The Jásus (Agra) of 14th August, says that the Municipal arrangements in Agra are very unsatisfactory :—The oil in the Municipal lanterns in certain quarters suffices to keep them burning only up to 10 P. M., while they are not lighted at all occasionally; the bazar and streets are not swept till 8 A. M. generally; the impure water of the closets is thrown in the bazar gutters, and this is liable to spread diseases; a stone slab is broken at one end of Kamboh tola, and there is danger of people stumbling over it.

Two of them need help by way of passage money. Any gentleman desirous of lending help in this good cause should communicate with the editor of the Advocate.

CITIZEN,
6th August, 1906.

Education in Eastern Bengal.

35. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 6th August, says :—From a laudable desire to promote education in all its branches, H. Sharp, Esq., M. A., the Education Minister of the autocrat of Eastern Bengal has issued a soul-thrilling bulletin dated the 29th of May 1906, addressed to the Inspector of Schools, Dacca.

* * * * * * *

The Bengalis are notoriously a nation of pumpkin heads. They are sadly wanting in manners. When they see a white man they do not immediately sink before him in abject humility with their hairs standing on end and tears starting into their eyes. What an enormity of bad manners! Many a time has Sir Bampfylde stared aghast. His precious heart was cracked in twain. Circulars were addressed to them but they failed to bring about the wished for consummation. Regulation lathies were aimed at them but to no purpose, so thick headed they are. But their failings were most conspicuous at Rangpur when they refused to put on the lal pagri, to accept the batons and to salaam Lulu Singh. Since then it appears that the wise men of Gotham were busy in devising a scheme to place matters on a more satisfactory footing. Their labour pains are ended. Mr. Sharp has brought forth the new circular. Our blessings on the new born!

It is an old and rusty adage that old parrots cannot learn. The reason why the experiment failed at Rangpur was that it was begun at the wrong end. Stiffened by age the hand refused to bend. We are horror-stricken to learn that the Pandit on whom was conferred the proud distinction of a Maha Mahopadhya, had received an education which was anti-salamic of a very pronounced type. What is education if there are no salaams? Education without salaam is a contradiction in terms. It is, therefore, that a scheme has been devised for regulating the lives of Bengalis by enforcing upon them the wholesome duty of salaming, and teaching them how to do it from the very lowest class of their school life. As they get promotion year by year, their hands would become more elastic; their heads more pendulous. And it may be fairly predicted that by the time they pass their Entrance examination, they will have matriculated in the science of salaming.

* * * * * * *

If this would be an obstacle to the improvement of the mind, it would surely be a great stimulus to the improvement of manners. This was a consummation devoutly to be wished for and the prospects are already very promising; for we are informed that the teachers of the various schools under the control of the Inspector of Dacca have centred their energies in propagating the cause of salaams, having all other duties as items of minor consideration. Coupled with the above is the strict rule about the levy of fines, if fees are not paid punctually. In the benign reign of Sir Bampfylde, in which famine thrives and men decay, the levy of fines is a rule as wholesome as it is opportune. If salaams are necessary for enforcing discipline among pupils, fines are no less necessary to bring some pressure upon their parents and guardians.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th August, 1906.

The M. A. Examination in Arabic.

36. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of 8th August, deplores the recklessness with which questions have been set at the last M. A. examination in Arabic. The number of papers set is only four, though six papers are set in Sanskrit and in other languages. This necessitates the incorporation of a large number of subjects within a limited scope. There is no separate paper for Grammar and Rhetoric, though they form a part of the prescribed course. The subjects for the several papers have not been classified separately. The examiner in this language has great latitude, and may or may not select questions from a particular book. The students find this very unsatisfactory. The first and second papers for this year though not so technical and severe as the third and the fourth, are nevertheless open to certain objections, while the third and the fourth papers clearly show that the examiner had made up his mind when setting them, that the candidate should leave the examination hall without even attempting an answer. The Oudh Akhbar of 17th August offers similar criticisms on the subject.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
8th August, 1906.

The progress of the Urdu language.

37. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 8th August, says that the first step towards the progress of the Urdu language is the union between Hindus and Muhammadans. This is the only dialect that is spoken all over India; and has been formed by the conjoint efforts of Hindus and Muhammadans, in spite of the somewhat hostile attitude of the Muhammadan conquerors, which showed itself for a long time after the conquest, by the exclusive use of the Persian and Arabic languages in poetry, romance, correspondence, prescriptions, proceedings in courts of law, &c. Urdu has become a language merely because the Indian public as a whole used it as the language of the country; so much so that the Hindu community likewise adopted it even in the formation of their names. It is to be regretted that certain Hindu public speakers seem to lose sight of the fact that they cannot weld India into one nation, so long as they do not have one language; and to discard Urdu as the one script for India will be to strike at the very root of Hindu and Muhammadan union as one nation.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR,
11th August, 1906.

Want of a free school in Mirzapur.

38. The Khichri Samachar (Mirzapur), of the 11th August, comments on the high scale of fees in schools, which renders it practically impossible for the poorer classes to educate their children, and suggests the advisability of establishing a free school for teaching Hindi, Urdu, and English, requesting Government and the District Magistrate to take early steps in the matter.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th August, 1906.

The Medical School, Agra.

39. The Nasim-i-Agra of 11th August, says that Western education generally has produced unwholesome results on the minds of the Indian youths. It deprecates the conduct of the students of the Medical School at Agra on the night of 3rd idem, and remarks that their conduct on the road in front of the Medical hostel is a source of danger and shame to women of all classes.

RAHBAR,
14th August, 1906.

The National Education Department.

40. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th August, says that now that Government is conferring all lucrative appointments on Englishmen and Eurasians, those who receive education in National Colleges will be none the worse for it; most of them will adopt some independent profession, or take up appointments in large manufactories. In case they fail to do this, private service will yet be open to them. These students will have a decided advantage over those trained in Government colleges. They will be taught frugality, and will, unlike the present day student, cease to hanker after such things as neckties, collars, cigarettes, boots, &c.

HINDUSTANI,
15th August, 1906.

The progress of Urdu.

41. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 15th August, commenting on the complaint made by the Aligarh Institute regarding the carelessness evinced by the Hindus towards Urdu, says that no sensible Hindu can ever think of forming the Indian nation independently of Muhammadans. It would no doubt help in the formation of a nation to have one language for India, but the English language alone can be such a medium. It is nothing but a dream to think that the Urdu or the Deva Nagri can supplant the several provincial dialects. Urdu cannot make any progress, unless steps are taken to make it a literature. The printing of Urdu books is by no means cheaper than of books in other languages. On the other hand labour is becoming dearer, type-printing has greater facilities, and no newspapers can be said to be self-supporting, in fact many are dying natural deaths after too short an existence.

Famine and land revenue.

42. The Zamindar-wa-Kashtkar (Bijnor), for June, received on 18th August suggests that Government should direct its attention to the mitigation of the hardships attending the realization of land revenue, and to the modification of such local laws as lead to compulsory litigation. The law in Bundelkhand, though calculated to lighten the burden of debts, has done nothing to reduce the payment of land revenue, though it is a well established fact that the crops for several years past have been a failure,

HINDUSTHAN,
12th August, 1906.

Agricultural conditions in India.

43. The Hindusthan (Kalakankar), of the 12th August, says:—The Government officers generally attribute the deterioration in the agricultural conditions of India to the conduct of the cultivators without any regard to the very precarious life that the latter live. The rent assessed by Government is so heavy that they always remain in perpetual poverty, so much so that they cannot have full meals, to say nothing of their being unable to improve agricultural conditions. When the time for sowing approaches, the cultivator borrows seed, often of a very inferior kind, from which nothing but bad harvests can result. It would be well if the Government help the cultivators with good seed or adopt the system introduced by the Government of the Central Provinces for the distribution of seed among the cultivators.

INDIAN PEOPLE.
9th August, 1906.

The fall of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

44. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th August, says:—When the services of a subordinate are dispensed with it is wiser to give him a month's salary in lieu of a month's notice. The mistake of procrastination was realised in the case of Lord Curzon. When he resigned he might have been relieved at once by Lord Ampthill, or any one else. Then there would have been no partition of Bengal, no agitation, and incidentally also, Sir Bampfylde Fuller would not have climbed to his fall. The whole affair has been lucky only for the Hon'ble Mr. Lancelot Hare, who has quite unexpectedly stepped into a Lieutenant-Governorship. The officiating Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal should have gone to Mr. K. G. Gupta, as the next member of the Board of Revenue, but the inconvenience of his claims has been avoided by the dexterity with which he has been placed on the important duty of counting the fish in fresh and salt waters in Bengal.

The Secretary of State for India displayed great patience in dealing with the problem in East Bengal. He obtained all the official reports. He showed no disposition to judge Sir Bampfylde Fuller in a hurry. His answers to questions in Parliament were irritatingly evasive. But he did not confine his inquiries to official sources alone. No real ruler of India ought to be content with official reports. Mr. Morley made independent inquiries. He satisfied himself that the state of things in East Bengal did not call for harshness, but for conciliatory measures. An innocent national cry had been magnified into a war cry. The indiscretions of schoolboys were represented as criminal and rebellious acts. On the other hand, the Government of East Bengal was industriously engaged in sapping the very foundations of British rule in India. The Lieutenant-Governor had more than russianised the administration. He had personally gone about intimidating the leaders of the people. He had prohibited religious and other processions. He had let loose armed men on a peaceful town, men who committed excesses as if they had been in an enemy's country. He had allowed his subordinates unrebuked to break up a constitutional public meeting and to assault, arrest and punish a number of inoffensive and some distinguished men. Lord Curzon had partitioned Bengal; Sir Bampfylde Fuller was driving half of Bengal into rebellion.

Considering the high position he held it has been practically dismissal, for no Lieutenant-Governor has in recent times been treated as Sir Bampfylde Fuller has been treated, and no one else merited it so richly. He is leaving East Bengal in disgrace and the whole country will rejoice. The thanks of a grateful and relieved country belong to Mr. John Morley and to him they will be rendered without stint.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th August, 1906.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

45. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th August, says:—Is the public quite satisfied with the ostensible reason of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation? There is this difference in public life in England and India that there is very little secretiveness in English official and public life, while in India it is very difficult to get at the truth. Thus, almost every one believes that the real reason of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation is something different from the one officially assigned. The reason is that in England there is a good deal more of sensitiveness than in India. Ministers resign as soon as there is a difference of opinion between them and the Cabinet on a serious question of principle or policy; officials do not care to retain office if they are overruled in a matter on which they hold a definite opinion. Discipline in the army is different, for there one has only to obey orders. There was a time in India also when high officials were very scrupulous on questions of principle, but the standard has now materially changed and no one thinks much of reversing in obedience to higher authority and without protest, what he had done before. This may be right in certain cases, but there is a limit where service discipline comes to an end and self-respect comes in. It was in fixing this point that Lord Curzon made a mistake and Sir Bampfylde Fuller, who is nowise an extraordinary man has erred in the same way. When he saw that the Secretary of State practically disapproved of all that he had done since his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of East Bengal he should have resigned at once, but he held on and went on revoking his orders until the public began to believe that he did not very much care how he was treated so long as he held his appointment. People therefore are to a certain extent justified in calling his resignation a recall.

BHARAT JIWAN,
13th August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation.

46. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 13th August, notices with satisfaction, the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller whose oppression was a source of much discontent all over Bengal. His oppressive measures, for example, the arrest and trial of innocent school boys, the dispersion of the Barisal conference, and his policy of "Divide and rule" which led to racial antagonism between the Hindus and the Muhammadans, have made him an object of hatred to the natives of India in general, and to those of Bengal in particular. The conduct of the Nawab of Dacca in convening a mass-meeting to protest against the acceptance of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation is, in every respect, calculated to injure the country. The editor concludes with congratulating the Bengalis on their freedom from the galling yoke of Sir Bampfylde Fuller and exhorts them to take to the swadeshi movement with renewed zeal and energy.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller and Muhammadan Indignation meetings protesting agains this compulsory retirement.

47. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th August, says:—Sir Bampfylde Fuller has left Dacca and shaken the dust of East Bengal from his feet. The Pioneer has published lengthy telegraphic reports of indignation meetings held by Muhammadans protesting against the action of the Government of India driving Sir Bampfylde Fuller into retirement. These reports must be taken with a very large pinch of salt. It is quite possible that the Muhammadans of East Bengal may feel grateful to Sir Bampfylde Fuller for his famous Muhammadan circular and his declared weakness for his Muhammadan wife. But the resolutions bear clear trace of being drafted by skilful hands and look more like a manifesto than anything else. There is the reference to the Muhammadans forming two-thirds of the population and the Hindu agitation is spoken of with rancour and contempt. Sir Bampfylde Fuller took up the Muhammadans simply to spite the Hindus, but no ruler can be allowed, so openly to flout the principle of equal treatment of all communities. He could have very well helped the Muhammadans, who have been always on excellent terms with the Hindus, without setting them up against the latter, and we are certain this dangerous and inequitable policy will never be continued. Mr. Hare is reported to have received full instructions from the Viceroy and there can be no doubt that he must have been cautioned not to promote a religious bitterness between Hindus and Muhammadans. Sir Bampfylde Fuller deserved censure for the barefaced and unwise manner in which he fomented discord between Hindus and Muhammadans.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
14th August, 1906.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal and Assam.

48. The Rafiq Punch of (Moradabad), of 14th August, expresses its extreme regret at the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and notes that the ghat in spite of a heavy rainfall at the time was crowded by a large concourse of European and Indian gentlemen and the public at large for about an hour and a half at the time of his departure. In the afternoon of the same day (6th August) a mass meeting consisting of thirty thousand Muhammadans from different parts of the province was held under the presidency of Khwaja Salim-ulla C.S.I., protesting against the acceptance of Sir Bampfylde's resignation, which they regard as an act of injustice to the Muhammadan community.

The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of 16th August, upholds the attitude of the public and of the Government towards Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and remarks that the British Government is always prepared to redress grievances when proved to be such.

The Anand (Lucknow), of the 14th August, commenting on the attitude of the Muhammadans, questions their loyalty to Government if such little things can lead them to characterise the proceedings of Government as unjust and tyrannical.

ANAND,
24th July, 1906.

Swadeshi sugar.

49. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 24th July, after referring to the revolting methods of refining sugar of European manufacture, exhorts Indians to use country sugar, which besides being much sweeter is free from objectionable modes of preparation.

EXPRESS,
2nd August, 1906.

India-made sugar in Upper India.

50. The Express (Lucknow), of 2nd August, says :—In Upper India, the demand for India-made sugar is growing greater. In all big towns of the Punjab and the United Provinces everywhere, one subject of talk in the bazars is how to drive away beet root sugar from India. In Cawnpore over 30 per cent. of the people have taken a vow not to use beet-root sugar. Sweetmeat-vendors using foreign sugar had to close shops. The halwais are putting up signboards declaring that if anybody finds beet root sugar in their shops they would pay a voluntary fine of Rs. 101. Meetings in the last week were held in Lucknow. What is more reassuring is that the question of supply is also receiving attention. In Unao, a Cawnpore Marwari firm of Ramnath Baijnath is setting up a big sugar mill, in Cawnpore another Marwari is getting out up-to-date machinery. In Shahjahanpur the khansaries are again up and doing; the cultivators who had taken to poppy cultivation are again growing sugarcane. In the Punjab two factories are being opened at Lyallpur and Peshawar respectively. The orthodox feeling against cheap sugar is very bitter. It can be driven away in no time if only there is constant supply and the cost of manufacture reduced. The cheapness of the German sugar is due to the sudden fall in the demand.

ROHILKHAND.
GAZETTE,
16th August, 1906.

Country-made sugar.

51. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 16th August, says that the sugar-eating public are in a very awkward position. When advocating the use of sugar of country manufacture, they feel afraid lest their confectioners should take advantage of the situation, and supply them with an admixture of gur and sugar instead of pure sugar. It is said that European sugar is refined by means of bovine blood, bone-ash and the fat and blood of swine; that it causes blood and bowel complaints, produces blisters in the mouth, and helps the spread of cholera. Pamphlets and advertisements are being published and circulated, while there are certain persons who do not wish to alter their old ways. The editor is of opinion that such an agitation can have no effect on foreigners when there is this difficulty about unanimity of opinion.

Dispersion of a meeting at Chandpur in Bengal.

ANAND,
24th July, 1906.

52. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 24th July, received on 14th August, condemns the repressive measures adopted by the district authorities in Chandpur in forbidding Maulvi Abdul Ghafur from delivering his lectures on the ground that they are calculated to cause disaffection against Government. This has caused a great sensation in the Muhammadan community. The editor hopes that the British Government will give the matter its full consideration before adopting repressive measures which he thinks are characteristic of the Russian Government, and have brought about its present misfortunes.

Claim for damages in connection with the dispersion of the Barisal conference.

ANAND,
29th July, 1906.

53. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 29th July, received on 14th August, suggests the desirability of His Excellency Lord Minto directing an enquiry into the conduct of the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police in dispersing the Barisal conference; and thereby putting a stop to the further progress of suits for damages against the two officers instituted by Mr. Rasul and Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee.

The Nawab of Shaidabad and the swadeshi movement.

ANAND,
24th July, 1906.

54. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 24th July, received on 14th August, says that the Nawab of Shaidabad in Barisal, has acted just as a Nawab would in directing his subjects to keep aloof from the swadeshi movement on the ground of its disloyalty.

Loans on Government securities and the swadeshi movement.

HINDOSTHAN,
10th August, 1906.

55. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 10th August, condemns the want of enterprise of well-to-do bankers who content themselves with the small interest on Government securities, and cites as an instance the loan of about three crores recently given by the residents of Bombay, suggesting that this sum could have been laid out most advantageously in starting factories for promoting Indian arts and industries, which would be an additional source of livelihood to thousands of starving Indians.

The swadeshi movement and students of the Saharanpur School.

MOHINI,
11th August, 1906.

56. The Mohini (Kanauj) of the 11th August, says that the Head Master of the Saharanpur school has interdicted the use of swadeshi articles by the students, and has ordered the school club to be closed owing to their debating on the swadeshi question. He has also forbidden them to read Congress literature. This makes the situation of the students very hard.

The swadeshi movement.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ
16th August, 1906.

57. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 16th August, expresses its satisfaction at the progress of the swadeshi movement which has a very wide scope in India, and condemns the conduct of persons who still use knives, scissors, soap and other little things of European manufacture.

Another unpleasant incident in Eastern Bengal.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
8th August, 1906.

58. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 8th August, says that a Muhammadan orderly chaprasi pulled an Indian by the ear for remaining seated and smoking his hukka, while the District Magistrate of Dacca passed through the bazar. The Indian shouted Bande Mataram, whereon the District Magistrate looked back, and finding the chaprasi chastizing the Indian, ordered him to desist, and to come up to his side. The shouts attracted a large number of men who thronged round him, and followed him with their shouts and threats, throwing some mud at him, as he was getting into the boat.

This is indeed very annoying, and this state of feeling, if allowed to spread into other districts, is calculated to produce most disagreeable results both for the rulers and the ruled. A policy of repression, however, may prove only a temporary check, and tend rather to inflame the public mind. It is impossible now to efface the present educated community, and to exclude the masses from education in future, so long as the British Government has any pretensions to being called a civilized nation. It is therefore necessary to adopt a policy of conciliation with the educated masses, and to prove by deeds that the English nation rules India for the good of the Indians.

ANAND,
14th August, 1906.

The Partition of Bengal.

59. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 14th August, says that the partition of Bengal took place on the 7th August 1905, and it is feared will be commemorated like the Ashra of the Moharram by the Muhammadans, unless the Government effects a reunion. History will transmit most unpleasant and heart-rending thoughts to posterity regarding this incident, and it is to be regretted that, when we will come to speak of the noble deeds of Lords Clive and Ripon and of Empress Victoria and His Majesty Edward the Good, we shall have to remember alongside of them the mournful incident of the Partition of Bengal.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th August, 1906.

Council Election.

60. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th August, says :—To-day the non-official members of the local Legislative Council meet in this city to recommend an Additional member for the Viceroy's Legislative Council. So far it has not transpired who are the candidates for this honour. It is not absolutely necessary that the non-official members should recommend one of themselves. Mr. Ananda Charlu was for some time a member of the Supreme Legislative Council, but he never was a member of the Madras Legislative Council. Just now Mr. Gokhale is not a member of the Bombay Legislative Council. If therefore any one could be named in these Provinces whose claims are superior to the present non-official members themselves, it would be their duty to recommend him. None such, however, can be named and the selection must be made from one of the non-official members of the local Legislative Council. There is no stir either at Allahabad or elsewhere. We do not know who are the candidates and on whose behalf canvassing has been going on. We do not even know whether the sitting member has offered himself for re-election. On the other hand, public opinion has spoken with no uncertain voice as to who should be elected to represent these provinces for the next term in the Viceroy's Council. The public opinion of both provinces is unanimous and emphatic. We do not sympathise with the hypercritical note of a correspondent who has disparaged, more by implication than in express terms, the claims of Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya. The public is more generous and more appreciative, and the desire is being everywhere expressed that the Pandit should be unanimously elected. We have no doubt that this view will be endorsed by the votes of the non-official members at to-day's meeting.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
14th August, 1906.

Indian members for the Viceregal Council.

61. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of 14th August, while referring to the anticipated election of Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya, suggests that considering the present attitude of the Hindus and the relative proportion of Hindus to Muhammadans, it is impossible ever to secure the seat for a Muhammadan unless such election is to be made by Muhammadans exclusively.

RAHBAR,
14th August, 1906.

The death of Lady Curzon.

62. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th August, regards the death of Lady Curzon as a Divine dispensation. Lord Curzon was the greatest enemy of India. God's wrath visited Lady Curzon three times and her husband taking no heed of the first two, the third removed her from this world. The partition of Bengal, and Lord Curzon's University speech have made the whole country his enemy, and his treatment of Indians has centred their minds on national improvement. He has thus succeeded in proving to the letter the truth of his farewell speech which he delivered when coming out to India, professing to try his utmost for India as he loved this country immensely.

ANAND,
24th July, 1906.

Prevention of opium eating.

63. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 24th July, suggests that measures may be adopted in India for the repression of opium eating as has already been done in China.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR,
11th August, 1906.

Desirability of posting Hindu thanadars.

64. The Khichri Samachar (Mirzapur), of the 11th August, suggests the desirability of posting Hindu thanadars at all stations within whose jurisdiction Hindu temples are situated, on the ground of convenience to pilgrims, and cites in support of its view the selection by Government of capable Hindu officers at the annual Magh Mela. The posting of a Hindu Sub-Inspector at Bindhachal is therefore requested as a necessity.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th August, 1906.

The views of a thoughtful American on India.

65. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 16th August, says, that no sight is more affecting than the political condition of India, which presents the piteous spectacles of poverty and misfortune. The moment a foreigner sees this country, he exclaims irresistibly that this poor country is approaching its end and is quickly approximating chaos. Innumerable promises and hopes are held out from time to time to console the Indians, but they are only evanescent like a pleasant dream, from which one wakes only to realize the stern realities of life.

Mr. Bryan the candidate to the office of the President of America, who has visited India, has expressed his feelings on the subject, and these cannot fail to move the hearts of persons reading his speech.

The editor remarks that Mr. Bryan's views must have wounded the feelings of the self-opinionated, selfish and arrogant Europeans like an arrow. Justice alone can place a country on a firm basis. The conduct of our officers may very well be likened to a beautiful flower without smell. They think that their treatment has made India great. There is no doubt that the new buildings erected, the old ones that have been repaired, and the sanitary arrangements of India are worth seeing! But justice is not to be met with in the country. The memory of only a few persons has been perpetuated in India who have been just and have refrained from trampling over the rights of their fellowbeings. The system on which the Government of this country is based is not in harmony with the views of the people, and it is this that has heaped misfortune upon misfortune on Indians. Mr. Bryan is of opinion that the British Government has spent crores of Indian money in making itself powerful, and brings pressure to bear on this poor country in a variety of ways so that it has been reduced to a state of starvation. Justice requires that the poor of India should receive help from the public treasury. It is most shameful that foreign countries should be asked to help India when occasion arises. It is no longer desirable that our wishes should be sacrificed in order to gain money. Indians have every reason to feel dissatisfied at the state of affairs, but their agitation should by no means be attributed to rebellious and mutinous feelings, rather to disappointment of their hopes.

HINDUSTHAN,
17th August, 1906.

Lepers in India.

66. The Hindusthan (Kalakankar), of the 17th August, deplores the miserable condition of the ever-increasing number of lepers in India, who go begging about in the streets and bazars, and appeals to the Indian public to take the necessary measures for their maintenance, and thereby prevent their remaining at large, for that is calculated to spread contagion. The paper commends the action of the Travancore State in this respect, and expresses a hope that our Government will share the cost of the movement when it takes a practical shape.

HINDI PRADIP
for August, 1906.

Administration of justice in British India.

67. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for August, says that the present system of administration is very different from what it was, when the country was ruled by Native chiefs, who levied taxes, and did all they could to help their subjects and then remitted the savings to the treasury. The country at present is in the hands of foreign rulers whose administration is based on money-making principles, which are injurious to the subjects. Napoleon Bonaparte called Englishmen a nation of shop-keepers. The Muhammadans on the other hand were like the Kshatrias of India, and treated Hindus as members of their own nationality when they came to be settled in India. In spite of all their faults they possessed the merit of the Kshatrias, and were not mean minded banias. Our administrators do not lose the opportunity of making money even by such means as the sale of refuse, bones and the like. They do us justice no doubt, but cannot get over their commercial instinct; they talk of ruling India for the Indians, but are actuated by selfish motives, and there is not one department which does not prove a source of gain in the long run. Posts carrying large salaries are held by Europeans, and are withheld from us in spite of our having the necessary merit to hold them. The law of stamps and its intricacies have a ruinous effect on litigants. The Education Department alone is not paying, and it is on this account that so many difficulties are cropping up in its way every day. The zamindars have to share the cost of education, and fees are rising every day. India is under foreign rule, and it is a mistake to expect our British rulers to administer the country like our Indian chiefs. The Indians have in spite of ages of slavery shown themselves in no way inferior to any other civilised nation. If the mercantile spirit of the bania could be eliminated from the nature of our British rulers they would perhaps be the best. All that is wanted is that the money taken from India be spent for the good of the country, and that superior appointments be conferred on Indians instead of being restricted to Europeans. Great Britain though a rugged unproductive hilly country is yet the richest on the face of the earth. This is due to the fact that India is its dependency.

CITIZEN,
6th August, 1906.

Insult to the Muhammadan community by an Anglo-Indian Journal.

68. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 6th August, says :—We take the following from the Bengalee :—An Anglo-Indian Journal writes as follows, commenting upon the closing of Wellington Square to the public :—"I noticed there was quite a gathering of dogs roaming about unmolested. I do not know if the habits of dogs are much better than those of Ali Baksh and Shaikh Soorkabacha." This is an insult to the entire Muhammadan community and the writer ought to be taught a lesson, so that in future he may write of them in at least gentlemanly terms. The Bengalee is perfectly right. We can have no patience with soor-ka-bachas, foreign or aboriginal, prime or cross bred.

MOHINI,
11th August, 1906.

Unfriendly attitude of the Englishman towards Indians.

69. Mohini (Kanauj) of the 11th August, deprecates the attitude of the Englishman in attempting to insinuate that the Bengalis are unreliable and disloyal, by publishing articles with headings such as "no Bengalis need apply." It suggests that such insinuations can have no practical effect on the mind of Government.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

The anniversary of Sivaji.

70. A correspondent of the Jasus (Agra) of 14th August, while commenting on a letter on this subject in the Jasus of the 28th July, says that the celebration of this anniversary does not in any way interfere with the Muhammadans. It was simply natural for Sivaji to act in the manner he did under the circumstances. A nation that wishes to live must worship its heroes. The relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans are very much altered from what they were in the days of Sivaji. They are now both the subjects of the same ruling power, and must live amicably. The Muhammadans again mostly live by handiwork, and their antipathy to the swadeshi movement will do more harm to them than to the Hindus.

The editor remarks that the present correspondent has misunderstood the former and will do well to read the letter in the Jásus of the 28th July a second time.

ANAND,
31st July, 1906.

The labourers of the Jute Mills in Calcutta and their grievances.

71. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 31st July, deprecates the attitude of the Pioneer in always attributing rebellious motives to the educated Indians, as it has recently done in attributing the representations of the jute labourers to Bengali agitation.

V.—LEGISLATION.

LAW JOURNAL,
1st August 1906.

Security for good behaviour.

72. The Allahabad Law Journal of 1st August, says :—There are few sections in any Indian statute which are more unobjectionable in principle and more capable of being worked in contravention of its real aim and object than section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

* * * * * * * *

In clause (3), section 117, it is laid down that for the purposes of that section, the fact that a person is a habitual offender may be proved by evidence of general repute or otherwise. The words evidence of general repute or otherwise have received a very wide interpretation in some parts of India, and it is high time that the Legislature should step in and either adopt that restricted meaning which is consistent with the liberty of the subject, or use some other expression which would not admit of an equally elastic interpretation.

A typical instance of the way in which section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, is worked in the Indian muffasil came before the High Court at Allahabad not long ago. One Ganga Ram was bound down to be of good behaviour, the allegation against him being that he habitually counterfeited coin.

* * * * * * * * *

The evidence consisted among others of the statement of one witness, who said that he had heard that Ganga Ram counterfeited coin since the date of Ganga Ram's arrest, and of another witness, who had the temerity to state that he was called at the thana to speak to the reputation of one Salig, and, while at the thana, he was asked to speak about Ganga Ram as well.

* * * * * * * *

The fact that a magisterial officer of some experience could unhesitatingly accept evidence of this description as evidence which the Legislature had authorized him to accept and to act upon, and that a District Magistrate who is expected to unite to a trained intelligence, some of the best instincts of an English gentleman, confirmed the order made by the court of first instance, would show the deplorable state of things that can prevail with regard to the administration of the preventive provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the wide latitude given to the expression "evidence of general repute."

That the provisions of section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and the following sections, as worked at present, are as often calculated to work mischief and individual hardship as to promote public good is known to everybody, who does not live in the country as an official, and is familiar with the people. There is absolutely no reason why in this class of cases an appeal should not be allowed to the Sessions Judge, who is naturally expected to hold the balance even between the executive view and the liberty of the subject. There is again no reason why the superior courts of criminal jurisdiction should blindly accept the findings of fact of the courts of appeal below and treat a criminal revision on the same footing as a second appeal. In cases under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, one often hears the observation made that no harm is done by making an order under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, as all that is needed is the furnishing of securities to be of good behaviour. This view overlooks the fact that in many cases persons are not likely to offer themselves as securities, if there is an impression abroad that they would incur the displeasure of the local police by doing so, and the securities, even if tendered, may or may not be accepted by the Magistrate at his discretion.

* * * * * * * *

Again, the penalty of not furnishing the securities called for is rigorous imprisonment. There is no reason why this should be so, for if the object of the section is prevention of offences, the mere detention of the suspected dangerous character is quite enough to deprive him of the power of committing mischief, and to exact hard labour from him seems hardly necessary in the welfare of the community for which all administrations exist.

BHARAT JIWAN,
13th August, 1906.

Excise Act.

73. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 13th August, supports the bill introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council recommending that trade in cocaine be brought within the purview of the Excise Act of 1896.

VI.—RAILWAY.

ANAND,
24th July, 1906.

Appointment of a treasurer of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

74. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 24th July, strongly protests against the appointment of the treasurer of the Punjab and North-Western Railway in the same capacity on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and recommends the appointment of a resident of these provinces.

CITIZEN,
6th August, 1906.

Apprehended strike on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

75. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 6th August, says:—The guards on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are in an unsettled state, and bogus telegrams are passing up and down the line apparently with the view of fomenting the strike. The leaders of the men have repudiated these telegrams, declaring that they are fully prepared to await the issue of their memorial now being considered by the authorities. Delegates from several districts waited on the Traffic Superintendent and matters were fully discussed. It was stated that a copy of the proposed new scale of pay and mileage, before being put into force, will be circulated among the guards for information, and any further reasonable alteration likely to benefit the men will be fully considered. The men had been previously informed that the questions at issue were being very carefully considered, and a proposal would be put before the Manager on his return from leave. It is hoped these assurances will allay the unrest.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th August, 1906.

European and Eurasian travelling-ticket checkers on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

76. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th August, remarks that European and Eurasian travelling ticket-checkers are being enlisted in place of the natives already dismissed. The expenditure thus incurred will be considerable, the daily allowance alone amounting to the pay of twenty-one ticket checkers. It is thus that the saving of a lakh and a half is to be spent. Can proceedings of this sort be said to be free from racial prejudices, and are they not to be regarded as the result of fellow-feeling?

JASUS,
7th August, 1906.

Corruption of the Native Press, and the contractors on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

77. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra) of 7th August, complains of the inconveniences to which the travelling public are subjected owing to the bad arrangements of certain refreshment contractors on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway; and notes that a Moradabad paper has accepted the paltry sum of Rs. 15 or Rs. 20 and engaged itself to uphold the doings of Chunni Lal and Muhammad Husain, contractors, while another paper issued from Bareilly has arranged matters in a like manner with Madan Mohan contractor, and accepted Rs. 25 for not exposing his shortcomings.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th August, 1906.

Sale of articles of food at Railway stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

78. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th August, says that it is very often noticed on this line that shops at adjoining Railway stations are often found to belong to the same person, though the agreement made with the contractors stipulates that they will employ two independent and rival shopkeepers at all big stations, so as to ensure satisfactory results.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th August, 1906.

Suggested improvements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

79. A correspondent in the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of 16th August, suggests the desirability of reserving a full compartment for pardanashin Indian women with proper arrangements for privacy, the necessity of attaching one intermediate carriage to each train, and the need of a zanana waiting room at all stations for intermediate class women.

CITIZEN,
6th August, 1906.

Strike of signallers on the Eastern Bengal State Railway.

80. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 6th August, says:—We have received a communication from Babus Kalipado Biswas and Shosi Bhusan Biswas on behalf of the signallers of the Eastern Bengal State Railway who recently went on strike, detailing some additional grievances of the men. We take the following extracts from the letter:—

Since the establishment of the railway there has been no addition to the number of signallers, though there has been a considerable increase in the amount of work. The present number of hands, therefore, can no longer cope with the increased amount of work. To add to the number of hands, a number of railway through wires are also to be increased, and a code system may be adopted to shorten the longer messages, thereby lightening the pressure of work to some extent. In the Government Telegraph Department a man has to dispose of 60 messages every day. This rule is, in our case, absolutely overlooked.

The nature of our duty renders us a prey to ill health; but we hardly get any true medical help. The small number of medical officers cannot find time to attend to us. Want of medical help compels us, therefore, to go very often on medical leave, causing pecuniary loss to us and loss of labour to the department.

We pray for occasional transpositions of signallers of first and third class stations for the following reasons: (a) The heavy pressure of work at a first-class station, if unremitted completely breaks down a man. (b) At a first-class station the work of a signaller is so heavy that he scarcely finds time to do other work. The signallers of a first-class station are compelled to confine themselves to the signalling branch even against their wish. They could become competent station-masters, if only they were given the opportunity of learning the work at a third-class station, where the work of a signaller is comparatively light.

Our privilege leave is all but a dead letter. We are therefore compelled to have recourse to medical leave even if on half pay. Our prayer is—(a) that we may practically have privilege leave for a month if we want it, and (b) that we may have casual leave for a few days—say 12—for any unforeseen calamity such as the death of a near relation, or the imminent loss of property.

Favoured with the sympathetic notes of the Traffic Superintendent and the Manager, we begged to be permitted to resume work yet a few of us have been dismissed altogether from the service. This is an extremely harsh order. We were all equally ready to resume work. The fate of two of our Saidpur brethren makes us hesitate to send a further representation of our grievances to the authorities. We therefore crave the favour of your kindly affording space to our representation and observations in your valued paper.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

The East India Railway strike.

81. The Jasus (Agra), of 14th August, says that the swadeshi movement has nothing whatever to do with the strike on the East Indian Railway, that the Bengalis would have acted more prudently if they had made a constitutional representation for the redress of their grievances, instead of striking work and that the attitude of the District Traffic Superintendent of Delhi in dismissing the strikers is extremely harsh, and it is desirable that they should be dealt with leniently and with consideration.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

The East Indian Railway strike.

82. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra) of 14th August, says that the clerks on the line live very economically, and such of them as are drawing over Rs. 30 can save Rs. 15 per mensem. They utilize the porters for their menial work, have practically no furniture, live on the simplest fare, and give their sons only such education as will enable them to get an appointment on the line. A shirt and a dhoti is all the dress they require. The case however of such of the clerks as are posted in city stations is rather hard, as they have to purchase everything locally.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

Platform tickets on the East Indian Railway.

83. A correspondent of the Jásus (Agra), of 14th August, complains of the disgraceful manner in which persons going on to the platform are treated, and cites an instance of which he was an eye-witness, at the Etawah railway station, where a certain person went on to the platform with the permission of the native assistant station-master. The man was stopped by the ticket collector on his way back, and on appeal to the assistant station master, he found the latter official adopt a very ungentlemanly attitude. The editor suggests that platform tickets should be introduced at all stations to obviate such difficulties.

OUDH AKHBÁR,
13th August, 1906.

The Railway Department.

84. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 13th August, says that the dismissal of a certain number of strikers is no doubt calculated to bring them to their senses; but the forfeiture of their Provident Fund is an extreme hardship on them and their dependants. It is to be feared that attempts to enlist men for the clerical staff from the Deccan and from Madras will prove unsuccessful, but such recruitment will be possible in the famine-stricken districts here and elsewhere.

A reference is made to the threatened strike on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway; and to the indiscriminate fines imposed on the clerical staff in the Examiner's Office at Lahore. A remission is suggested if such an imposition has actually taken place.

ANAND,
14th August, 1906.

Assault by two Eurasians on Indian ladies.

85. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 14th August, invites the attention of the Local Government to an indecent assault by two Eurasian railway employés on a number of Indian ladies travelling in a female compartment near Soron on the Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway. It notes that their honour was saved only by the timely intervention of a native guard, who, however, was severely handled by the assailants.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

The Meerut city Booking office.

86. The Jásus (Agra), of 14th August, says that the booking office of the North-Western Railway is situated at a very unsuitable place in Kamboh-darwaza, and adjoins the shops of dealers in vegetables on the one side, and the houses of low class prostitutes on the other.

ANAND,
14th August, 1906.

Proposed construction of a Railway line in Cashmere.

87. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 14th August, suggests that the State of Cashmere should reconsider the proposed construction of an extensive Railway line which, it is estimated, will cost about two crores of rupees. The traffic in Cashmere is very limited, and the line will be practically closed during the cold weather when people do not like to go there owing to the inclemency of the season.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

Latrines for natives in railway trains.

88. The Jásus (Agra), of 14th August, suggests that the present latrines are not suited to native requirements as Indians are accustomed to cleanse their bodies with water after easing themselves, and it is desirable that there should be separate accommodation for both purposes.

ANAND,
17th July, 1906.

Proposal for providing separate compartments in trains for lepers.

89. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 17th July, received on the 13th August, approves of the proposal to be considered by the next Railway Conference for providing separate compartments in trains for lepers.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

JASUS,
4th August, 1906.

Bearing letters.

90. The Jásus (Agra), of the 4th August, recounts the various boons conferred by the Post office on the public of India, and suggests a reduction on the postage due on bearing letters.

ROHILKHAND,
16th August, 1906.

The Head Post Office in Lucknow.

91. The Rohilkhand Gazette, (Bareilly), of 16th August, after a recital of the several beneficial changes introduced by the British Rule, expresses its regret at finding public offices located in hired buildings, and shifted from place to place according as occasion demands.

The case of the Sadar Post Office at Lucknow is cited in illustration.

This practice is calculated to lower the prestige of Government in the eyes of the ignorant masses, and to lead them to think that Government is extremely poor. The rent paid besides is at times exorbitant.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

HINDUSTANI,
25th July, 1906.

Religious endowments.

92. A correspondent in the Hindustani (Lucknow), of 25th July, invites the attention of Government to the endowments in Gorakhpur in particular as well as to those throughout the provinces, on the ground that the conditions of the endowments are not satisfied by those in charge.

ANAND,
31st July, 1906.

Management of endowments in India.

93. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 31st July, commends the action of the Chief of Travancore for the proper regulation of endowments, and suggests the adoption of similar measures in India.

SAHIFA,
12th August, 1906.

Pandit Yogindrapal's lectures.

94. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of 12th August, suggests the desirability of forbidding Pandit Yogindrapal from lecturing in the way he has elsewhere done in the Gurdaspur district. His language causes great offence to Muhammadans.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th August, 1906.

Muhammadans in Russia.

95. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 14th August, deplores the present lot of Muhammadans in Russia, and says that they are not allowed to perform their religious rites freely, though Russia has suffered considerably on account of its oppression, and has been defeated and disgraced by a small power like Japan. The defeat is regarded as a divine dispensation.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th August, 1906.

Flying serpent.

96. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th August, says that the Railway road between Lucknow Junction and Alamnagar has recently become infested by a flying serpent, and has since been practically closed. Every one of the seven persons bitten so far has succumbed under the injuries.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR,
11th August, 1906.

Mines in Mirzapur district.

97. The Khichri Samachar (Mirzapur), of the 11th August, points out the necessity for the appointment of an Engineer in Mirzapur, where the discovery of mines in the Bindhachal hills is expected to lead to beneficial results both for the Government and its subjects.

England and Turkey.

AKHBAR-SHAHNA-I-HIND WA TUTI HIND, 24th July, 1906.

1. The Akhbár Shahna-i-Hind wa Tuti Hind (Meeurt), of 24th July, received on 21st August, says that defeat sustained by a country in war is a precursor to its destruction. The Franco-Prussian War, the Russo-Turkish War, the Boer War and the Russo-Japanese War are cited as instances illustrating this view. Countries sustaining a defeat become bankrupt in spite of their vast national wealth, their prestige is lowered in the public eye, and loans can be contracted only on very exorbitant terms. The preparation for war costs billions, and the compensation demanded is a burden on the party defeated. It often happens that a small and weak Power can defeat a powerful kingdom. The Sultan of Turkey has very happily avoided several encounters, and has deemed it preferable to appear small for the time being in the public eye to hazarding a war. England will do well to think over the matter and to give up the idea of war with Turkey at present.

The Parliament for maintenance of peace in Europe.

AKHBAR SHAHNA-I-HIND WA TUTI HIND, 1st August, 1906.

2. The Akhbar Shahna-i-Hind and Tuti Hind of 1st August, received on 21st August, says:—The British Government has proposed the institution of a Parliament consisting of the representatives of all European Powers with a view to maintain peace all over the world. The proposal has been accepted by the Powers concerned, and the first Parliament will meet in India. We do not see any reason to attribute this proposal to sinister motives, to political craft, or to a desire to injure Turkey, as she likewise is a European Power, and will necessarily be represented in the Parliament. It will probably have no effect, as after the Hague conference no Powers interposed either in the war between England and the Boers, or in that between Russia and Japan. This goes to show that all plans to preserve peace will ultimately prove to be mere child's play, so long as every Power is trying to exceed another in its military equipment. A proposal to maintain peace can succeed only when the several Powers curtail their forces, and make up their minds not to increase them in future. It is to be borne in mind that if the present proposal is intended in any way to affect the interests of Turkey, certain European Powers, which are indebted to her and will likewise be represented in this Parliament, are sure to stand by her when occasion demands, as their interest consists more in maintaining friendly relations with Turkey than with England. France alone is at present expected to join England without reserve, but Germany will undoubtedly view their coalition with an eye of suspicion. England and Turkey cannot but be suspicious of each other, as this is necessitated by their political relations in the past.

One cannot however understand why this Parliament is to meet in India when its ostensible object is the maintenance of peace in Europe, and if it is intended to preserve peace in Asia also, why are Japan and China to be excluded from its sittings. It is desirable also that the Amir of Kabul be invited to the Parliament, lest he should regard his exclusion from it as a slight.

Japan and England.

AKHBAR SHAHNA-I-HIND, WA TUTI HIND, 16th August, 1906.

3. The Akhbar Shahna-i-Hind wa Tuti Hind (Meerut), of 16th August, commenting on the views of Al Bashir about the conversion of the Mikado to Islam says, it is desirable that the Lord Bishop of England should be the first proselyte, and then the rest of the bishops, who hold the reins of religion, as otherwise it will not be possible for King Edward VII to accept the faith of Islam. England being a greater power, the political needs demand that she should take the lead; and should France, Germany, America and certain other small Powers outdo Japan in the race for accepting Islam, England will regret her procrastination. With the conversion of the King Emperor his 22 crores of Hindu subjects might as well accept Islam as their faith; and then considering how it is circumstanced, Russia might be tempted likewise to embrace Islam. There then will be one universal religion free from all distinctions of creed and colour.

Struggle between the Conservatives and Radicals in Persia.

EXPRESS, 9th August, 1906.

4. The Express (Lucknow), of 9th August, received on 20th August, says that, with the exception of Japan perhaps, there is no country in the world where the grant of self-government to the people has not been attended with bloodshed . . . . .

The Shah is an autocrat. His influence in Persia is supreme. If he asserted his authority, he could bring about the necessary reforms without any bloodshed. But he is an easy going potentate; and, though sympathising with the views of the progressivists, it is hardly to be expected that he would use his best endeavours to keep the reactionaries under control. Fortunately the head and fount of bureaucracy, the Grand Vizier, has been dismissed. But the state of the country is still full of anarchy, and it is not improbable that foreign Powers may intervene, and, taking advantage of the disturbed condition of Persia, wrest further concessions from the Shah. If the country possessed a strong ruler, such a state of things would not exist. But, as affairs now stand, the situation in Persia is regarded with anxious concern by mankind in general, and by the Muslim world in particular.

HINDOSTHAN,
10th & 13th August,
1906.

Self-Government for India.

5. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of 10th and 13th August, received on 20th August, reproduces an article on the subject from a Rangoon paper from which the following extracts are taken :—The Anglo-Indians have come and ruled our country for over a century; and what do I, or any other Indian whose bosom is not heaving with unbounded passion for the filthy lucre of gold, find in them? In the Anglo-Indians I find a nation that has moulded political chaos into symmetry and order, disarmed the terrors that stalked the land in horrid sway, put down the proud conceits of the self-exalted tyrant, sowed broadcast the seeds of peace and plenty throughout the country, guarded our lives and property, hearths and homes, from the rapacious marauders who were "as flies," and redeemed, and are still engaged in the grand work of redeeming, the masses from the thraldom of ages. In them I find a nation that has fixed the princes in their powerful seats and given rest to their hands and happiness to their subjects, a nation that has used its genius and courage to abolish the infamous "sati," thaggi, infanticide, human sacrifices, and a multitude of infernal practices which had disgraced and terrorised India for centuries, a nation that is using its genial influence and magnanimous power to uplift and save the trodden-down races from the lowest depth of social ignominy and superstition.

* * * * * * * *

"The only circle in which the abolition created any sensation was that of the rich and orthodox Babus of Calcutta who resented the decision of Government, and more especially the promptitude with which it had been carried into execution, as it deprived them of the gratification of obstructing it." They therefore drew up a petition to the Government of India and afterwards to the Privy Council to restore the "sacred rite of Sati."

* * * * * * * *

Like your great model in the Spanish Romance, you have recorded immortal achievements. They are to be read in innocent school children flogged in the police court and then garlanded by heroic knights amidst weird eloquence and vulgar shouts. They are to be read in a big mob making a "gallant" swadeshi stand in the streets, but instantly "vanishing into thin air" at the sight of a policeman. They are to be read in the remarkable victory which the widest combination of bluff and boycott has won over the Partition of Bengal. Much cry and little wool. And above all they are to be read in that most ignominious of all national blunders, the notorious Sivaji-cult. What, sir, has Japan's sudden rise so stupified your intellects that you should vie with each other in making yourselves ridiculous in the eyes of the world? Have you none in all India to serve you for a model but that you should travel to a Western country and excavate hill and mole and catch a mountain rat, a rat that has gnawed into the very vitals of the Bengalis and, bringing it to your Capital, hold it up for the future god to guide the political destinies of the Indian races? . . . .

A story is current in Madras with reference to the great statue of the brave Munro, placed in the city, that in his time he seized upon all the rice depôts and starved people to death by selling the rice in eggshells at one for a rupee, and for his everlasting punishment, the Government has erected his statue and put it on an open place, that even the fowls of the air might insult him by polluting his face. The belief in this absurd story is so deep-rooted in the minds of the illiterate that not one of them, man or woman, would pass his statue without flinging a foul imprecation upon the immortal Englishman. This fact, insignificant as it is, shows how easily can the masses be seduced by the "interested wire-pullers," how dangerous it is to experiment the unbridled liberal principles of the Government in power, on a country like India, the most conservative on the face of the earth and consequently, how keen must Government's watch be upon the crowd of agitators, which swells day by day. You may be dabbling with your dummy politics without end, but I would thank your Congress to leave us with the Anglo-Indian rulers. "We trust them." We write those words in golden characters of eternal gratitude, and, if need be, we will write them with our hearts' blood. . . . .

Do you hate them because you enjoy, with no cost whatever, the constitution of their country, the most glorious in the world, which they had wrested from their despotic monarchs after shedding rivers of blood? But you are too prejudiced to be better. I know that to the very end you will continue to be the self-same chatterbox in the congress, a Hercules in the police court, a Napoleon with school children.

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

The need of a Provincial Organisation.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—In all talk about the need of giving a constitution to the Congress, one thing which comes prominently to our mind is the need of organisations for districts and provinces, in order to keep the people in touch with what is going on around. Cases of miscarriage of justice happen in every district which do not even come to public notice for want of such organisations. Newspaper agitation is not the only form of agitation. Submission of Representations from an organised body is the best method of approaching the Government to remove our long felt grievances or disabilities.

Let us hope that we shall soon be able to dispose of the preliminaries and make the first Provincial Conference at Aligarh a success, followed by the establishment of a political association.

ARYA MITRA,
16th August, 1906.

Discontent in Natal.

7. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th August, expresses its approval of the conviction of a public speaker in Natal for spreading disaffection amongst His Majesty's subjects, but at the same time suggests the desirability of some sort of lesson being given to officials, whose conduct is a source of discontent amongst the subjects.

AKHBAR NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th August, 1906.

The Boers and Indians.

8. The Akhbár Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of 19th August, congratulates the Boers on getting the same rights and privileges as Englishmen have in England. They will have a Parliament of their own, and elect their members. The distinction between the rulers and the ruled will cease to exist. The Boers refused to swear allegiance even after they had been totally subdued only a few years back, and bear a strong contrast to the Indians, who in spite of their uniform loyalty and faithfulness for a whole century, are looked upon not only as unfit for self-government, but also as something short of human beings. The Indians are much more faithful and respectful than the Boers, but their mutual jealousies and recriminations do not allow them to work in harmony and to achieve good results.

BHARAT JIWAN
20th August, 1906.

The convention between Great Britain and China relating to the Tibet Treaty.

9. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 20th August, referring to the convention between Great Britain and China relating to the Tibet Treaty published in the Pioneer of the 17th August, says:—It appears that the British and Chinese Governments will not, in any way, interfere with the administration of the Tibetan Government. The British Government will be able to connect the great commercial centres of Tibet by opening telegraphic lines, &c. It does not appear that the British Government in making a treaty with China has any ulterior object in view beyond establishing commercial relations with that country. The editor expresses his fears as to the future of Tibet, and remarks that the mission of the English to India likewise was purely mercantile.

INDIAN PUNCH,
21st August, 1906.

India and England.

10. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of 21st August, contains a dialogue in verse between England and an Indian. The following is supposed to be a reply given by the Indian on England finding him sighing, and asking him how he accounted for his miserable plight, as his country was a very prosperous one and had made England so wealthy:—

Reply :—Oh! my mother's sister, you have made me bankrupt, and brought about my ruin, by entangling some (of my sons) in the meshes of your daughters, by giving some a peg of whisky, by sowing the seed of dissension broadcast, by having Bengal partitioned, by placing Nawabs and Rajas against one another, and by creating difficulties on the frontier. You set people fighting, cheer up the winning party, and keep aloof from your friends and proteges if they sustain a defeat, charging them with foolishness and cowardice.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

OUDH AKHBAR,
21st August, 1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

11. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 21st August, remarks that India has in recent years been entertaining a large number of royal visitors. Our next visitor, the Amir of Kabul, is expected to come here in November next, when a darbar will be held in Agra to commemorate his visit. India is a most fortunate country owing to its having entertained in recent years so many royal visitors both at the cost of the public and the Government treasury. The late Amir of Kabul was the friend of our Government, the royal diadem was placed on his head and he was the guest of our sovereign at Rawalpindi. His successor is now coming to pay a friendly visit to India, with a view to oblige Indians thereby. What the Amir was before he came to be the ally of our sovereign is known to everybody.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th August, 1906.

Rampur.

12. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of 16th August, says that rumours of all sorts are afloat in Moradabad, amongst them the following :—(1) that certain of the associates of the Nawab including Karamat-ulla Khan, jailor, have been banished from Rampur ; (2) that the Nawab has solicited an inquiry into the conduct of Shaikh Abdul Ghafur Khan, ex-minister ; (3) that the heirs of Mansab Ali have telegraphed to the Government of India praying for an inquiry ; (4) that there is a party working against the Nawab at Rampur and at Moradabad.

NIZAM-UL-MULK
16th August, 1906.

Rampur.

13. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of the 16th August, suggests the advisability of the Nawab of Rampur appointing a council for the government of the state, with his brother Nawab Manjhu Sahib, who is at present in England and has received sound training, as vice-president. The Nawab should be himself at the head of the council, and should be able to discard such of his associates as waste his time in useless matters.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th August, 1906.

Illegal proceedings of a Tahsildar.

14. A correspondent in the Indian People (Allahabad), of 12th August, says that the Sub-divisonal officer transferred three connected cases to the tahsildar of Nakur. In one of these one Mansab Rai charged six Turcomans with rioting, in the second Mansab's witness Kundan charged them with beating him while he tried to separate the parties in the original case. The third case was brought by one Zinda Beg, a Turcoman and relation of the six accused, charging Kundan with forcibly rescuing his cattle which he (Zinda Beg) was taking to the pound.

The tahsildar instead of trying the cases together and pronouncing judgment on one day, first heard the case of Zinda Beg, and, holding his story to be false, acquitted Kundan.

The accused then filed three successive petitions for adjournment of proceedings under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, which the tahsildar refused ; and another for transfer to the court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate who likewise rejected the application. A long petition was sent to the District Magistrate who could not entertain it, as it had been sent by post instead of being presented according to law.

The demeanour of the tahsildar subsequent to the petition for transfer was full of prejudice, and eventually five days before pronouncing judgment in the two cases, he called upon one of the accused to show cause why he should not be dealt with under section 228, Indian Penal Code, for contempt of court. The Magistrate then and there, in the absence of the accused, took statements on oath of two of his subordinates and of a mukhtar who happened to be present in support of his own order. Then he sent the culprit at once to the lock-up, refusing to release him on bail on the ground that he might abscond Three days after he convicted and sentenced all the accused to fifteen days' rigorous imprisonment, and a fine of Rs. 30 each. He then sent Mansab's case for enhancement of punishment under section 349, Criminal Procedure Code, to the Sub-divisional officer, and the case of contempt to the District Magistrate, mentioning that his life was in danger, and that an exemplary punishment was called for in the case.

The facts of Mansab's and Kundan's cases were such that a conviction could not be sustained on their merits.

On an appeal being filed against the judgment in Kundan's case, the sub-divisional magistrate forwarded the record of Mansab's case to the district magistrate, at the request of the prisoner's counsel, with a view that both may be heard by one tribunal.

The learned District Magistrate, Mr. Boner, after patiently hearing the counsel for the prisoners on the facts and on gross illegalities committed by the tahsildar quashed the sentences passed in Kundan's case, and acquitted the prisoners in Mansab's case. The learned District Magistrate in his judgment elaborately dwelt upon the illegal and prejudiced action of the tahsildar in both the cases.

As regards the contempt case, holding that he could not deal with the case under section $\frac{482}{349}$, Criminal Procedure Code, according to which it was submitted to him, the learned District Magistrate sent the record to the file of the Sub-divisional Magistrate for a regular trial.

Such cases show how the tahsildars, who have no education and who are promoted from lower grades in service, prove incompetent and unfit to administer justice.

ALAMGIR,
15th August, 1906.

Distribution of justice between Europeans and Indians.

15. The Alamgir (Aligarh), of the 15th August, says that exemplary sentences of rigorous imprisonment are meted out to Indians for assaulting a European, but in cases where Europeans attack Indians an apology suffices to bring proceedings to a close. In like manner Indians are sent to jail even for gazing amorously at a lady, but a fine is looked upon as an adequate punishment for European guards who go even so far as to dishonour Indian women in female compartments. A European has recently been let off with a fine of Rs. 200 for assaulting the well known Professor Gajjar's wife, whereas a native tailor received twenty-three (?) years rigorous imprisonment for assaulting a Christian girl in Ludhiana.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
16th August, 1906.

Anticipated breach of the peace in Seb-ka-Bazar in Agra.

16. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra), of 16th August, says that subscriptions are being collected by Saiyid Bakar Hasan and Shaikh Ahmad Hasan to help in the institution of a civil suit against Lala Saligram, who, on being ordered by the Joint Magistrate to pull down a wall adjoining a mosque in the Seb-ka-Bazar, Agra, pleaded that the question involved was one of right and should be decided by a competent tribunal. The locality was inspected by the Joint Magistrate in connection with a case of breach of the peace instituted by Lala Saligram against one Alimuddin, watch-maker.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st August, 1906.

Assault on a Madrasi girl by a Eurasian.

17. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st August, deplores the ever-increasing oppression and tyranny of Europeans and Eurasians in India, and speaks of the case of a Madrasi girl ravished at Midnapur by one Mr. Donamy, a Eurasian Railway employé, who has been released on bail. The case has caused much sensation and the public are anxiously awaiting the result of the trial. Not long ago a poor Chamar, nearly shot dead by a European gentleman in the same province, was allowed a nominal compensation of Rs. 5 only, and the editor therefore is afraid that exemplary punishment will not be meted out to Mr. Donamy for outraging the chastity of the poor Madrasi girl.

AWAZA-I-KHALAQ,
24th August, 1906.

The Honorary Magistrates of Benares.

18. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 24th August, says that the Honorary Magistrates of Benares are not doing justice to the cases entrusted to them, some on account of strong racial likes and dislikes, some owing to backdoor influence brought to bear upon them, and some again owing to very poor educational and legal acquirements.

The editor suggests that only such persons should be made Honorary Magistrates as have good educational qualifications in addition to family prestige, and that they should be required to pass a prescribed examination like stipendiary magistrates.

(b).—Police.

AKHBAR SHAHNA-I-HIND WA TUTI HIND,
1st August, 1904.

The police of India.

19. The Akhbar Shahna-i-Hind wa Tuti Hind, of 1st August, received on 21st August, says that the high-handedness of the Police is due to the backward condition of the country, but in spite of all its faults, the elimination of the police force is calculated to spread anarchy all over India. One cannot blame the police, for the Government has to consider the nature of its subjects. A country, in which the people are torn by internal dissensions, and of which one class is bent upon ruining another, richly deserves to be ruled with a rod of iron. The police has to cope with great difficulties. It is the duty of educated people to help the police in bringing bad characters to book, and to check the police if it attempts to get good people into trouble without reason. In India, however, where we do not have an educated public, the entire burden of redressing wrongs lies on the Government, and it is on this account that policemen do not take warning, in spite of exemplary punishments.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th August, 1906.

Wrestling in Cawnpore, and the police.

20. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th August, notes that there are complaints against the police placed on duty at the wrestling amphitheatre (dangal) at Anwargunj in Cawnpore. They are reported to take their friends inside without tickets, and to adopt an unpleasant attitude when the proprietors and managers demand tickets.

ARYA MITRA,
16th August, 1906.

An assault on the Kotwal of Allahabad.

21. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th August, is surprised to hear of a raid by some bad characters on the house of the Kotwal of Allahabad, who however succeeded in effecting his escape, but his orderly constable has been wounded dangerously. The people are said to be more in dread of the police in these provinces than elsewhere, and it is suggested that the police here break the law with impunity in most districts.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th August, 1906.

The police and the medical students at Agra.

22. A correspondent in the Indian People (Allahabad), of 19th August, says:—On Friday, the 3rd instant, there were Hindolas in the temples at Rawatpara. There was a large number of visitors, both men and women. They visited one temple after the other, pushing and being pushed in their turn as they passed through the crowds. Amongst the crowds were some medical students. Some three of them left one of the temples by the door meant for women and cut vulgar jokes with them. According to the version of the police they even laid their hands upon them. The servant in attendance remonstrated against their conduct and called the police to his help. After the use of hot and abusive words there was an exchange of blows. One constable and two or three students received some simple hurts and at that time it ended with the arrest of two students. One was taken to kotwali, and the other to Thana Chatta. Those who had escaped hurried to their hostel and informed their friends of what had happened. In a few minutes they gathered together and without dressing or making any other preparations they went to the kotwali. They requested the Kotwal to let go the students he had got arrested, and he, finding the situation awkward, complied with their request. But he could liberate only one student, because the other one was at Chatta. So from the kotwali the boys proceeded towards the Chatta. In the meantime the Superintendent of the hostel had informed the Civil Surgeon, Principal of the Medical School, of the arrest of his boarders, and was on his way to the kotwali and the Chatta thana.

It is heard that the Kotwal, who is considered very polite and courteous, spoke politely to the students, but at the same time he at once telephoned to the Thanas for force and telephoned his instructions to the Sub-Inspector of Chatta.

Having arrived at Thana Chatta the students asked the Thanadar to hand over the other student to them. The Thanadar told them he could not do anything without consulting the Kotwal, who he said would be shortly coming. Thus he managed to keep the students waiting for about an hour. Then the Kotwal arrived. There were about 200 constables and four or five Sub-Inspectors with him. The students were surrounded. The Kotwal asked them in a threatening tone to sit down upon the ground, which the students refused to do. He began to swear, and with a great force he struck his lathi upon the ground. Upon this there was confusion all round. Everybody seemed to be running for his life. The police struck right and left. Many others, besides the students were assaulted. Some of the students received injuries and four of them were arrested. Others came back to the hostel. The Superintendent of the students gave the Principal's letter to the Kotwal, and requested him to let the boys go with him. The Kotwal began taking the statements of the arrested, and while this was going on, one of the Hindu Sub-Inspectors, who is said to have gained great unpopularity, slapped one of the students. There was no disturbance just then, and that particular student is said to have done nothing offensive. He was arrested, simply because he could not run fast. Only a few days before this occurrence the Sub-Inspector's father was a patient in the hospital. This student was on special duty with his father, and this is the way how this Sub-Inspector rewarded the poor student. After taking their statements the students were allowed to return to their Boarding-house.

On Saturday, the police authorities were busy with the witnesses whom they wanted to produce against the students.

The students were informed that they were to be prosecuted under sections 332, 353 and 354 of the Indian Penal Code. They came to Pandit Govind Sahai Sharma, barrister-at-law, for advice. The latter rebuked them and advised them not to misbehave in future. He also advised them to request some leaders in Rawatpara to excuse them their fault and folly, and on their behalf requested the Rawatpara people to think over the matter. He pointed out to them that to drag the students into criminal courts would mean great inconvenience and trouble to hundreds of families outside Agra. What they wanted was that such things should not occur in future, and this object could be achieved more satisfactorily by having them punished departmentally than in the criminal courts. The Rawatpara people were kind enough to accept these terms. Then the Principal was interviewed. Mr. Sharma explained the whole thing to him, and advised him to write to the District Magistrate requesting that the matter should be taken out of the hands of the police, and the Principal would punish the boys severely. It is reported that the students have been punished departmentally, and the District Magistrate has agreed to let the matter rest there. It is hoped that in future the relations of the medical students with other people will be more satisfactory.

RAJPUT,
15th August, 1906.

Consumption of liquor.

23. The Rajput (Agra), of 15th August, expresses its surprise at the ever increasing income from excise shops, the more so as India is reduced to a state of extreme penury.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th August 1906.

Mr. Morley's Budget speech.

24. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—If any one could make up his mind to give India a large measure of reform it would be Mr. John Morley, but even he is not disposed to go very far. . . . In reality it is neither Sir Henry Fowler nor anybody else that is responsible for Mr. Morley's attitude. The responsibility and the blame belong entirely to us. India is the most valuable possession of the British Empire, but it is also the easiest to hold. Unless there is pressure from inside why should the ruling power trouble itself to confer more privileges upon the country than are unavoidable?

* * * * * * *

All this (disregard of the Congress) is now changed by the treatment accorded to that movement (the Congress) by Mr. John Morley. It must be now taken as a serious factor in the administration of India, a force which it is neither expedient nor wise to ignore. The Congress will be now certain of a respectful hearing from the authorities in India.

ANAND,
21st August, 1906.

Budget in the Legislative Council, Bombay.

25. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 21st August, says that the Governor of Bombay, while debating on the Budget question in the Legislative Council, bestowed encomiums on the fortitude displayed by the Deccanese in these hard times. The editor while fully appreciating the value of the praise conferred, requests His Excellency to take necessary measures to alleviate their sufferings, as they cannot hold out long as they have begun.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Cholera in Aligarh.

26. A correspondent in the Indian People (Allahabad), of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—" Cholera is now assuming epidemic form here. It has been amidst us for well nigh on three weeks and has claimed many victims, but the beauty of it is that till about three days ago only one case was reported And this when we have got a Health officer, whose duty is to report the mortality. Some people believe that by reporting such cases a scare is caused among the people. This is a good principle no doubt, as it gives plenty of rest and saves a good deal of worry, but unfortunately those who lock the stable-door after the steed is stolen have to repent pretty long. Duty wants us to take immediate steps to arrest the spread of such a dire disease and for a responsible person to sit quietly at such a time because of the fear of a scare is almost criminal.

Our old Assistant Surgeon who had been promoted to a Civil Surgeoncy is come back again. It is said that before he had been a few months in the district he had managed to fall foul of his assistant surgeon and other people, and consequently he has been again sent back as assistant surgeon. If he is reverted as a punishment to him, then there is no reason why he should have been inflicted upon us. He has been sufficiently long in the district, and I believe a change is now most desirable in the interest of others as well as his own."

Roads in the Native quarters of Cawnpore.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—A correspondent who had an opportunity to visit Lucknow, Benares, Allahabad and Cawnpore during the last week writes to say that the roads in the native quarters of Cawnpore are the worst. The roads are one long stretch of mire over which pedestrians can only walk without shoes, and the horses cannot trot without splashing.

COLONEL,

Municipal arrangement in the Lal Masjid quarter.

28. The Colonel (Moradabad), of 16th August, notes that fish are cut and exposed for sale on the ground in the fish market near the Lal Masjid. The ground there being sandy absorbs all the blood and stinks extremely. Besides three municipal carts stand at a short distance from the public latrine there, so that the residents of this quarter are subjected to great inconvenience.

Octroi rules in Deoband.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—A correspondent from Deoband complains that octroi rules have been so stiffened that the traders find it difficult to carry on import business, and asks the district officials to see that the trade of the place is not killed by the overzeal or negligence of the Municipal officials.

ADVOCATE.

The Lucknow drainage works.

30. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—The municipality ought not to grope in the dark ; before it takes the next big drain in hand, it ought to know its probable cost, and tell the citizens from where it is going to find funds.

Up to the present Rs. 7,00,000, have been spent on the Moulviganj and Patanala drains. Of this sum, Rs. 4,00,000 have been contributed by the Supreme and the Local Governments and Rs. 3 lakhs given on loan by the Local Government in May last. There are yet bills of about 2 lakhs to be met. We have a right to know if this expenditure of money has been checked and controlled by any proper authority. On behalf of the Government such works are generally supervised and controlled by the Sanitary Engineer, who in this particular case has not thought it his duty to check the expenditure of money under the orders of the Drainage Engineer, perhaps because he was not paid his fees for doing so.

* * * * * * *

Thus an expenditure of Rs. 8 to 10 lakhs has been incurred without any proper control on the part of the municipality beyond that of the expending officer.

Mr. Lane Brown is a capable Engineer. We do not know if he is a good accountant also. He is a busy man, as he has to look after the drainage works of a number of other municipalities. So to expect that he would supervise the minor details of every item of expenditure is to expect an impossibility. We think that in this matter the Lucknow Municipal Board has failed to do its duty. In justice both to the Government and the citizens, it should appoint a Sub-committee to go through the accounts of the drainage works and to lay before the Board a correct statement of its financial position in this respect. Now that the auditors of the Government are examining the municipal accounts they may be asked to go through the accounts of the drainage works. As for the future we think the municipality should make up its mind not to re-construct other drains in the manner it has constructed the Patanala and Moulviganj drains.

* * * * * * *

We must call a halt to drainage works, and see that any further loan which we are compelled by the circumstances to ask the Government to give us, should be for purposes the urgency of which is undisputed. The greatest care should be taken that the money so taken is spent with the greatest possible economy, and no occasion given to the people to accuse the Municipality of extravagance and carelessness as they do in the matter of drainage works. It should be borne in mind that municipal taxation has reached the highest limit and that the people will not and cannot bear any further burden without a severe growl. Such a course in these days of scarcity and hardships to the poor and the middle classes will be a great blunder.

HINDUSTANI,

The municipality of Lucknow.

31. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 22nd August, suggests that since about nine lakhs of rupees have been spent on drains and gutters in Lucknow, the work done should be closely scrutinized and the public asked as to the continuance of the work, that the municipality is in debt and it is necessary to consider the desirability of taking further loans which are sure to sit heavily on the present and the succeeding generations.

NASIM I-AGRA,
19th August, 1906.

Ekka and carriage stands in Agra.

32. The Nasim-i-Agra of 19th August, suggests the abolition of ekka and carriage stands from the Kinari and Tarkari bazars, (lace and vegetable markets) in Agra. These stands were abolished some years back, on the ground that the locality is a very crowded one; and, besides there being every possibility of people getting hurt, pocket-picking is facilitated by the attention of wayfarers being diverted, as ekkas and carriages looking out for hire are constantly plying along the bazars. People attribute the existence of these stands to various reasons, amongst them the want of interest evinced by the District Magistrate, the Municipal Secretary and the members of the Board, who it is said do not pay surprise visits to different parts of the city.

CITIZEN,

Levy of octroi duty at Allahabad.

33. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 20th August, says :—We strongly protest against the existing method of levying the octroi duty from the personal luggage of travellers coming to Allahabad. This has become the topic of general complaint. No sooner they cross the railway portals, than the passengers are simply pounced upon. Sahibs are generally allowed to go unmolested for to do the octroi people justice they are by no means colour blind. If, however, there happen to be any natives they are peremptorily marched off to the barrier with all their bundles and baggages. There they are kept waiting for a very long time because the method of inspection is very far from being systematic, and the period of their detention varies with the number of passengers and the quantity of luggage they happen to carry. It is conceivable how bothering this is to the poor passengers who are mostly travelworn pilgrims, who at the end of their journey badly require some rest. While the octroi people are so particular in levying duties from the passengers, they do not think that they owe any duty to the latter to provide them either with seats or to attend to their convenience. To the best of our knowledge, at Benares or Cawnpore, octroi is not levied on the personal luggage of passengers. If the authorities would see their way to abolish this system at Allahabad they would earn the gratitude of a very large portion of the Indian population of Allahabad and abroad.

EXPRESS,
9th August, 1906.

Muslim colleges in India.

34. The Express (Lucknow) of 9th August, received on 20th August, says that the annual dinner of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College Association held on the 10th July under the presidency of Sir Charles Lyall, was an interesting function. The loyal toast was proposed by the chairman himself, who remarked that the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the college on their tour in India had done the institution a great deal of good and Their Royal Highnesses' gift of money had resulted in the foundation of a school of Science . . . .

In proposing the toast of the college, Sir Walter expressed the opinion that one college like that of Aligarh was not sufficient for such a vast country as India, and suggested that institutions, run on similar lines and having similar ideals, should be started in other parts . . . .

We wonder what the effect of these weighty pronouncements of such distinguished authorities will be on those who think that there is no need for any other Muslim College in India till the Aligarh institution has acquired the highest possible level of efficiency. The necessity of having a Muhammadan college in every province is so obvious that it is amazing to find some people denying it. Mr. Badr-ud-din Tyabji also pointed out the crying need of female education among the Muhammadans of India, and thought it a great reproach to the Indian Muslims that they neglected it.

ADVOCATE,

Education or Inspection.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—There has been an enormous increase—nearly fifty per cent. in four years—of expenditure on the administration arising from the multiplication of Inspectors, advisers, and other highly paid officials. In other words, the increase of expenditure on officials has risen at twice the rate of that devoted to education generally. Then our contemporary applies the observations to India in order to show how money meant for the spread of primary and secondary education has been misapplied, if not misappropriated, towards helping those already well off. . . . . . .

Well what is the good of having a number of Inspectors unless we have a large number of schools to impart instruction? Not that we have got more than enough supervisors, but that we want an enormously larger number of schools first. The thing itself should first be had, and then will come the time to see how it works or how it should be improved upon.

Text-books for Female Education.

36. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—As a result of the labours of the Committee that was appointed by the Local Government sometime ago to consider the whole question of Female Education in these Provinces, a Sub-Committee consisting of Mr. Karamat Husain, Pandit Bhagwan Din of the Meerut Arya Samaj, Miss Arundale of the Hindu Central College, a lady representative of the Church Missionary Society, and two Inspectresses of girls' schools, is going to sit at Allahabad on the 21st of this month and subsequent days to consider the lines on which the text-books for girls are to be prepared. This is a move in the right direction, but we cannot help remarking that the selection of members is not as happy or catholic as it might have been.

Electrical Engineering at the Allahabad Christian College.

37. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—The authorities of the Christian College, Allahabad, have opened an Electrical Engineering Department in connection with their college. It is a pity that people have not yet taken advantage of this opportunity of imparting to their wards a training in this useful branch of study. The prospectus issued by the Principal of the college shows that practical training in mechanical engineering and workshop practice will form part of the course of the new Department. The services of a competent specialist, Mr. H .T. Avey, B.M.E., of the Iowa State College, U.S.A., have been retained, and he has been placed in charge of the Electrical Engineering Department of the college. The Christian missionaries have always been the pioneers of education in this country, and much credit is due to the authorities of the Christian college for having opened this useful branch just in the nick of time, when the Swadeshi movement has given an impetus to technical education in the country at large. The course of study in this Department comprises a three years' course in which science, mathematics and English will be taught in addition to the special subjects, viz. drawing, surveying, machine design, dynamo-electric machinery, pattern-making, metal-working, Power plant and Electrical Installations and other connected and subsidiary subjects.

* * * * * * *

It was left for missionary enterprise to start a technical class in connection with their college which to a certain extent is bound to facilitate the study of engineering in these provinces, and we wish our countrymen should take proper advantage of the opportunity offered to them.

38. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra) of 16th August, notes that the Principal of the medical school has rusticated one student for good, and two for a term of one year each in connection with their recent altercation with the police. He has besides suspended the scholarships of certain students for a fortnight and of certain others for a whole month.

The Department of Labour in America.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th August, 1906.

39. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 19th August says :—There is no chance of our Government establishing a Bureau of labour, but if our leaders of the Industrial Conference desire to do something permanently good and useful to the country at large, they can do nothing better than to adopt some of the methods of the Bureau of labour of America, and employ whole-time agents and specialists at first to collect and collate all available information on every possible subject of interest, connected with the industrial improvement of a country all over the world, and then to make the said information easily available to all who desire to benefit by it.

A National scheme of education.

ADVOCATE,
19th August, 1906.

40. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 19th August, says :—Tuesday evening was inaugurated in Calcutta a new era in the annals of the Bengali nation. The people undertook a task that was truly national and without a due performance of which no nation can rise in the scale of civilisation. Education gets the greatest possible impetus, at least in Bengal, on account of the opening of the National College and School, which ceremony brought together all the eminent and representative men of two Bengals, Bengal Proper and the New Province, and sympathetic letters and messages from those who could not for unavoidable reasons attend.

* * * * * * *

While education—general, scientific and technical—is to be imparted, facilities for research and training of teachers are also to be afforded.

The idea seems to have taken deep root into the rulers and gone down into the people that no higher education is possible unless it be through the medium of a European language, particularly English, in this country. To some extent it is a fact. So long as we have not got books in vernacular, treating of the higher branches of knowledge, particularly physics and chemistry, botany and zoology, geology and minerology, history and economics, philosophy and sociology, it is indeed absurd to expect vernacular to be the medium of instruction in the collegiate stage. The Council has therefore made up its mind to supply the want. It is indeed a serious task and a heavy responsibility. This faithfully discharged will mean a great improvement in the language and enrichment in the literature of the vernaculars chosen by the Council. We should here earnestly request the Council to adopt the Devanagri character for their Bengali books and journals so that the Hindi-knowing public of Upper India may also profit by the fruits of this noble movement of Bengal. . . . .

Government service and legal profession are the forbidden fruit: the first, because the certificates at the Council may not be recognised by the Government, and the second because the College is not to be turned into a coaching institution for University Examinations. This is a good resolve. It may bring less pupils, but will preserve the purity of the objects of the Council. But agriculture, manufacture and commerce afford innumerable openings for the trained students of the Council. . . . .

We only hope and trust that in its anxiety to work on national lines the Council does not perpetuate national vices and superstitions, for these are, as far as they retard progress anything but swadeshi.

CITIZEN,
20th August, 1906.

Excessive strain due to the system of teaching adopted.

41. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 20th August, says:—Complaints are rife in the college with respect to loss of general health and eyesight of students of college classes owing to excessive strain upon their constitution by being made to work for longer periods than they can bear. In the F. A. class, besides the regular instructions on religion, the students are taught all the six subjects every day and they are engaged full six hours. For preparation of six subjects at home every day a proportionately greater time must be utilised over and above the two hours occupied in attending physical exercises on the playground. The B. A. and B. Sc. students have three subjects and for each, two hours are occupied. There is no plausible reason why the Muir College or the Queen's College should be followed in this respect. It is said almost all the students of the B. A. and B. Sc. classes last year have ruined their health, and some have taken to wearing glasses.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,

The M. A. Examination in Arabic.

42. A correspondent in the Riyaz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 29th August, upholds the views expressed by the editor on the subject in his issue of 8th August. He says that the questions were shown by him to many learned scholars, and it is their general opinion that the papers were made purposely difficult in order to dissuade candidates from selecting this language for their examination. It is to be hoped that the University will soon take steps to remove this misapprehension (vide Selections, page 511, paragraph 36).

ZUL QARNAIN,
21st August 1906.

The views of Hindus about Urdu.

43. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 21st August, expresses its dissent from the views expressed by the Hindustani (Lucknow), of 15th August, on the subject, and alleges that Urdu books, whether lithographed or printed in type, are sold at the same price in the market, and that no Hindu has ever felt so interested in the propagation of the Urdu as they do in the spread of the Deva Nagri. Certain Hindu papers, though ostensibly public organs, are really party papers aiming secretly to strike at the very root of Islam, while certain others, that are limited in their circulation to the Hindu community only, express their views openly on the subject. The Káyasth Hitkari is a paper of the latter description.

The prophecies of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

44. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—When Sir Bampfylde Fuller had the stormy interview with the leaders of Barisal and compelled them to withdraw a swadeshi proclamation he told them in so many words that they were revolutionaries "You call your societies associations; I call them committees of safety," he said, referring to the French and Russian revolution. When the agitation became keener and began to draw attention in England he openly pooh-poohed the whole affair, and declared that there would be one or two angry speeches in Parliament and the excitement would end in smoke. The one thing that never occurred to him was that he himself might come to grief over the trouble that was so largely of his making. The committees of safety are there, the angry speeches in Parliament have not yet been made and yet Sir Bampfylde Fuller has been jerked out of the saddle by a power that he never reckoned with.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's successor.

45. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—The appointment of Mr. Hare as Sir Bampfylde Fuller's successor raises the question whether the appointment is being treated as a permanent or a tentative one.

There is no precedent in Bengal of a member of the Board of Revenue being appointed pucca Lieutenant-Governor, though such appointments are made in these Provinces and in the Punjab. Three or four years ago Mr. Hare was a Commissioner of a division. The Lieutenant-Governorship of East Bengal should have gone, in the usual course, to Mr. Baker. Mr. Hare would have reverted to the Board of Revenue on Sir Andrew Fraser's return from leave. His sudden elevation almost justifies the hope that the entire question of the Partition of Bengal may be reconsidered, say, on the retirement of Sir Andrew Fraser. Mr. Hare may be translated to the Viceroy's Council or a Political Residency and the whole of Bengal may be converted into a Presidency under a Governor in Council. The dual control now established will never work satisfactorily, nor is there the slightest likelihood of Dacca rivalling Calcutta in size and importance.

CITIZEN,
13th August, 1906.

The Satrapy of Eastern Bengal.

46. The Citizen (Allahabad) of 13th August, received on 20th August, says:—Sir Bampfylde Fuller has resigned at last. He leaves behind him bitter memories. It is amidst the groans and hisses of a down-trodden population that he lays down his sceptre.

Bengal partitioned against the wishes of the children of the soil, the work of carrying on the Government of the newly-created Province required the talents of a tactful administrator, possessing a certain amount of foresight and largeness of heart. The feelings of the people were stirred to their very depths. When Poland was cut up to pieces what may have been the feeling of the Poles! When Roman Catholic Europe in its fulness of Christian orthodoxy drove the Jews from their hearth and scattered them all over the world like the leaves of autumn what must have been the feeling of the Jews? In Bengal the people were grieved. They were angry. It seemed to them that they were going to be divided and separated, quite removed from those who were near and dear to them. The Government was not conscious then of the tenacity of our national life. The storm of agitation which gathered over the partition question was not the result of wire-pulling as has been suggested by some of our generous critics. It was a genuine outburst of indignation. It was directed not against any particular person, but against that retrograde policy which all over the course branded the administration of the retired Viceroy.

* * * * * * * *

Sir Bampfylde came with his heart charged with prejudice against the people that he was going to rule. He saw disaffection, disloyalty and sedition everywhere; at any rate he thought they were there. Every anti-partition meeting was a token of disloyalty to his power and authority. Every swadeshi demonstration was in his opinion charged with dangerous consequences to the British trade in the East and might lead to great changes in the tenets and the procedure of the India Office. Bande Mataram seemed to produce in his ears an echo of la marsellaise. He did not understand the Bengali people. He had picked up about them some information at club houses and dinner parties, where they had been represented as a race of mischief-making people, disloyal to the Government and lacking in strength of character. He had also learnt the adage in the copy book that Cretans were liars and Bengalis were cowards. His peculiar situation combined with the queer ideas he had imbibed of governing the East developed in him a great prepossession in favour of strong Government.

* * * * * * * *

If the landed gentry of Bengal or others occupying important position in society did not come to pay obeisance to the new Governor, they were sent for, lectured and treated with the utmost rudeness. This was the sowing of the wind. It was sufficient to make the people savage. They retaliated by throwing in their lot with the swadeshites. From Dan to Bersheba, Bande-Mataram became the article of political faith for the people of Bengal. It was taken up with one accord by women and children, and men of every age from the hoary-headed old men down to the merest school boys. They succeeded in preventing the sale of foreign goods in Bengal. This roused Sir Bampfylde. He wanted to put this down and, brought up in the faith of strong Government, he thought the simplest way to do it was by beating and bullying the leaders, by letting loose on them the Gurkha troops, by prosecuting school-boys, by recommending the abolition of schools and by enlisting the leading men of Bengal to act as special constables when there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace. He had yet to learn that it was easier rather to break than to bend the Bengalis.

Sir Bampfylde leaves the Government of Eastern Bengal in a more difficult situation than what it was at the start. It requires the tact of an Antony MacDonnell, the sense of justice and liberal-mindedness of an administrator like Sir James LaTouche to put things back to the status quo. It will take some time before the Hon'ble Mr. Hare succeeds in undoing the mischief committed by Sir Bampfylde and by his officers.

ARYA MITRA,
16th August, 1906.

Lieutenant-Govenorship of Bengal.

47. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th August, does not approve of the action of Government in its selection of Mr. Slacke, to the temporary charge of the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal in preference to Mr. K. G. Gupta, his senior by three years, and suggests that this sort of conduct can be attributed to racial predilections only.

MUFID-I-AM,
16th August, 1906.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

48. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 16th August, expresses its regret at the acceptance of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation, and opines that Government will one day have to repent its policy of connivance, and to adopt very strenuous measures to put down the unrestrained agitation that has placed the country in a state of ferment.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller and the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal.

49. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of 16th August, referring to the mass meeting of the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal held on 6th August, says that Sir Bampfylde Fuller simply wanted to give Muhammadans a proportionate share of appointments, and had his thoughts directed towards their education. The Bengalis could not brook this owing to their selfishness, and hence their clamour.

Government should not lose sight of the fact that other sects are preparing themselves to follow the example set by the Bengalis, and in case this happens and there are platform agitations all over, the country will become involved in destruction. There are strikes in all departments; but God forbid that other sections should, in the excess of their zeal, join the Bengalis in agitating the country.

AL BASHIR,
21st August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller and the Muhammadans.

50 Al Bashir (Etawah) of 21st August, resents the criticism of the Hindustani on the speech of Nawab Salimulla Khan of Dacca condemning the acceptance of Sir Bampylde Fuller's resignation. The Hindustani, it says, calls the Nawab's remarks impertinent, but are not the speeches of congressmen even seditious ? The editor says that the rule of Sir Bampfylde Fuller was not peaceful otherwise he would have considerably raised the status of Muhammadans. Adverting to the remark of the Hindustani that a protest against the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller is only calculated to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans he reminds the Hindustani of the oppressive and tyrannical reign of Sir Antony McDonnell, who did not hesitate to be dishonest and to cheat and to tell lies in order to injure Muhammadans. Sir Antony MacDonnell passed the resolution to efface the Urdu language, and conferred Deputy Collectorships, tahsildarships and naib tahsildarships on certain Hindus in a most irregular manner. The congressmen bestowed encomiums on him and did their best to make his farewell meeting a grand success. They should have thought at the time that Muhammadans were sure to be aggrieved at the grand farewell party arranged for their enemy.

ADVOCATE,
19th August, 1906.

Indian Nation on the affairs in Eastern Bengal.

51. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 19th August, says :—What treatment are the people intending to give to Mr. Hare ? This is the important question of the hour. We earnestly hope no mistake will be committed. And it will undoubtedly be a mistake to treat Mr. Hare, from the beginning, in the way that Sir Bampfylde Fuller was treated; to give him, for instance, no reception on his tours, to put up insulting placards on his route, to cause a general disappearance of coolies from his landing places so that he may find it difficult to get his luggage carried. There may have been some excuse to insult and annoy Sir Bampfylde Fuller in a way which, as he himself declared, would provoke an angel, but if Mr. Hare, for no offence, is treated likewise, the agitators will produce a very bad impression on all sensible people, among whom, of course, Mr. Morley is to be reckoned. With all his radicalism and his sympathy, Mr. Morley will turn a deaf ear to the complaints of the people whom he discovers to be irreconcilable. It will be a mistake to spend on every Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal all the rage excited by the Partition. That is a mode of agitation which if it is at all adopted will never be tolerated. Let agitators therefore at once make up their mind as to the tactics they are to adopt. How are they to receive Mr. Hare in the course of his tours? Are they to boycott his Legislative Council? As we have said already, a continuance of the old method without the old excuse will prove disastrous. Sir Bampfylde Fuller's despotism was an advantage to agitators. Men were permitted to speak and write and act in ways which would never have been tolerated in peaceful times. Patriotism and a sense of wounded dignity were suffered to be a reply for every sort of bad feeling, personal or political. Officers of Government, judicial, ministerial or executive were defamed in the most scurrilous manner; some were personally insulted and annoyed; men who had been convicted in courts of law were publicly honoured: English rule itself was described as a runious evil, especially from an economic point of view. In all denunciations little saving clauses were parenthetically put in with an eye to provisions of the Penal Code. All this was passed over because Government did not want to add fuel to the fire and to make martyrs of petty agitators. Mr. Morley apparently feels that a great deal ought to be tolerated by way of reparation for the grievance of Partition and for the oppressive pranks of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. But he will not tolerate that language and action for ever, and he will not allow the people to behave like spoilt children. Open exhortations to men and boys to the practice of picketing: open encouragement of strikers, open incitement to boys to defy orders, to refuse to pay fines for instance, may have been passed unnoticed at one time for special reasons. It will be dangerous to persist in these ways as the normal style of agitation. Privilege after privilege has been lost in recent years by abuse. Let us not lose the few remaining privileges by abusing them. If the law permits this or that rowdy method, it has to be remembered that in this country it does not take long to change the law. Privileges must not be strained if we want them to exist.

* * * * * * *

Let Mr. Hare be treated as a gentleman and a ruler, at any rate until he gives an excuse like Sir Bampfylde Fuller. It is absurd to talk of respecting a rule when rulers are insulted.

* * * * * * *

It is all very well to gloat over his (Sir Bampfylde Fuller's) resignation, but it has raised a problem as to the future attitude of agitators, which we sincerely hope will be solved with wisdom and justice.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller and the people of Bengal.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th August, 1906.

52. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 20th August, says:—Sir Bampfylde Fuller had no hand in the Partition of Bengal for which Lord Curzon is entirely responsible. There is no doubt that Sir Bampfylde Fuller who has adhered to his policy in all its details and followed his example to the extent of resigning his office would receive his support in every matter, if he were the ruling Viceroy. The residents of Bengal have no doubt given him offence by not presenting him with an address, though the Muhammadans of Dacca have by their conduct in the matter succeeded in maintaining the reputation of India for its proverbial hospitality. They cannot be said to have been actuated by motives of flattery, for they could not expect to gain anything from an officer who had already resigned his office, unless it can be alleged that they calculated thereby upon gaining the goodwill of the entire Anglo-Indian community, who have been led to be in full sympathy with Sir Bampfylde Fuller owing to the objectionable attitude of the Bengalis.

The Anglo-Indians are actuated in the matter by a sense of national fellow-feeling and are making much of the good qualities of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. The Bengalis, on the other hand, have been led in consequence to expose his shortcomings, and to paint him as black as possible. It is however desirable to close this episode, of which the less said on both sides the better.

The Pioneer is in a partizan spirit, eloquent in Sir Bampfylde Fuller's praise, and is doing its best to wash him quite clean of the stigma attached to him. The Bengal Press is not a whit backward in contradicting the up-country Anglo-Indian daily, and exposing Sir Bampfylde's shortcomings.

CITIZEN,
20th August, 1906.

Suggestions by the Anglo-Indian Press to Mr. Hare.

53. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 20th August, says:—Not satisfied however with the great mischief that they (Anglo-Indian Journalists have done by egging on Sir Bampfylde to pursue the policy, subversive alike of law and order, and not content with setting a misdirected portion of the Hindus and Muhammadans by the ear, they have the audacity to suggest that good Government would require that the Hon'ble Mr. Hare should in his policy of administration follow in the wake of the retired Governor. Was Section 124A of the Indian Penal Code intended exclusively for the Native Press? When Anglo-Indian papers so flagrantly abuse their journalistic privileges by placing the people at loggerheads with the Government, and by sowing the seed of dissension between class and class is it not time to ask as to where sleeps the official thunder.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st August, 1906.

A warning to the Bengali papers.

54. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 21st August, gives a warning to certain reckless and self-conceited Bengali papers, and advises them to cease to make unpleasant remarks against the Muhammadan raises and their community at large in Bengal, thinking that Bengal has no Muhammadan organ of its own to silence them, and that they will therefore remain masters of the situation. They must remember that their present attitude is only widening the gulf between the Hindus and Muhammadans, and is detrimental to the wellbeing of the country. If they do not desist the bomb of Muhammadan wrath will explode and shake the very foundation of the peace of the country. They must also remember that the inflammatory remarks of their leading members made in the course of their speeches in meetings held in connection with the Partition of Bengal and the swadeshi movement, and aimed against the Nawáb of Dacca and other Muhammadan noblemen, were very unpleasant and disagreeable, and that most of the Muhammadan audience left the meetings. The majority of Muhammadans have ceased to work with the Bengalis in promoting the cause of the swadeshi movement, for the reason that the latter are jealous of the immense influence of the Muhammadans in the new province, and their antipathy is the outcome of selfish and sordid motives.

AKHBAR
SHAHNA-I-HIND
WA TUTI HIND,
24th July, 1906.

The anticipated success of the Bengalis in their demands.

55. The Akhbar Shahna-i-Hind wa Tuti Hind (Meerut), of 24th July, received on 21st August, says that the Bengalis by their training are not a whit behind the civilized nations of the West, and are fully justified in demanding their rights constitutionally. There is no reason why Government should not satisfy their demands. This is a war between civilization and barbarism. It is civilization to demand our just rights constitutionally, and it is barbarism to put forth excuses in giving them. The tyrant, the despot, the usurper is barbarous. A demand of one's rights is (consistent with) candidness and civilization. Selfishness, avarice, national partiality are the characteristics of persecution and barbarism. The non-fulfilment of promises is dishonesty and tyranny. Russia is looked upon as barbarous, because she does not satisfy the just demands of her subjects.

The Bengalis testify to the blessings inaugurated by the British rule, and demand only their just rights which the Government promised to give. Nothing will deter them from pressing their demands until their efforts are crowned with success. Much has been said about the mutinous attitude of the Bengalis, but no one has been able so far to point out one single irregularity in their procedure. The Bengalis themselves are in favour of Government; and are in every way its well-wishers: but those who advocate a policy of repression, and are against meeting the demands of the Bengalis lest they should one day ask Englishmen to give up the Government of India, are its enemies. Should the Bengalis make such a demand it will only be consistent with the Royal Proclamation of 1857. Repression is not the way to exercise permanent sway, but such an end can be achieved by adopting a policy of conciliation, and by giving freedom and justice to the people. Those who discountenance this course are like a diseased limb that requires amputation. The swadeshi movement and its attendant results have convinced Government of the strength the Bengalis possess, and it has therefore begun making just concessions to them.

HINDOSTHAN,
10th August 1906.

The swadeshi movement and Bengali students.

56. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of 10th August, received on 20th August, says:—The spirit of swadeshism among Bengali students has reached a climax. They in some cases commit public nuisances and take the law in their own hands. We regret to learn that the students of H. E. School, Sherpur, district Mymensingh, burnt the school pankhas, the other day because they were made of foreign cloth, and substituted for them country-made cloth at their own expense. Patriotism and independence of such a character should never be permitted in students.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th August, 1906.

The date of the Partition of Bengal and the inauguration of the swadeshi movement.

57. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—The 7th of August 1905 was the day on which the swadeshi movement was inaugurated and the Partition of Bengal was finally designed, though it was not actually carried out till the 16th October. This year in Calcutta there was a unique and an impressive celebration of this date, and it will be repeated year after year till either the Partition is set aside or the object of the agitation is gained by the unity of purpose and endeavour of the Bengali race.

* * * * * * *

Indeed, so far as the rest of India is concerned the Partition of Bengal holds a secondary place compared with the vigorous agitation carried on against it. The feeling throughout the country is that should the occasion arise there should be just such an agitation as is now being carried on in Bengal. You cannot throw a stone into a sheet of still water without raising ripples on the entire surface. Similarly, the wave of agitation in Bengal has disturbed the whole country. The excitement is as great in the Punjab as it is in Bombay. The remarkable scenes that have been recently witnessed, the presence of the leaders of Maharashtra in Calcutta during the Sivaji celebration, the deputation of Arya Samajists from Lahore to East Bengal in connection with the famine are all traceable to the Partition agitation. The outburst of patriotic fervour in Bengal has attracted the patriotism of the whole country, and the undercurrent of popular feeling is flowing steady and strong Bengalwards.

* * * * * * *

The main objective of the agitation is that the authorities in England should come to realise that the people of India have a right to be heard, and that the people of Bengal should have been heard before the partition of that province had been sanctioned. Lord Curzon perpetrated an outrage which cannot be sufficiently resented, neither is there any assurance that a similar injustice may not be committed on some future occasion.

* * * * * * *

It is impossible to read the proceedings of the gathering of the 7th of August without being deeply impressed with the solemn character of the celebration. If there was no note of despondency there was no note either of undue elation. The proceedings commenced with a prayer, couched in earnest and solemn language, read out by the President, Babu Norendro Nath Sen. There were very few speeches. Besides the speech of the President the only other speeches were those of Babu Surendranath Banerji, who proposed a resolution renewing the vow about the swadeshi and the boycott and of the seconder. The swadeshi vow was dictated by Babu Surendranath Banerji and repeated by the whole audience standing. The meeting had been preceded by large processions which passed along the streets singing Bande Mataram.

* * * * * * *

A novel feature was introduced at this celebration. A flag was presented to Babu Surendranath Banerji and he was requested to unfurl it. On the flag were emblazoned eight lilies, the sun and the crescent and a Sanskrit motto. The message that these words convey is that the constitutional fight for the undoing of the Partition of Bengal must be carried on from generation to generation till the object is attained. But there is a wider message conveyed by these words of the sage. It is a call to all patriotic Indians to assemble underneath the national banner and to devote themselves to the cause of national emancipation. It is not a battle flag for the field but an emblem of a peaceful, constitutional battle in which a nation seeks the recognition due to it. One cause, one nation, one endeavour—this must be the motto for all India. Babu Surendranath Banerji in accepting the flag said that he had done nothing to deserve such an honour beyond the fact that he had consecrated his life and his energies to the motherland. When shall our countrymen all over India be able to repeat these simple, glorious words in all the faith of work well done?

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

The swadeshi movement and Manchester.

58. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—In spite of the trade statistics given to Mr. Morley, Capital's weekly reports of the Calcutta market show the steady fall in the demand for Manchester fabrics, particularly dhoties. This cannot but create anxiety in the mill-owners of Lancashire. They mean to wreak their vengeance by introducing restrictive factory law in India and denying to Indian students facilities for technical education in factories and instructions in Manchester at least. A young man sent by the Bengal Association for the Scientific and Industrial Education of Indians has been prevented from learning dyeing and calico-printing in a factory there.

HINDOSTHAN,
13th August, 1906.

The anniversary of the partition of Bengal and the swadeshi movement.

59. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of 13th August, says:—Under the Presidency of Mr. Nagendra Nath Sen a meeting was held to celebrate the anniversary of the partition and to renew the swadeshi vow at Parsi Bagan.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. Banerjee then said that it was difficult for him to express the feelings which were uppermost in his mind on a unique occasion like that. He considered it the most glorious moment of his life when he was called upon to unfold a banner which was emblematic of the national awakening and triumph. He asked all to salute the flag which was a sign and emblem of the unification of all races, a standard of unity. They must resolve to follow it wherever it floated. The flag would lead them to victory and the accomplishment of their political emancipation. The 7th of August 1905, had given them a new national life, but the 7th August 1906, gave them that flag.

Such folly and daring without judgment we set down to positive weakness of intellect or derangement of the mind.

MOHINI,
17th August, 1906.

A swadeshi meeting.

60. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 17th August, says that it has been resolved at the anniversary meeting presided over by Babu Kumudni Kant Banerji, the Diwan of Raja Brinjendra Kishore Rai Chaudhri, and held at Isharganj on the 12th August, that the swadeshi movement should be adhered to with zeal until the reunion of Bengal is effected. The Hindus and Muhammadans present likewise resolved to take measures to help the famine-stricken people of Eastern Bengal.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th August, 1906.

Sermons in mosques on the swadeshi movement.

61. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar of 20th August refers to a sermon preached in the mosque at Maldah exhorting about two thonsand Hindus and Muhammadans assembled on the occasion to use articles of swadeshi manufacture which they vowed to do in future. He advocates the views expressed in the sermon, and is of opinion that the example set at Maldah should be followed elsewhere.

BHARAT JIWAN,
20th August, 1906.

Proposal for starting a meeting in Benares to advocate swadeshi movement.

62. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 20th August, appeals to the educated public of Benares to start an association for advocating the cause of the swadeshi movement.

OUDH AKHBAR,
22nd August, 1906.

Swadeshi movement.

63. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar of the 22nd August, condemns the attitude of the Headmaster of the Saharanpur school in forbidding the use of swadeshi articles among his students, on the ground that articles of foreign manufacture are cheaper and finer than those made in the country. He is besides said to have closed the debating club and to have ordered the discontinuance of papers advocating the swadeshi movement, as he regards reading them as a mere waste of time, which could be better utilized otherwise.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th August, 1906.

A swadeshi meeting at Cawnpore.

64. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 24th August, says that a lecture was delivered at the McRobert Hall, where Mr. Tahal Ram Gangaram spoke for an hour and a half in very powerful language and exhorted the elite of Cawnpore, who had mustered strong, to encourage the movement so that their famished brethren may be able to earn a living. He said that the object of the swadeshi movement was to get work for the eight crores of starving Indians who can get only one meal in the day; and not to harm foreign trade.

The editor remarks that the swadeshi movement has tended to raise the price of country-made paper considerably and that paper of all descriptions is not kept ready in stock. This necessitates purchase of paper of foreign manufacture, Mill owners should take steps to remedy this evil. He also expresses his satisfaction at the opening of a shipping company between Tuticorin (Madras) and Ceylon, and praises the patriotism of Indians who refused to take passage on the British ships in spite of reduction of fares.

RAJPUT,
15th August, 1906.

Swadeshi and foreign sugar.

65. The Rajput (Agra), of the 15th August, invites the attention of the Hindu community to Mr. Julian's admission regarding the use of bone-ash in the refinement of foreign sugar. Mr. Julian owns a large sugar factory in England, and his word must be taken as an authority on the subject. Hindus should therefore cease to use sugar of European manufacture owing to the disgusting process employed.

ADVOCATE,
16th August, 1906.

Country-made sugar.

66. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—The movement in favour of the use of country made sugar is making progress. At Haldwani, the halwais having been paid Rs. 900 for the sweets prepared from foreign sugar, it was distributed to the poor and every one has taken a vow, at the pain of paying a fine of Rs. 50 to the panchayat, against the use of foreign sugar. At Bareilly both Hindus and Muhammadans have joined in taking the vow. From public subscription Rs 2,000 were raised and all sweatmeats ready in the shops in the old city, Shahamatganj and Alamgirganj were purchased and distributed to the poor; the medicine-sellers have thrown away preserves prepared with foreign sugar; the menial classes have in a panchayet resolved to have nothing to do with foreign sugar.

ANAND,
21st August, 1906.

Boycotting of European sugar.

67. The Ánand (Lucknow), of the 21st August, says that it has been resolved at a public meeting held at Haldwani that sugar of foreign manufacture be boycotted and a fine of rupees fifty imposed on persons detected using it. Foreign sugar worth rupees nine hundred was thrown away at the close of the meeting.

The Hindus and Muhammadans of Bareilly likewise have passed a similar resolution and given up the use of foreign sugar and the boycotting has extended even to low castes.

The Mohini (Kanauj) dated the 21st instant contains a paragraph giving similar details about the boycott, stating that foreign sugar worth Rs. 2,000 in Bareilly and worth Rs. 900 in Haldwani has been purchased and given away to the poor.

ADVOCATE,
16th August, 1906.

A statue to Tata (swadeshi).

68. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—We approve the idea and we fervently hope that the marble and the artist should both be swadeshi, as Mr. Tata was the best specimen of what a swadeshi patriot must be.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th August, 1906.

Council Elections.

69. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—We understand that the members of the Local Legislative Council who met at Allahabad on the 9th instant could not among themselves agree as to who should be returned to the Supreme Council. The Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram and the Hon'ble Rai Nihal Chand, both of whom could not apparently see their way to retire from the field secured an equal number of votes. The Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram and the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal were not present at the meeting. The Local Government has been requested to call another meeting, and it is to be hoped that better counsels may prevail next time. We still maintain that if public opinion is not to be altogether flouted, and if these two members themselves have not made up their minds to treat all public opinion and feeling with sheer contempt, they ought to keep themselves back. We may admire them for their ambition to serve the public, but we cannot help feeling that it would be better in their own interest if they could only see themselves as others see them.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th August, 1906.

The expansion of the Legislative Council.

70. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—For our part we are inclined to think that an expansion of the Councils is not an improbability, but if expansion means nothing more than an increase in the number of members, we cannot say that it will mean much improvement. What is necessary is that the Councils should be something better than mere debating societies, that they should be marked by something practical in their constitution. If the function of the elected members of the Councils is to be nothing more than that of critics, if they are to have no hand in constructive schemes of far-reaching consequences, if the Budget is to be prepared behind their back and to be passed in spite of their opposition, we cannot see how the Legislative Councils do or can serve any very useful purpose.

* * * * * * *

It is therefore obvious that public opinion in the country should not be deluded about the real issue before us, and it should demand in no uncertain terms not merely a numerical addition to the strength of the Councils, but a vital change in their constitution, a change that will give them some real power in the administration of the country.

Unfortunately so far as these Provinces go, there are no public bodies to which we can look up for expression of opinion or discussion of the subject, and it therefore becomes all the more necessary for those of us who are interested in our Councils that they should lose no time in discussing the subject in all its aspects in the Press.

* * * * * * *

If the Muhammadans do not find themselves more often and in larger numbers in the Councils, the reason is obvious. They have made their choice, as much as the Hindus have theirs. They have hitherto followed a policy of exclusiveness, they have denounced political agitation, they have committed themselves unreservedly to the parental care and solicitude of the Government. The Hindus on the other hand have been demanding rights, the fulfilment of promises, and they have been put down as agitators. Under the circumstances therefore it will not do for Mr. Aftab Ahmad to say that the Hindus have naturally preferred to elect men of their own creed.

ANAND,
21st August, 1906.

Indian element in the Governor General's Council.

71. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 21st August, expresses its disapproval of the conduct of the Imperial Government in not inviting any Indians to take a share in its deliberations on the question of increasing the number and powers of Indian members in the Governor-General's Council. Such conduct it says is an apt illustration of the fact that the blind can see their interests all the same.

CITIZEN,
13th August, 1906.

The Hon'ble Mr. Hewett.

72. The Citizen (Allahabad) of 13th August, received on 20th August, says:—It has been officially announced that the Hon'ble Mr. Hewett will be the successor of our very popular Lieutenant-Governor Sir James LaTouche. We all feel extremely sorry that Sir James is going to leave us. It must be admitted that his has been on the whole a very successful administration. In a quiet sober sort of way he has ever done his best to improve the condition of the people so far as it lay in his power. His name will be ever associated with a large number of magnificent buildings which during his administration have sprung into existence in different towns in the Province. From start to finish he had in his view the well-being of the people. The reign of terror among the officials which had been established during the brilliant administration of Sir Antony MacDonnell had disappeared even without leaving a wreck behind. No Collectors were sat upon; no Sub-Judges prosecuted; no D. Ss. P. dismissed. Indian journalists have been allowed to ply their music free and unfettered with no spectre of section 124A chasing them. No experiments have been made in legislation, calculated to weaken the position of landlords but in no way improving the lot of the tenant or checking the tide of litigation. He attempted to bring Oudh and the United Provinces in a closer touch. How far his object could be realized, we would leave it to some future historian to describe. His charity has been very large and by his simplicity and unassuming manners he has won the heart of a very large number of men who are sure to miss him very keenly. Indian official life is, however, so peculiarly constituted that with all one's goodness and greatness one cannot, like the old man fabled in Æsop satisfy all and everybody. It is said that His Honour could not exercise proper control over many of his Anglo-Indian subordinates who taking advantage of his good nature have times and oft set law and authority at defiance and this with the greatest publicity. It is said that in the distribution of prizes and preferments His Honour owing to his pre-Islamite tendencies has not always succeeded in holding the balance even between the two mighty cleavages of the Indian population. How far these accusations are well founded we shall leave posterity to judge. The one thing that we are convinced of is that Sir James LaTouche is one of those true born Britishers who has indefatigably worked for us, and by his charity and broad winged sympathy has made a place for himself in the hearts of us all and there his image will endure longer than any criticism on him and his administration.

The British rulers in India.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
13th August, 1906.

73. The Almora Akhbar of the 13th August, says that it is an inseparable accident of human nature to be sorry at separation from a just and considerate ruler and to feel a sense of relief at the departure of one who is tyrannical and indiscreet.

The strained relations existing at present between Europeans and Indians on the one hand, and between Hindus and Muhammadans on the other, make it very difficult to predict if a change in the ruler will be calculated to bring about a better state of affairs. One section of the Indian community has done Sir Bampfylde Fuller all the homage due to a just and benevolent ruler, while another shrinks from him and regards him as a most oppressive and tyrannical ruler, public opinion being so divided, he found it very easy to have his own way and to do things which have eventually disturbed the peace of the country. Peace and prosperity cannot exist in India where Europeans on principle follow the footprints of their predecessors and thereby strengthen their policy from day to day, while Indians look only to their individual interests unmindful of others. The editor exhorts Indians to unite their sympathies in a common cause for the well-being of their country and not to give an opportunity to the European officers to disturb their harmony.

The Indians.

ALAMGIR,
15th August, 1906.

74. The Alamgir (Aligarh), of 15th August, says that Englishmen do not now regard Indians as human beings. A railway employé sent the following telegram to his superior officer: "The dogs that struck work are returning." Sir Lepel Griffin used to call Indians monkeys. A European professor used to call Bengalis by the appellation of "ourang outang." An officer in Bombay used to call even educated Indians coolies. Native women are called women, but those from Europe are called ladies. Indian men are called "natives," whereas the natives of England look upon the term as disgraceful.

Signs of the Times.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th August, 1906.

75. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 19th August, says:—Some of us believe that a great change is coming over the country. Others see no signs of any change and think there is no probability of any. Both may be right; either may be wrong. But great changes have occurred in the history of the world without any marked signs of premonition, or such as could be felt or appreciated. Contrariwise, such changes have been heralded by a great conflict of opinion, one set of opinion vehemently insisting that a change was impending, another declaring that no change was probable.

* * * * * * * *

For several centuries the conviction has been growing that Asia is no match for Europe, particularly in war. It has been repeatedly set down in writing that a handful of European troops were more than a match for thousands of Asiatic troops, and even the facts of history were distorted for this purpose.

* * * * * * * *

The Boer war may be left out of account, as the Boers are not Asiatics; but a number of peasants and landowners repeatedly defeating the flower of the army is an event which carries its own lesson. If there had been 400,000 instead of 40,000 Boers what would have been the position of affairs to-day in South Africa?

In the full flush of the arrogant superiority of Europe over Asia came the Russo-Japanese war. Would any one have ventured to assert the day before the war that Russia was an Asiatic Power? That would have robbed Europe of almost all its pride. Russia was not only the greatest Power in Europe, but in the world.

* * * * * * * *

It was discovered that the Japanese were not an Asiatic race, though geographically Japan was in Asia! Also that the Russians were really Asiatics though Russia happened to be on the map of Europe. Consequently, the victory of Japan over Russia might be regarded as another victory of Europe over Asia!

* * * * * * * *

And if the Russians are Europeans what are the Persians who are going to have Parliamentary Government? Who could have dreamed that Persia was on the eve of a peaceful revolution and the people there were about to claim and obtain their rights? And still the Europeans talk glibly of Orientals and Asiatics, forgetting that man is everywhere the same, and the ages of autocracy and democracy alternate everywhere. And if Persia comes to have its own Parliament will the Government of India, or rather the English Ministry profit by the lesson, or wait till the next turn of the wheel?

BHARAT JIWAN,
20th August, 1906.

The poverty of India.

76. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 20th August, refers to the case of an offender sentenced in Lahore to three months' rigorous imprisonment on a charge of theft of flour, and to his request for an enhanced sentence on the ground that a long stay in jail will be more conducive to his interests as he will be able to enjoy a hearty meal while undergoing the sentence. The magistate remarked that his offence did not justify a severer sentence, whereon the convict flung a shoe at the magistrate and thus succeeded in getting full one year which he hailed with delight. The editor remarks that having this state of affairs in view it is indeed very deplorable to find the majority of Englishmen looking upon India as a rich and prosperous country.

INDIAN PUNCH,
21st August 1906.

India—Its past and present.

77. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of 21st August, describes the past of India as very bright. The people then were a race of warriors, and statesmen well versed in the use of arms and the country was very prosperous. The present is described as very unhappy. The piece of poetry closes with the remark that the past was only a happy dream.

AL-BASHIR,
21st August, 1906.

The causes of discontent amongst Musalmans of India.

78. The editor of Al-Bashir (Etawah) of 21st August, after reproducing an article on the subject in the Bombay Times remarks that the editor of the Bombay Times has in this article given a just and clear exposition of the grievances of Muhammadans and we await to see how these views as expressed by an Englishman are attended to by Government. These views are undoubtedly based on sound policy and are well-meaning.

The causes leading to discontent are said to be (1) Mr. Gladstone's attack on the Muhammadans which has impressed the Muhammadan public that the British Government is no longer an ally of Turkey and is rather her opponent. (2) The Muhammadans find themselves where they were twenty years back in spite of their separating themselves from the congress movement and remaining faithful and loyal to Government. (3) The attitude of the British Government which leads them to apprehend that an attempt is being made to render the power of the Sultan of Turkey less effectual in that part of Arabia, which is nearest and dearest to every Muhammadan. (4) Mr. Morley's new scheme about the introduction of more Indian element in the Legislative Council, which can in no way benefit Muhammadans under the present system of election.

ANAND,
21st August, 1906.

Mr. Bryan on British policy in India.

79. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 21st August, says that Mr. Bryan, the leading American statesman, is not a proper person to speak with authority on the British policy in India. He has drawn his conclusions from an American point of view which can suit America only, where a republican form of Government is in vogue, and cannot find favour with Indians who are always prepared even to sacrifice their lives for their king. Mr. Bryan has only repeated what the Indians have from time to time brought to the notice of Government. However, it is satisfactory to note that Mr. Bryan agrees with the educated Indians in pointing out the same evils which they have already discovered in the British administration of India. It remains now for the Government to take measures to remedy these evils and make the country happy, instead of leading it to the extremity of assuming the attitude adopted by Irishmen.

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

The American policy of Self Government in the Phillipines.

80. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :— When the policy of the British people is placed in juxtaposition to the American policy in the Phillipines, what does one find ? In one, timid advance under the gloom of suspicion, in the other a bold step forward even in spite of open hostility ; in one much talk in resolutions and notifications with little work, in the other paucity of tall talk with abundance of accomplished facts ; in one excessive belauding of the blessings of Pax Britannica, in the other strenuous effort after heaping blessings upon the people. Surely as the critic in the Indian Review puts it, " If at the end of ten years, the American plan is still proving a success, it will behove the British Government to begin to study their methods." But, perhaps, our rulers are lost in admiration of their own policy, because it is older than the American ; and age must be respected. That is their justification as well as consolation. . . . .

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th August, 1906.

The Civil Service and the Hindus.

81. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 19th August, says :—In its issue of the 18th instant the Pioneer publishes a letter from a member of the Indian Civil Service which it dignifies into a protest by the Civil Service against the forced resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. Who this worthy member of the Civil Service is we do not know, but it seems to us that he will find himself more congenially employed on the permanent staff of some rabid Anglo-Indian daily than in the ranks of a service whose traditions for sobriety of language he has so ruthlessly betrayed by his contribution. But if the letter of the I. C. S. may be taken to be the protest of his entire service, may we ask whether respect for authority and discipline of service is not mere cant ? If example is better than precept, those in authority over us have to set us a better example.

AL BASHIR,
21st August, 1906.

The Pro-Congress tendency of Muhammadans.

82. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of 21st August, referring to an article in the Bombay Times says that the rights of Muhammadans have been overlooked, and they have received nothing from Government in return for their faithfulness and loyalty. It is on this account that young Muhammadans are beginning to show pro-congress proclivities. If things remain as they are Sir Saiyad's Mission will prove a failure.

EXPRESS,
9th August, 1906.

Curtailment of military expenditure.

83. The Express (Lucknow), of 9th August, received on 20th August, says :—The most glorious opportunity for Russia to have brought England down on her knees has long since passed away. That was when England's hands were full in South Africa, and a handful of Boer farmers were fighting the British with all the fury, vehemence and courage characteristic of the race. The moment for Russia to come down upon England in India, was when so many as ten thousand of our standing army were taken away for service in South Africa, and when all the strength and resources which England could command were employed to put down the small Boer Republic. The moment which Russia could most advantageously seize hold of to force her antagonist in a bewildering position was when the weakness of the British military system stood disclosed before the world. Russia's best opportunity was when England requisitioned the services of her ablest living generals with a view to bring the small community of the Boer to terms, and when the sympathy of civilised humanity was altogether alienated from her. It was a most unenviable position for England then when the nations of East and of the West should have been mightily pleased to see her humiliated in whatever part of her Empire. In national crises there is no force stronger than international sympathy.

* * * * * * * * *

With so great a naval and military power as Japan to fight for her defence she can afford to defy almost anybody in the East. Thus her Indian Empire is well insured against any external danger, nor does it appear that England is at all troubled about any internal crisis. From the indifferent manner in which she listens to our prayers, the stubbornly defiant temper with which she receives our petitions, and the contempt and ridicule to which she holds up our protests and agitations, it is clear that she feels perfectly secure so far as any internal troubles are concerned. It is not our desire to dispel these notions from her mind, and far be it from our wish to try to disillusion her. Her conduct and behaviour with us, all point to that feeling of and confidence in the security of her position in India. We are also of opinion that she has no reason to be doubtful about that fact and all the troubles that we are capable of creating for England in our country will go no further than petitions, agitations and representations. We prefer rigidly to adhere to our national strength—the strength of tears . . .

During the most insecure moment of her life as a power of any importance she could do without as many as 10,000 troops in India for three long years. This fact alone demonstrates what we have been often at pains to impress upon our rulers that the military expenditure which is considerable and which weighs heavily upon the impoverished people of the country can with perfect safety be reduced to a minimum. . . . .

Looking at the question, however, from the point of view of our rulers, we admit that an appreciable reduction would throw thousands of British soldiery out of employ, with the result that they must immediately be a charge upon the people of England themselves, and that the solution of the question of the unemployed, will be more difficult and further than ever. The unemployed British workman or the labourer does not know, like his Indian brother how to bear his misfortune patiently or to take his fate easily. He knows how to make the position of any Government troublesome if not untenable . . . .

But the most powerful of all the reasons why England will never venture to tackle the question of the military expenditure by reducing the army in India is that it would tend to create a panic in the mercantile world of England, in that the English merchants would never agree to be a party to the reduction of their business. It is they who rule the Empire, not the ministers. We are ruled not by the Viceroy, not by the Secretary of State for India, not by the Ministry, not even by the King-Emperor himself. We are ruled by the 40,000,000 of English people who hold in their hands the sceptre for striking a ministry out and beckoning another in. In this question of army reduction is involved the greater question of self interest. . . . .

Petitions and agitations are useless in a matter in which the interest of England is so irrevocably vested. The part which appears to be incumbent on us, children of the soil, is for us to go forward, and tell our rulers that the preservation and the defence of our country must be entrusted to us. A long series of preliminaries would be necessary, in order to impress our rulers with the idea that we are as well-acquainted with the art of self help as they or anybody else, and that it is to our own interest to preserve the prestige and power of England, for which purpose India would be prepared to place at its disposal all its material and moral resources.

AKHBAR NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th August, 1906.

The native press on the high-handedness of Europeans.

84. The Akhbar Naiyar-i Azam (Moradabad) of 19th August, views with regret the attitude of the Government in regarding the conduct of the native press as calculated to spread disaffection by bringing to its notice the high-handedness of Europeans towards their Indian subjects. It cites a number of cases illustrating such high-handedness, and concludes with the remark that remonstrances ever so well intentioned are apt to be construed as sedition. There can be no better proof of faithfulness to Government than a true representation of the feelings of our countrymen.

TAFRIH,
21st August, 1906.

The editor of the Bhala.

85. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 21st August, says that the editor of the Bhala who received six months' rigorous imprisonment for writing an article entitled the "Darbar in Hell" was met at the Jail gate by a large concourse of men and hailed with shouts of Bande Mataram and Sivaji-ki-jai. Flowers were showered at him, and on reaching Poona from Satara he was received by Mr. Tilak and a large number of famous personages. The editor asks why this was done.

ADVOCATE,
16th August, 1906.

The begar system in the United Provinces.

86. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 16th August, received on 20th August, says:—The begar system prevailing in these provinces has its horrors. A vernacular paper reports that at Farrukhabad two tahsil peons were forcibly dragging two carts and their drivers to the tahsil when a sowar appeared on the spot, who asked them to relieve one cart as it belonged to him. From exchange of hot words they came to blows, and one tahsil peon was killed on the spot. The Sowar has not yet been arrested.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
18th August, 1906.

Mukhtars, revenue agents and clerks.

87. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) of 18th August, invites the attention of the Allahabad High Court to the fact that the absence of any distinctive dress or badge in the ranks of mukhtars, revenue-agents, petition-writers and muharrirs often leads to much irreparable mischief to clients who unwittingly entrust their cases to incompetent persons. It is suggested that steps be taken to remedy this evil.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th August, 1906.

An epidemic of strikes.

88. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 19th August, says:—Strikes are in the air and no mistake. A great deal of unnecessary fuss has been made about the strike on the East Indian Railway. Then there has been some trouble on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, though we believe the authorities of that system of railways are prepared to meet their men in a conciliatory spirit. Reports of a similar nature come from the Bengal-Nagpur Railway. Finally, there is the wholesale strike among the Bombay postmen. Will all these strikes be attributed to the swadeshi movement and the Bengali agitators? In point of simple fact these strikes are due to the new spirit that is becoming manifest everywhere, among the educated as well as among the slightly educated classes. Men are beginning to have a dim consciousness of their rights and labour is asserting itself against capital. Instead of realising the situation and facing it frankly, the issue is being obscured by a lot of mischief-makers, who are exciting the capitalists on the one hand and the authorities on the other. This is the class that has consistently opposed all reform and has stood in the way of the people of the country getting a hearing. It is some small satisfaction, however, that they have been baulked in their little game in East Bengal, where the prospect is now decidedly less gloomy.

ADVOCATE,
19th August, 1906.

Working hours in mills.

89. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 19th August, says:—To the voice of protest raised by the Anglo-Indian press and echoed by the Manchester Labour Associations against the lengthening of the period of daily work in Bombay mills, the United States Consul has added his own. He bases his condemnation on what Mr. Bomanji Dinshaw Petit has said on the situation. Being an employer of mill labour on an extensive scale, Mr. Petit has every right to be heard. He says:—"It is as clear as daylight that these unfortunate people must suffer in physique, that their crushing work must produce its deleterious effect upon their health, that their resisting capacity must gradually dwindle down, and that day by day they must grow more impotent to resist attacks of ill-health and the prevalent epidemics, if they are not actually slowly ground down to death. I deliberately assert every additional pound of production got by making them work longer than 12 hours a day is wrung out of their aching limbs." Surely the situation calls for a reduction in the hours of work as the bad practically nullifies the wholesome rule about closing all factories for at least four days in the month. This sweating process may enrich some, but it diminishes the vitality of most important factors of society.

MOHINI,
21st August, 1906.

The Arya Samaj in Muzaffarnagar.

90. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 21st August, says that the Muhammadan tahsildar of Muzaffarnagar has issued strict orders prohibiting members of the Arya Samaj from singing national songs (bhajans).

PUBLIC NEWS,
August, 1906.

Stamps in the Meerut Treasury.

91. The Public News (Meerut) for August says that much delay was occasioned in the despatch of newspapers as postal stamps were not available in the Meerut treasury for some time in August. It is to be hoped that the district magistrate will see that such difficulties do not occur again.

HINDOSTHAN,
13th August 1906.

The Devanagri a common script for Northern India.

92. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of 13th August, received on 20th August, says:—In a meeting recently held at Benares under the auspices of the Nagri Pracharini Sabha, a very important question of having one common script for all Indian vernaculars, throughout the whole of Northern India, was very ably discussed. . . . . . .

It is proposed to make Devanagri the common script, as the alphabet of this language has one sound for each letter and one letter for each sound. We entirely agree with this proposal and wish it every success. There is certainly no other language better suited for the purpose than Devanagri, and we hope the idea will be favourably received by all concerned. The fact, that Hindi newspapers are being started in nearly all parts of India, except the extreme south, indicates the possibility that in a very short time the Hindi language would ultimately become a national language of India.

JASUS,
14th August, 1906.

Misappropriation of the Agra orphanage endowment.

93. The Jásus (Agra), of the 14th August, invites the attention of the District Magistrate to the conduct of a maulvi, manager of the Agra orphanage endowment, who has been misappropriating its funds, and suggests the desirability of a serious notice being taken of his conduct. The local papers are also called upon to discuss the subject.

The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st August, also invites the attention of Government to the several complaints which are being received by it against Maulvi Abdul Hamid in connection with this misappropriation, and suggests the desirability of an immediate enquiry into the matter.

V.—LEGISLATION.

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

Introduction of a new drastic Irrigation Bill in the Presidency of Madras.

94. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—We understand, en passant, that the Madras Government contemplates the introduction of a new drastic Irrigation Bill which will seriously affect hitherto existing rights and usages in the matter of irrigation sources. Before doing so we should advise them to take a leaf out of His Highness the Nizam's book and invite the public and the parties interested into their confidence, so as, if possible, to make them allies instead of "opponents." Will the Madras Government follow this counsel of perfection ? It is no good reader of contemporary events if it does not profit by the experience of other Provincial Governments.

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

Factory Legislation.

95. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—Government interference in the regulation of the hours of work in mills and factories has become almost inevitable. And it is said the majority of mill-owners are almost sure to welcome such a course. It may sound strange, nevertheless it is a fact—and for very good reasons. There are some mill-proprietors who do not like the 15 hours' rule of work—an innovation since the introduction of electric lighting. But they are not ready to return to the old and wholesome practice of 12 hours' work for fear of loss in profits due to unfair competition by those who mean to stick to the new order of things. Voluntary restriction of working hours not being applicable to those who are not of the same mind, and even operatives not objecting to the sweating process in return for higher wages, uniformity cannot be attained throughout. As such, a legislative measure which would be enforced upon all alike is perhaps the only way out of the difficulty. Conscious, as the humane among the mill-owners are, of the cruelty of the 15 hours' rule, of the loss in the stamina of the mill-hands due to such a practice, and of the laxity of supervision and lessening in the efficiency of the workers, they cannot muster courage and go back to the old ways for fear of loss in dividend. There has thus occurred a breach among the mill-owners, and Mr. Morley will shortly take his stand there to heal it up without much loss of time.

SANSAR MITRA,
21st August, 1906.

Cocaine.

96. The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad), of the 21st August, approves of the measures for bringing cocaine within the purview of the Excise Act of 1896.

VI.—RAILWAY.

HINDOSTHAN,
8th August, 1906.

Educated Natives in the executive staff of the East Indian Railway.

97. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 8th August, received on 20th August, says :—It is a matter of great satisfaction to note that the authorities of the East Indian Railway in order to improve the condition of the executive staff on their line have been entertaining, for the last few months, applications from and engaging the F. A. and B. A. type of educated natives as ticket collectors, &c., on their lines.

TOHFA-I-HIND
18th August, 1906.

Appointment of a commission to examine the question of Railway strikes.

98. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) of 18th August, suggests the appointment of a commission to consider the grievances of the strikers and to ascertain whether the blame lies on them or the East Indian Railway authorities, who have replaced the Indian staff by appointing Europeans and Eurasians on considerably higher salaries, at a great loss to the line itself, the public, and the mercantile community.

ADVOCATE,
19th August, 1906.

The strike and the Railway Men's Association at Asansol.

99. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 19th August, says:—The formation of a Railway Men's Union at Asansol also has put heart into the strikers. The Union levies a small tax. In return it has arranged to put the men on strike, on strike allowance this week. A month's pay and allowance may also be given to them as a start. A donor has paid Rs. 10,000 to the Union. Those few persons who have resumed work on the company's terms stand the chance of social ostracism. Some strikers have taken to hawking swadeshi goods, some secured work in swadeshi firms, the others stand firm in their demand for better terms of service.

SANSAR MITRA,
21st August, 1906.

Strike on the East Indian Railway.

100. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 21st August, says that the strikers on the East Indian Railway are still determined to remain at strike, though eight or ten of them have resumed work. The Company, being sure that the strikers will not return to duty until their demands are satisfied, is replacing them by enlisting inexperienced hands. The employés on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway likewise have submitted a representation. The editor suggests the advisability of the company giving their case proper consideration.

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

Railway in Kashmir.

101. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—Any enterprise to connect Kashmir by railway with India must be characterised as a wild goose chase in view of the latest facts revealed. When the project was broached, three routes were examined. Two have been abandoned and one approved. The total length would be 200 miles, to be covered by 50 miles on the broadgauge system and 150 on the narrow gauge. The estimate of expenditure is one lakh a mile; total two crores of rupees. The severity of Kashmir weather will keep the line almost idle for some months, and the traffic in other months is not likely to be heavy enough. Kashmir is not a country of many resources and the people are poor. The country abounds more in foxes, monkeys and bears than in animals of economic value, or plants and mines that may contain latent wealth. Thus a railway line is hardly likely to increase exports from, if it helps a little to raise imports into Kashmir. Nor is the so-called valley of heaven on earth of any great political or strategical value. It has been estimated we are told, that the financial prospects of the scheme are gloomy indeed. Why then this anxiety to throw away two crores of rupees on such a project? The answer as given by a writer in the Pioneer is that a railway linking Kashmir with India is essential to Major Lotbiniere's great power scheme. The waters of the Jhelum which have for countless ages been running to waste are now to be scientifically turned into electric motive power, to drive mill, mining, irrigating, and railway machinery, in order to open out what is believed to be a fertile land whose hidden treasures only await the wave of the magician's wand—read the roar of the railway engine—to bid it flow with milk and honey! Money will surely flow into the engineer's pockets and the supposed milk and honey will turn into water,—the waters of the Jhelum that run to waste and will continue to run to waste.

ADVOCATE,
20th August, 1906.

Municipal carriages within Railway yard at the Bareilly station.

102. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says:—The Rohilkhand Gazette invites the attention of the Collector of Bareilly to the complaint that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities do not allow the hackney carriages licensed by the municipality to ply within the railway yard, and as the number of carriages licensed by the Oudh and Rohilkhand railway is limited passengers are put to much inconvenience. The paper asks the municipality to prevent the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway licensed carriages to ply in the city, if the Railway is unmindful of the requirements of the public. But the licensing of hackney carriages by the Railway has under Government orders long ceased to exist. Why should an exception be made in favour of Bareilly?

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

Outrage on Hindu ladies by Eurasians on the Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway near Soron.

103. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—The other day, we are told, a dastardly attempt was made to outrage the modesty of certain respectable Hindu ladies by two Eurasian employés of the Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway near Soron. The shrieks of the women brought the guard, who happened to be an Indian, to the scene. He saved the women, but not without being assaulted by the Eurasians. We do not know if criminal proceedings have been instituted against the offenders. We, however, hope the Government will, even in the absence of a formal complaint, take the matter up and order an enquiry into it, in order to prevent repetitions of such outrages on Indian female passengers.

MUKHB-I-ALAM
16th August, 1906.

Waiting-room for native females at Moradabad.

104. The Mukhbir-i-Alám (Moradabad), of 16th August, says that native ladies find it very inconvenient to stop in the present waiting room, as it is far removed from the station itself, and requests that the former waiting room which was just suited to their requirements owing to its proximity to the trains be reopened for use, unless, Indian parda-nashin ladies are allowed to use the second class waiting-room irrespective of the class of tickets they hold.

ADVOCATE,
16th August, 1906.

Railway grievances.

105. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 16th August, received on 20th August, says :—The subject of faulty catering at railway stations has now been taken up seriously by the Railway Board, who have issued a circular to the different railway administrations, both Companies and State Lines, informing them that the Board have in view the necessity for improving the refreshments supplied to first, second, and third class passengers on the several railways in India. They have, therefore, been asked to state what arrangements are now in force for the supply of refreshments, whether by contract, or directly under the railway administration; and, if the former, how the contracts are let and whether in their opinion it would be feasible for the railways to undertake the direct management for the supply of refreshments to all classes of passengers, based on the principle that there shall be no profit made and that the rates would just cover expenses. Now is the time for leaders of public opinion to place their views before the Railway Board on this very important subject.

ADVOCATE,
16th August, 1906.

Refreshments on Railways.

106. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 16th August, received on 20th August, commenting on the unwholesome refreshments supplied to Indian passengers, says on the authority of the Indian Daily News that the Bengali staff of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway have submitted a petition to the Agent setting forth their grievances. Their first complaint is that the scale of pay is too low, lower in fact than that allowed to similar establishments in other railways. The leave rules are also very stringent and privilege leave is seldom granted. The hours of work are too long for the average Indian constitution, with the result that the sick list is always heavy. The accommodation provided is neither sufficient nor sanitary. Only third class passes are allowed to clerks so that they have to sit on the same bench as sweepers. Departmental punishments are inflicted without hearing what the defendant has to say. Favourable consideration may be expected from the Agent.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th August, 1906.

The contractors on the Oudh and Rohilkhand railway.

107. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of 19th August, regrets that Railway authorities have taken no steps to enquire into the mismanagement of the contractors, who hold a large number of passes and have facilities to better the state of things as soon as a voice is raised against them. The paper announces that it has documentary evidence in its possession about the levy of extra money from wayfarers on the Ramganga bridge, and complains against the conduct of Madan Mohan contractor in not answering its letter on the subject.

ANAND,
21st August, 1906.

Proposal for providing all classes of passengers travelling by rail with necessary articles of food.

108. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 21st August, says that the Railway Board has under consideration the proposal for providing all classes of passengers travelling by rail with necessary articles of food. It exhorts the public to take some measures to facilitate matters for the Hindus, whose rigid observance of social rules stands in the way of their eating and drinking freely.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ADVOCATE,
12th August, 1906.

Theft of vernacular papers in transit.

109. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th August, received on 20th August, says :—There appears to be a sort of unanimity in the complaints made by the vernacular newspapers as to the theft of copies in transit. The complaints are so numerous that it is time that the Postmaster General should devise means to prevent such a practice. The complaint is not confined to one newspaper, but is heard in every newspaper office. Moradabad, Etawah, Agra and Lucknow newspapers receive numerous complaints of non-receipt from subscribers. One proprietor even goes so far as to say that if the Post Office was to raise its charge he would be glad to bear the extra expense rather than have the annoyance of receiving complaints from subscribers. These newspapers are not lost at the office of posting but in transit, and it is the Railway Mail Service van which requires close watching. In the meantime the newspapers should bring every complaint received by them to the notice of the Post master-General.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

MUSAFIR,
8th August, 1906.

Islam versus Hinduism.

110. The Musafir (Agra), of 8th August, received on 20th August, has noted certain passages from the Zia-ul-Islam which reflect discredit on the Hindu faith, and has retaliated with equal virulence by quoting references from Muhammadan works on religion.

The passages quoted from the Zia-ul-Islam go to show, that polygamy was prevalent in India, before the Muhammadans came into the country, that incestuous intercourse was not regarded as objectionable, that the Niyog system of marriage had made Indians voluptuous, that rajas and maharajas used to send their wives to others, and that Swami Dayanand is to be regenerated as a beast.

The editor of the Musafir points out that as admitted by Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan in his Tahzib-ul- Ikhlaq, the Muhammadans come from a country where science was quite unknown, and they learnt arithmetic, algebra and medicine from the Indians. He refers to the discord between Abel and Cain, the birth of Khalifa Harum Rashid from a concubine, the polygamy of Solomon, the episode of Lot and Zainab, the Muta and divorce systems, sodomy and polyandry (nikahi musharikat). He then refers to the commentaries of Fakhr-ud-din Kazi who considers incest excusable in a man not knowing that marriage with a mother or sister is unlawful. He quotes a passage from the Koran legalizing polygamy. He recommends a careful study of works on Muhammadan ecclesiastical law to his opponent, and then refutes the objections raised by him in the Zia-ul-Islam. He holds up to ridicule the educational qualifications of his adversary, insinuating that his prophet Muhammad himself was illiterate and advises him to try to follow a smooth course in future.

EXPRESS,
9th August, 1906.

Muslim regeneration.

111. The Express (Lucknow) of 9th August, received on 20th August, says :—While most of the Western students of foreign politics are indulging in dismal prophecies about the future of Islam, and while the Musalmans themselves do not profess high hopes as to their future, a leading article in the Bombay Gazette tries to prove in a curious manner that the contrary view is the right one. . . . .

The theory is a bold and ingenious one and requires careful examination. That this doctrine cannot be unhesitatingly accepted will become manifest when we consider that the writer's knowledge of Islam is not first-hand. It is stated for instance, that the Qoran urges its votaries to seek knowledge, even if need be, on the borders of China, and again, to seek knowledge from the cradle to the grave. No Muhammadan, who can understand the Qoran, will admit the accuracy of the above . . . .

The writer is perfectly correct in his surmise that Islam is not antagonistic to knowledge. The Prophet laid great stress on the obligation of a Muhammadan to acquire knowledge, and the early Caliphs, whether in Bagdad or in Cordova, ably carried out these precepts. The Arabs were the pioneers of science in the days when Europe was wrapped in the gloom of superstition and steeped in ignorance; liberal courses of study were pursued at the capitals of Saracen power, and even women distinguished themselves as lecturers and as poets.

* * * * * * * *

The principles of the progress of human society are all found in Islam. The decay of the Musalmans was owing to their forsaking the precepts of their religion; their revival must be due to their returning to those precepts. But we question the very basis of the argument on which the whole of this superstructure is raised. The regeneration of Muslim society, marked though it be, is really very limited, and it is specially limited in India, where the writer sees the most abundant signs of progress. We pointed out in our last that this country does not possess one Muhammadan institution which could turn out scholars who might take their place with the missionaries of other religions. Is this the state of the more backward Turkey? Decidedly not. The Sultan has himself sent a deputation satisfying all the conditions of suitable delegates at the Japanese Religious Conference. And it should be remembered that these delegates possess liberal education of the highest order. There is hardly one man in India who could fulfil the conditions. Surely this does not show that European domination is the cause of Muslim regeneration. There are many eminent doctors, engineers, and other professional men in Turkey who have made many important discoveries and inventions. We never heard of any Indian Muslim having done anything of the sort. How can the Gazette then dwell with such emphasis on the regeneration of Muslim society, under such circumstances?

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th August, 1906.

The Indian Muslim League, Lahore.

112. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar, of 20th August, hails with delight, the establishment of the Indian Muslim League at Lahore, which is a strong Muhammadan centre. It aims, briefly stated, at promoting a feeling of faithfulness to the British Government in the minds of the Musalmans of India, and at their political culture. He suggests the desirability of the League holding its annual meetings in the same towns in which the Aligarh Conference, or the Darul Ulum Nidwa hold theirs, as this course will save time, trouble, and expense to all concerned. The writer says that to his personal knowledge there are many Muhammadans advocating social, moral, agricultural and commercial culture to be met with amongst the members of the Nidwa.

CITIZEN,
20th August, 1906.

Prohibition of the lectures of Swami Yogindrapal of the Arya Samaj.

113. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 20th August, says:—The news of the prohibition enjoined on Swami Yogandrapal for lecturing in the premises of the Batala Arya Samaj, is a strange commentary on the attitude of the Batala officials towards a religious body like the Arya Samaj. It must be noted that the said Swami did not wish to speak in a place, where the fear of antagonism could be at all apprehended. It was not a public road or thorough-fare, nor the proximity of a Muhammadan Masjid, where the possibility of an alleged injury to the Muhammadan feelings could be entertained; but the place of lecture was a private house owned and reserved by the Arya Samaj for the exclusive use of their members and lecturers. Nor, may it be presumed, was the lecture meant for a mixed audience of both the Hindus and Muhammadans. Under such circumstances we do not see if the gratuitous interference of the Magistrate could have any justification on the ground of legality. The mere pretext that because a certain section of the Muhammadans could feel in him an inveterate foe of their own religious vagaries, is no just reason why his lecture ought to have been stopped. We hope the authorities of the Arya Pratinidhi Sabha will spare no time to move the higher authorities, and demand a just retribution for the encroachment of the right of liberty which was so thoughtlessly encroached upon in the case under notice.

MUSAFIR,
23rd August, 1906.

The Arya Faith in Japan.

114. The Musáfir (Agra), of 23rd August, in reply to the sarcastic remarks of Mahatma Munshi Ramji, remonstrates with him and urges him not to widen the gulf and cause schisms in the camp, and explains that Pandit Bhojdat is prepared to go to Japan if the Sabha makes no arrangements. He intends taking a graduate with him, and if he does go, it will be nine months before the conference begins its sittings, so that he may be able to learn the Japanese and preach the Vaidic faith in that language during his stay in Japan.

The Awaza-i-Khalk (Benares), of 24th August, says that the Arya Samaj of Benares has sent an English translation of a work by Pandit Sheo Lal Sharma, M.A., a Munsif in the province of Agra, which is an examination of the merits of the religions of India. A letter also has been addressed to the Private Secretary to the Mikado suggesting that the President of the Benares Samaj will be very willing to furnish any information sought regarding the Vedic faith.

ARYA MITTRA,
16th August, 1906.

Influence of religion on Europeans.

115. The Arya Mittra (Agra), of the 16th August, says :—Religion has ceased to exercise any influence upon the minds of Europeans. They now devote themselves entirely to what they call political matters which alone in their opinion can ameliorate the condition of a nation. It is an acknowledged fact that a complete devotion to self-interest, and apathy to the interests of others brings about disastrous results in course of time. Matters in Europe have come to a crisis. The people there have begun to realise their situation and are beginning to adopt revolutionary measures to secure their rights, of which the present condition of Russia is a remarkable illustration. This is all due to the absence of a religious element in the administration of justice, and the selfishness of Government and its office-bearers. Religious teaching is imparted in Europe through a class of missionaries who go to church once a week and occasionally preach a formal sermon without taking any real interest. This is all the religion they have, and it is surprising that neither the missionaries act up to the teachings contained in the Bible, nor do they succeed in impressing on others the efficacy of such teaching. The Bible teaches that Christ's self-crucifixion was an atonement for the sins of others. It is therefore unintelligible under what law Christians are punished for their misdeeds by their Christian rulers. The Bible teaches us to help our neighbour, but the Christian Powers of Europe have been continually oppressing their neighbour Turkey. The treatment recently given by the Russians to the Jews is another striking instance of their not acting up to the teachings of the Bible. The Bible again teaches that thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife ; all the same two Hindu women have recently been kidnapped by a Christian from Hathras. In conclusion he advises the Christians in India to look up the teachings in the Bible, regulating the relations between the rulers and the ruled, and to act up to them. The editor says with regret that the attitude of Europeans towards Indians has forced them to adopt extreme measures like striking work on the East Indian Railway. It is reported that discontent is brewing on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and another strike is apprehended.

AL-BASHIR,
21st August, 1906.

The lecture of Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya at Aligarh and the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College.

116. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of 21st August, in criticising the remarks of the Panjabi on the absence of the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, from the lecture delivered by Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya, and pointing out that friendly feelings cannot be cultivated unless the two nations mix freely, says that if the Principal of the college has made a mistake in not permitting the students to attend the lecture of the well-known opponent of the Urdu language, let our critics distribute a few thousand more copies of pamphlets like "Sivaji and Roshanara," or hold the next celebration of Sivaji's anniversary at Aligarh under the presidency of some Muhammadan leader and that will lead to harmony. He concludes with the remark that his friends clamour for friendship and union at one moment, and do things calculated to cause disagreement the next, and yet expect to promote friendly feeling between the two nations.

Religious tension between Europe and Turkey.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th August, 1906.

1. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut) of the 24th August, says that religious prejudices and differences have, as a rule, been at the bottom of all evils in the administration of justice and disturb the harmony of societies. The Christian Powers of Europe, in spite of religious differences, unite when opposed by a foreign power professing a different religion from their own. The Christian missionaries sent out to different countries to spread the light of religion and civilization among barbarians profess to be herdsmen sent to save the flock of the celestial father from wolves; but they themselves play the wolf when their feelings are hurt by foreigners, or when notice is taken of the misconduct of a Christian by a Foreign Power, and war becomes inevitable. On the other hand European Powers have turned a deaf ear to the cries of thousands of Christians whose blood is being shed in Russia. Europe prides itself for advocating liberty and freedom from religious prejudice, but views the policy of Turkey with a jealous eye, and is always prepared to bring pressure to bear on her merely through religious vindictiveness.

Formation of religious conferences in Turkey.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th August, 1906.

2. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th August, says that some articles, published in an Egyptian newspaper, Allawai, under the head of Aljamaat-ul-Islamia, suggest the advisability of constituting two Muhammadan Conferences in Constantinople, under the patronage of the Sultan, the object of the one being to better the condition of Turkey, and that of the other to ameliorate and protect the religion of Islam all over the world. The policy of these conferences should be purely religious, like that of the Christian missions which are spread over all parts of the world.

The Sultan has realised that he is looked upon as the religious leader and Caliph of all Musalmans, but in spite of all this he is unable to exercise his influence in cases where the rights of the Muhammadans are interfered with or when they are oppressed. The above proposal if carried into effect will save him from all blame for not standing forth as the champion of Islam. The conferences will send out delegates to different places to propagate Islam, and to impress upon Musalmans the necessity for raising subscriptions for their proper maintenance. The editor recommends that committees and sub-committees be established in different cities and countries, and appeals to all Musalmans to join the common cause, which, once brought into working order, will bring about most beneficial results in the shape of reviving their arts and industries and infusing in them a new national life.

The Treaty of Tibet.

BHARAT JIWAN,
27th August, 1906.

3. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 27th August, after giving an account of the agreement between the Government of India and China in connection with the Treaty of Tibet, states that the articles were not in consonance with the wishes of Lord Curzon. Tibet still holds the position it did before. It is well that His Lordship's views were not acted upon in the matter. All the same what satisfaction can the poor Indian tax-payer have for meeting the cost of more than a crore of rupees expended in the Tibet Mission from India. The editor remarks with regret that self-willed and obstinate rulers do what they like, and do not give ear to the proposals of poor Indians.

The British position in India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd August. 1906.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), 23rd August, says that there is the false bombast of India having been won and of being held by the sword. It was this notion that led to the insolent suggestion that Bengal could be easily put down by a troop of dragoons. If every Anglo-Indian in India were subject to the same Arms Act as the Indian it would not be very difficult to deal with an Anglo-Indian rising, and a troop of Gurkhas would be quite sufficient for the purpose. Professor Seeley exposed this fallacy and hollow conceit ruthlessly :—"India can hardly be said to have been conquered at all by foreigners; she has rather conquered herself. . . The sum of what I have urged is that the conquest of India is not in the ordinary sense a conquest at all, because it was not the act of a state, and was not accomplished by the army and the money of a state." Who has ever heard of a body of merchants registered as a company, conquering an empire? The superiority of the European soldier, says the great writer, is a myth. It consists merely of superior discipline. . . . . "He (Dupleix) perceived also that the native of India was quite capable of receiving European discipline and learning to fight with European efficiency. This then was the talisman which the Company possessed and which enabled it not merely to hold its own among the powers of India but to surpass them, not some incommunicable physical or moral superiority, as we love to imagine—but a superior discipline and military system which could be communicated to the natives of India." There is hardly any people in India now, who properly disciplined and drilled, would not be as good as any European troops. The Bengalis have long been regarded unfit for war. Let them raise a regiment of their own, treat it as part of the army, and see how it acquits itself in field and in barracks. So long as the challenge is not accepted and the matter put to the test, the accusation levelled against the Bengali or any other race is baseless and ungenerous. There is no permanent unfitness or permanent superiority.

The following well-known passages of Professor Seeley may be forgotten by pressmen whose ignorance is matched by their impudence, but they should be always borne in mind by the responsible rulers of India: "There is then no Indian nationality, though there are some germs out of which we can conceive an Indian nationality developing itself. It is this fact, and not some enormous superiority on the part of the English race, that makes our Empire in India possible. If there could arise in India a nationality-movement similar to that which we witnessed in Italy, the English Power could not even make the resistance that was made in Italy by Austria, but must succumb at once. . . For it is a condition of our Indian Empire that it should be held without any great effort. . . The moment India began really to show herself what we so idly imagine her to be, a conquered nation, that moment we should recognise perforce the impossibility of retaining her. . . The moment a mutiny is but threatened, which shall be no mere mutiny, but the expression of a universal feeling of nationality, at that moment all hope is at an end, as all desire ought to be at an end, of preserving our Empire. For we are not really conquerors of India, and we cannot rule her as conquerors."

AKHBAR-I-INTIKHAB,
August, 1906.

Self-Government.

5. The Akhbar-i-Intikhab (Meerut) for August, says that Indians have been subjected to great political disadvantages, which the Indian National Congress has been trying to remedy for the last twenty years. Their repeated demands for self-government have been put off on the ground of unfitness, but as a matter of fact Government seems to be afraid of conferring this privilege as it will lead necessarily to a curtailment of expenditure, and to the enlistment of Indians on comparatively low salaries to those at present paid to European officers. The editor concludes by reminding the British Government that the aim is not that all connections between England and India should be severed, but that the voice of the people should be heard in local matters.

It further notes that though India was the most civilized country in Asia before the arrival of the English, British policy has kept India in a very backward condition, while Japan has become one of the foremost nations.

ADVOCATE,
23rd August, 1906.

Training politicians.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 23rd August, received on 29th August, says that if members of the several professions require a good equipment, why not the student of politics, with whom it is not an arm-chair occupation meant to fill in his leisure moments? In November next will be opened in Germany a school to provide political education for party journalists, secretaries, and agitators. The course will last for six months, and the number of students in any session is not to exceed thirty, in order that they may receive as much individual attention as possible. The schools will be maintained out of the party funds, and about £6 a month will be provided for the maintenance of each pupil, who will also receive his travelling expenses at the beginning and at the end of the course. Should the student have a family, special provision will be made for its support during the six months. The subjects taught are to include political economy, sociology, the history of the Social Democratic party, the history of materialism, and the principles of constitutional law and history: but it is pointed out that the instruction given will be made as practical as possible with reference to the student's intended career. No "party novices" will be accepted, and students may be selected for a second term of six months if they show exceptional promise. In this country such a training is all the more required. The Servant of India Society of Poona has taken up the work.

ADVOCATE,
22nd August, 1906.

State irresponsibility.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 22nd August says:—With what high-handedness the rulers put to practice their hobbies and squander away the people's money is plain from the reply given in the Bengal Council to some questions on the Ranchi College Scheme. Mr. J. Chaudhari wanted to get information about the progress of the scheme. Mr. Richardson, in replying, said: "There are no buildings under actual construction. It has been ascertained that up to date the preliminary expenditure in connection with the proposed Model or Arts College at Ranchi amounts to Rs. 28,000 (for materials). In addition, some expenditure has been incurred in acquiring land, but I am unable to say how much of this is for the Arts College. The subscriptions to the college scheme which have been promised amount to Rs. 3,12,897, of which Rs. 2,48,897 have been paid and are in deposit in the Bank of Bengal. From the correspondence which has been published in the daily press, it will appear that the proposal has not been referred to His Majesty's Secretary of State." Evidently the reply was framed before the publication of the Government of India's rejection of the project. Just think twenty-eight thousand rupees and more spent on the scheme before it was considered by the Supreme Government, much less approved by it and recommended to the Secretary of State. If this is not squandering, by what other name should it go? Cannot somebody be made to refund it?

OUDH PUNCH,
30th August, 1906.

The Muhammadans and their relation with the Congress.

8. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of 30th August, says that those versed in English politics and mode of government, cannot fail to see that the day is not far off when the proposals of the Congress, which sound at present like a voice in the wilderness, will receive the approval of Government, and its opponents will meet with shame and disappointment. The Muhammadans do not open their eyes to see how things stand, nor do they endeavour to understand political discussions; on the other hand opposition to the Congress is with them an article of faith, and their expectations cannot but end in disappointment. God however is to be thanked that advocates of the Congress are beginning to be found in the ranks of Muhammadans also, and can be found even amongst those trained at the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th August, 1906.

Causes conducive to the greatness of Afghanistan.

9. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 29th August, after recounting the causes that have led to the greatness of Japan and have enabled her to gain decisive victories over a great Power like Russia, insinuates that Afghanistan may likewise rise one day to be an equally great Power. The Afghans are no doubt a very headstrong people, but they can be educated by careful training. They are capable of careful scrutiny of facts with a view to ascertain the truth, and are of a retentive disposition. They have the power of imitation to a remarkable degree, and can when necessary, adapt the ways and manners of others to suit their own requirements.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
21st August, 1906.

A murder case in Baroda.

10. The Jásus (Agra), of the 21st August, says that there are human monsters even in Baroda, where education is making rapid progress, and as an example cites the case of Apa Sahib's wife who is said to have been tortured to death by Apa Sahib, his mother and her muharrir. The evidence so far proves that deceased was shut up in a room, whipped, and kept fasting till she was dead. The medical evidence proves that death was due to the injuries sustained by her. Apa Sahib has confessed his guilt, and says that his wife was tortured because she did not bring with her the dower promised by her parents.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th August, 1906.

Gambling in Jaora state.

11. A correspondent in the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 26th August, says that the karinda of Jaora has granted permission to four persons from Meerut to establish a common gaming house, which is proving ruinous to the people of Jaora. The karinda and Superintendent of Police are requested to take early steps to stop this game, and to discountenance the endeavours of certain local bankers who wish to start a similar concern.

JASUS,
21st August, 1906.

Jaipur.

12. The Jásus (Agra), of the 21st August, referring to an article in its issue of 28th July, characterizing the conduct of Thakur Umrao Singh of Jaipur as tyrannical, tenders an apology and retracts the allegations therein on the strength of a letter received from another correspondent rebutting the former charges. The editor has further asked his original correspondent to explain his conduct in furnishing incorrect information, and to give such proof as he can in support of his allegations, if they are true.

JASUS,
21st August, 1906.

Kapurthala.

13. The Jásus (Agra), of the 21st August, says that a relation of the Assistant to the Private Secretary to the Maharaja of Kapurthala was arrested on strong suspicion of murdering a Brahman boy aged 18 years. He confessed his guilt, but for some mysterious reasons he has been released and further enquiry into the case seems to have been dropped.

The sanitation of Kapurthala is far from satisfactory, and the Municipal Committee is requested to improve matters.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

MUSAFIR,
30th August, 1906.

The murder of Mr. Goss, tea planter, and the conduct of the police in the case.

14. The Musáfir (Agra) of 30th August, says that Dharam Singh who was convicted and sentenced to death (transportation for life) on a charge of murdering Mr. Goss, tea planter of Darjeeling, has been acquitted on appeal by the High Court, and their Lordships in their judgment have dwelt in detail on the part played by the police in manufacturing evidence. The editor remarks that the police were led to act in the manner they did owing to the pressure brought to bear on them to work out the case; and that Government should not allow them to play with men's lives, or to view such matters so lightly. On the contrary they should be considered with the utmost seriousness.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th August, 1906.

Arrest of certain agitators of the swadeshi movement in Bareilly.

15. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of 24th August, reports the arrest of eight enthusiastic agitators of the swadeshi movement on charges under sections 504 and 506 of the Indian Penal Code, for compelling one Daya Ram, druggist, to destroy all the things in his shop which were supposed to contain an admixture of foreign sugar, dissuading his servants from working at his shop, and otherwise bringing pressure to bear on him. The accused have been released on bail.

OUDH AKHBAR,
28th August, 1906.

Bhai Sewa Ram Singh versus Lieutenant Grenfell.

16. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 28th August, says that certain leading gentlemen of Rawalpindi are trying to effect an amicable settlement between the parties on the accused tendering an apology. It is said also that Englishmen have been holding out threats to the complainant that in case he does not accept the apology, they will refer the matter to the jury and manage to get a decision in favour of the accused. The editor thinks that they are not in the wrong, as the jury will consist of Englishmen and they as a rule are notorious for their fellow feeling and spirit of national partizanship. The case of ordinary men can never call forth any serious notice, when important and influential persons like Sewa Ram Singh can be subjected to ignoble treatment. It is to his interest that he should accept the apology lest the decision of the jury in favour of the accused should lead to additional insult and annoyance to the complainant.

RAHBAR,
21st August, 1906.

The prosecution of a sowar in Moradabad.

17. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 21st August, says that a certain relation of Risaldar Mumtaz Husain, who is employed in the cavalry stationed at Lucknow, was abused by the bearer of a European lady. The sowar thereon gave the bearer a beating. The lady appeared on the scene and moved the local police to prosecute him, so that he was kept in the lock-up for the night and sent up for trial next morning. The District Magistrate acquitted the accused. There are certain rumours afloat in the city about the bearer, but what the reality is, is not generally known.

EXPRESS,
23rd August, 1906.

Acquittal of a native coolie charged with the murder of Mr. Goss, a European tea planter.

18. The Express (Lucknow) of 23rd August, received on 29th August, says:—In the Darjeeling murder case it appears Justices Mitter and Holmwood have discharged Dharam Singh who was sentenced to transportation for life by the Sessions Judge of Darjeeling on the charge of murdering a European tea-planter named Goss, who was carrying on an intrigue with certain coolie women, and had asked his servants to procure Dharam Singh's wife. There was no evidence against the man, who was made to undergo the trial at the instance of the police, which set its machinery in motion agaist Dharam Singh because of the feeling of indignation of the local European community.

NAJMI BAZIGH,
16th August, 1906.

Administration of justice between Europeans and Indians.

19. The Najmi Bazigh (Moradabad), of 16th August, received on 27th August, says that one Ilbert Dillon of Poona has been fined only Rs. 200 for outraging the modesty of a respectable Indian lady, though severe sentences are dealt out to natives, specially when the complainant is a European or Eurasian. The editor remarks that this sentence is an apt illustration of national predilection, and is a blot on the British administration of justice. He refers also on the authority of the Jarida to the Bangalore case in which Seth Siddiq has been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment on the bare testimony of the complainant who happened to be a European lady.

(b).—Police.

AKHBAR-I-INTIKHAB,
August, 1906.

Gambling in Meerut.

20. The Akhbar-i-Intikhab (Meerut) for August, says that gambling is said to be going on in the local temple of Baldeoji and the police should be on the look out for the offenders.

ADVOCATE,
26th August, 1906.

Outrage of the modesty of a native Christian girl by a police constable in Saharanpur.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 26th August, says:—A correspondent from Landhoura, district Saharanpur, brings a serious charge against the local police, namely that it refused to entertain a charge brought by a native Christian the modesty of whose daughter was outraged by a police constable.

CITIZEN,
27th August, 1906.

Objectionable conduct of a police officer in Gorakhpur.

22. A correspondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of 27th August says:—Some days ago, a police officer, wishing to infuse into the mind of the Urdu Bazar people a fear of his all-powerful personality, laid a few hard strokes of his whip over the body of a poor bania, who happened to have kept a small basket on the roadside. As people gathered round his trap to ascertain the cause of the cry and the crowd, the officer began to brandish his whip right and left. To add insult to injury, he was using foul language. This conduct on the part of the officer was seriously objectionable.

SANSAR MITRA,
28th August, 1906.

Misbehaviour of a head constable in Katra, Allahabad.

23. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 28th August, says that a police head constable caught hold of the hand of a woman who was passing through Katra with her husband, taking her to be a loose woman for whom he was on the look out. The head constable, being questioned by her husband as to what he meant upset him. This attracted the wayfarers and neighbouring residents, who, being offended at the head constable's misconduct, gave him a good beating so that he is now in the hospital. The editor remarks that the head constable should be severely dealt with for his unwarranted conduct.

CITIZEN,
27th August, 1906.

Unlawful entry into the female compartment by a constable at Phillour station.

24. A correspondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of 27th August says:—A very painful incident occurred last midnight in the up-train at Phillour, when a native travelling constable was seen walking in front of the ladies' compartment of an Intermediate class carriage. Just when the train left Phillour, he stepped into the compartment in which a beautiful Muhammadan woman was sleeping. The woman got up and began to cry. All this had been watched by a gentleman of the adjoining compartment, who went to his bath-room and looking into the ladies' compartment indignantly asked the fellow to go out and explain his conduct. "To make water I have come," was his reply. On hearing this, the gentleman's companion rose and caught the policeman who had by that time come down to the foot-board. They held him on till the train got to the next station, and the matter was brought to the notice of the guard. The constable was relieved at a subsequent station (perhaps Jullunder) where an Indian police officer was present to make the necessary enquiries and take the statements of the complainant, the offender and the persons who were travelling in the carriage with the lady. The fellow travelled on to Lahore in the guard's van, where, it is hoped, he was handed over to the police. We trust that severe notice will be taken of the offender's conduct and an example made of him.

The dispersion of the Barisal Conference and the suit for damages.

25. The Bhārat Jiwan (Benares), of the 27th August, says that Mr. Kemp and Mr. Emerson were sued for damages amounting to ten thousand five hundred rupees in connection with the dispersion of the Barisal conference. The police report that formed the groundwork of the action taken by Government in the matter is not forthcoming. Inscrutable are the ways of the police!

ARYA MITRA,
24th August, 1906.

Police oppression and thoughtlessness.

26. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 24th August, says that a European Police Inspector laid his hands on Mr. Nicholson, a teacher in the St. Joseph's Collegiate School, Allahabad, while he was standing near a wine-shop and had him shut up for the night. The teacher proved his innocence, and then brought a suit against the Inspector and eventually obtained a decree against him for Rs. 300. The editor thinks that when the high-handedness of the police can go so far as to affect members of the European community, what chance do poor natives stand of escaping their oppression.

Local Self-Government.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 23rd August, says:—In municipalities in these provinces there is practically no self-government. We know how things are carried on in Allahabad, and in the mufassil it is much worse. The following facts are reported from Bareilly:- Some time ago at a meeting of the Municipal Board the Collector and Chairman took the Secretary to task for not putting up before him previously the papers about certain appeals against the decisions of Sub-Committees, and obtaining his orders before they were laid before the Board. So he quietly wrote against each item of such business, "Refer to Chairman," without even asking the members anything about it. He took it for granted that they agreed with him. He merely said it was impossible to decide such questions at a meeting of 16 members. Later on, the Chairman met with an accident which confined him to bed, but as he did not proceed on leave he continued to be Chairman of the Municipal Board. One of the Vice-Chairmen reported to him in writing that a muharrir of the municipality had been guilty of falsifying accounts. The Chairman sent back a written order that the man should be dismissed. The matter came up before the Board and a resolution was recorded that the muharrir should be prosecuted. On the resolution being sent on to the official Chairman he wrote that he did not think a prosecution would be successful, and the resolution was ordered to be filed. Under what law was the resolution of the Board cancelled? How long is the farce of self-governing municipalities to be kept up?

ARYA MITRA,

Lanterns for ekkas in Agra.

28. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 24th August, says that the lanterns used by ekka-drivers burn very dimly, and are of no use; but neither the municipality nor the police take any steps in the matter. The ekka-drivers also generally light their lanterns only when they think they are close to the police stand. The editor invites the attention of the District Magistrate to the matter, and suggests that each ekka should have two well-lighted lanterns.

ARYA MITRA,

Agra muncipality.

29. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th August, says that the sanitary arrangements in Gokalpura, Hing-ki-mandi, and Mansa Debi quarters in Agra are very unsatisfactory, but the municipality seems to take no measures in spite of its attention having been directed to the matter repeatedly.

The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 26th August, says that the observance of the Dasehra and Moharram festivals, the Gaorakshani Sabha, the movement to make Nagri a common script for Upper India, the question of restricting meat shops to a particular locality are some of the causes that have tended to disturb friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. The rival communities should not allow racial and selfish motives to affect their union.

The National Council of Education.

35. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 23rd August, referring to the National Council of Education, remarks that the young men who pass through the hands of the Council must be equipped in a different fashion altogether. Their physical education must be sound. National education in India must be Japanised. There must be the same intense patriotism, the same love of work, the same devotion to duty. And every young man must be something of an athlete, trained in the art of private defence, the jiujutsu by preference. We want men self-reliant and self-respecting, who must practise self-restraint. At the same time they must not submit to being either bullied or assaulted. No young Japanese is a strong man to begin with and yet, when he has gone through a course of jiujutsu he is afraid of no man. If the practice of Brahmacharya is to be encouraged and inculcated, muscular strength must go hand in hand with it.

38. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 27th August, says that the circumstances of India are quite different from those of France and Belgium. There a majority of agriculturists are educated, and are taught at the cost of the State, and it is on this account that they are prosperous. In Japan too education is compulsory. While in India people are mostly uneducated, and it is the miserable lot of the uneducated Indians that has led the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale in the Supreme Council and Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose in the Bengal Council to propose that in primary schools education should be given free, but it is very much to be regretted that this proposal did not receive the approval of Government.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

40. The following verses appear in the Indian People (Allahabad), of 23rd August :—

TO SIR BAMPFYLDE FULLER.

Must thou go, my patron good,
Severed from thy faithful few,
Leaving all in rueful mood,
Maddening o'er thy long adieu?
Woman's love and friendship's zeal,
Dear as both have been to me—
What are they to all I feel,
With a nabob's faith for thee?
Idol of my breaking heart!
Must thou me thus surely leave?
Must thou so abruptly part?
Must thou thus me bereave?
My hopes and aspirations
Have been now nipped in the bud;
Pivot of my gyrations
Hammered down with a thud,
Through thy friendly efforts I rose Beyond expectation to
A Councillor,—a Curzon chose
And meant more for me to do.
Who will protect me when thou
Art away to thy far home?
Who will be so kind as thou?
Whom shall I warmly welcome?
"A gem only knows a gem,
Is an established saying;
Our worth is ad valorem
Sure against all gainsaying.
Taunts and jeers of countrymen
With what face shall I now bear?
I shall be butt of all men
In thy absence, I do fear.
I am pucca Apkewaste,
I am a partitionwallah,
I am a nabob Shikaste,
Better known Sallimullah.
Who will be my Delkhosh rose?
Who will make such fuss and stir?
Thou hast thrown me into throes,
Oh Sir Fuller, Sir Fuller!

—A GRIEVING NABOB.

ARYA MITRA,
24th August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

41. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th August, says that Sir Bampfylde Fuller is still a source of discord between Hindus and Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal, and the tension is so great that Muhammadan coolies and musicians refused to join certain Hindu celebrations. The Hindus have therefore ceased to employ Muhammadan coolies and carriage drivers, and it is understood that they are beginning to starve for lack of work.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 31st August, expresses exactly the same views on the subject.

OUDH AKHBAR.
31st August, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation.

42. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 31st August, says that Sir Bampfylde Fuller has gone a little before his time for reasons best known to him, and deprecates the conduct of Muhammadans in shedding crocodile tears at the acceptance of his resignation, and their attitude in charging Governnent with weakness.

ADVOCATE,
23rd August, 1906

The Civilian Indignation at Sir Bampfylde Fuller's downfall.

43. The following is an extract from the Advocate (Lucknow) of 23rd August on the subject:—Do the Anglo-Indian papers of Calcutta or the indignant Civilians of Eastern Bengal know what becomes of these letters? They are reproduced in Indian papers, their translations are published in the vernaculars of Upper India, where some tension already exists. Hindus and Muhammadans possess here a number of vernacular papers which are desirous of getting hold of such opportunities, to publish inflammatory writings and excite feelings of hatred and contempt. We ask, are these tactics likely to help Government?

But how are the mighty fallen! The letter of an "I. C. S." in the Pioneer will be read with feelings of amusement. The usual dodge of inciting the anger of the English public by saying that Bengalis insult English ladies has been resorted to. If a Bengali is rude towards a lady, be she English or Indian, the hands of the law are long enough to punish the man. Has any Bengali been ever prosecuted on the charge of insulting English ladies, or spitting on the ground while an Englishman is seen passing by him? If he has not been, why then invent stories. The letter of "I.C.S." is amusing; he poses to be the protector of the poor against their oppressors, and who are they? The vakils, doctors, zamindars, teachers—the very men who have and are devoting their savings to save them from famine, to give them education, to revive industries for them. "I.C.S." a highly paid official of the State, has devoted his life to India, but he seems to insinuate that the vakil and the doctor, who do not draw a shell from the State treasury, and who work more for love of their people, have not! The letter would lead the people to believe that the zamindars are so many cut-throats, and the vakils dacoits, and they would bleed the people to death but for "I.C.S." Can egotism go any further?

RAFIQ PUNCH,
21st August, 1906.

Sir Bampylde Fuller and the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal.

44. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad) of 21st August, received on 27th August, says that the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal are showng signs of hearty sympathy with Sir Bampfylde Fuller. A mass meeting was held on 14th August, at the mosque in Sirajganj, and was attended by about three thousand men. Resolutions were passed expressing sympathy with Sir Bampfylde Fuller at the acceptance of his resignation, and condemning the conduct of the students and the officials attached to the schools whose disaffiliation was recommended. It was stated that Sir Bampfylde Fuller was the true loving and deep friend of the Muhammadans, and was a wise, prudent and strong ruler. Nawab Khwaja Salimullah of Dacca as president of the provincial Muhammadan Association proposes to give a farewell address to Sir Bampfylde Fuller before his departure.

Swadeshi sugar in Lucknow.

45. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 28th August, says that the question of boycotting foreign sugar is being taken up with great zeal in Lucknow and several meetings have been held to inculcate the use of swadeshi sugar only.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd August 1906.

The essence of swadeshism.

46. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 23rd August, says that the real secret of the swadeshi movement is not commercial but national, though ultimately the law of supply and demand must regulate all produce, which must also face the competition of the open market. But, bearing in mind the real character of the movement, we cannot overlook the fact that it has a sentimental and intellectual side as well as its practical aspect. The former is being supplied by Bengal. The national sentiment is inspiring practical efforts in that province. The one is as indispensable as the other.

RAHBAR,
21st August, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

47. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 21st August, says that the swadeshi movement has not met with success everywhere. There is a large section of the Indian community that looks upon its progress with an eye of jealousy; about 21 crores of Indians are illiterate and all that they care for is to earn their pittance, and to eke out their miserable existence. It is only about one crore of Indians who are in a position to improve the resources of their country. In Bengal the movement is receiving every support from people of all classes, the Punjab ranks next, and the public in large cities at least do what they can to help the movement. In the United Provinces however very little practical work has been done, though the matter has been much talked about all over the Provinces, while Rajputana is so backward that even the educated people there do not know what is going on in the world outside. Bombay is by far ahead of Bengal in point of education, but the one thing that the people there care for is money-making. Economical products have a charm for them, irrespective of considerations as to their being indigenous products or otherwise.

Under these circumstances it is desirable that swadeshi associations should be formed everywhere and lectures widely delivered so as to give the movement an impetus, and to place it on a firm basis, in order that it may not end in smoke. The propagation of the movement is incumbent on all Indians, irrespective of creed or nationality, and those who fail to discharge this duty are committing a sin for which they will be answerable.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th August, 1906.

The National Feeling in India.

48. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 26th August, says :—A still greater fixed misconception is that because there was no consciousness of nationality in India such a consciousness can never grow here. The ruling class and a number of Englishmen are wedded to this misconception and they ridicule every national movement in India. Yet such a feeling is of slow growth, and no blindness can be more hopeless than that which refuses to see the growth of the national sentiment in India. For, after all, the miracle of the growth of a nation in India is not so great as the wonder of a little island in the German Ocean holding dominion over the vast stretches of country in India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
30th August, 1906.

Disunion in Bengal.

49. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 30th August, says that the Government having partitioned Bengal, has accepted the resignations of Lord Curzon and Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and has by its policy succeeded in maintaining official prestige on the one hand and gaining the good-will of the aggrieved public on the other. It is simply useless holding meetings to protest against the acceptance of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation. They are only calculated to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans. The bitterness of feeling has been carried to such an extent that the Hindus were not able to take out their procession on the Janam Ashtmi day owing to the refusal at the eleventh hour of the Muhammadan labourers and ghari-walas; to assist them though ultimately the local authorities succeeded in inducing the Nawab of Dacca to get them to join the procession.

The swadeshi movement is calculated to find work for a large number of unemployed labourers. The parties should therefore forget all racial prejudices, and should unite for the good of the country.

The Muhammadans can, if they like, memorialize Government in a variety of other ways without doing things calculated to injure the interests of the Indian nation as a whole.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st August, 1906.

The attitude of Government towards the native press.

50. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 21st August, says that the comments of the native press on the relations between Europeans and natives are looked upon as seditious, while the views expressed by the Anglo-Indian Press are regarded as conducive to peaceful administration. It is, however, the duty of the Native Press to keep Government well informed of native opinion on current topics of the day, and the editors and proprietors are no more punishable for a true expression of the public feeling than is a surgeon for performing a necessary operation. Instances of European high-handedness are brought to light every day which go to show that the very sight of a native is disgusting to the European mind. The cases of Lieutenant Grenfell, of a native station master beaten near Ludhiana by a European guard, the assaults on a Muhammadan shopkeeper who refused to supply a packet of tea on credit to a European with whom he had no current account, are of recent occurrence and fresh in the public mind.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
21st August, 1906.

The British nation and freedom.

51. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad) of 21st August, received on 27th August, says that the British nation is no doubt passionately fond of freedom, but no practical proofs of this being the case have been given in the case of India, Africa and other Asiatic dependencies. The Indians have been for nearly a century under British rule, but are still behind Japan in the race for freedom and civilization, though only quarter of a century has developed Japan into what it is at the present day.

OUDH AKHBAR,
31st August, 1906.

The Anglo-Indian Press on the present situation in India.

52. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 31st August, says that the Anglo-Indian papers are doing their best to incite feelings of hostility between Hindus and Muhammadans, instead of appeasing the excited feelings at a time when the resignation and departure of Sir Bampfylde Fuller from India, the appointment of a frontier commision in Egypt, and Mr. Morley's speech are all calculated to create a lull and promote good feeling. The paper refers particularly to an article in the Civil and Military Gazette, and criticizes it thoroughly, pointing out that it is certainly calculated to foment ill-feeling.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,

53. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th August, referring to certain complaints published in the Dilshad against Mr. Adams, the Joint Magistrate of Moradabad, approves of the action of the District Magistrate in amicably settling the misunderstanding by interviewing the editor of the newspaper, who admitted his mistake and has promised to correct the impression in a subsequent issue.

RAFIQ PUNCH,

A Madrasi girl outraged by a Eurasian railway officer in the Midnapur district.

54. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 21st August, complains that the cases of European and Eurasian high-handed proceedings have been on the increase during the current year throughout India. Recently Mr. Wood, a Eurasian railway officer, outraged the modesty of a Madrasi girl. The father of the girl has instituted a criminal suit against the accused, who has been released on bail. Taking into consideration the case of a chamar who was recently wounded by the shot of a European in the same Presidency, and who was made to pay Rs. 5 as compensation, Mr. Wood who outraged the girl is not likely to be severely punished.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Assault by two natives on a European.

55. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 23rd August, says that two natives were put up before the Joint Magistrate on Friday last on a charge of having trespassed into the house of a Mr. Schofell near the Widows' Home in Thornhill Road and assaulted him severely with sticks. It appears the accused, who live close by, took up the cause of a female relative who owed a grudge against the complainant's wife. Mr. Schofell was taken unawares and received a severe blow on the head and others on the body. Mr. Chiene appeared for the prosecution and Babu Bindesr Prasad and Salig Ram for the defence. The accused pleaded not guilty, but the case being proved, the Magistrate sentenced one of the accused to one month's rigorous imprisonment and the other to three weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

Suicide by a Salt Sub-Inspector caused by the over-zealous conduct of his official superior.

56. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 26th August, says :—A correspondent writes to us from Kulittalai in the Trichinopoly district :—

In the interests of native official life, I hope you will give due publicity to the following incident in your widely circulated paper :—

On Thursday last, the Salt Sub-Inspector of this place committed suicide by throwing himself into the river Cauvery. The following is the cause attributed by the public for his death :—It seems that there was a petition pending against the Sub-Inspector for making false entries in his diary ; and an Assistant Inspector of Salt was duly deputed to enquire into the truth of the petition. Some two or three days before the incident, the Assistant Inspector, for reasons best known to himself, is said to have searched the Sub-Inspector's house thrice in the day; once at daybreak, again at about 8-30 P. M., and lastly, at about 12 in the midnight—to see if the Sub-Inspector was in the house. In all his three visits the Sub-Inspector was not found in his house, but was absent in camp. The over-zealous Assistant Inspector went to the Sub-Inspector's house at 12 in the night, and knocked at the outer door. The Sub-Inspector's wife, a young girl of about 20, the sole occupant of the house that night, remonstrated with the Inspector and would not open the door, as there was no male inside. The Assistant Inspector would not leave her there, but it is alleged he insisted upon the girl opening the door. The girl once again repeated the fact of the absence of her husband, but the Assistant Inspector would not be satisfied, till he entered the house alone, at midnight, to the great annoyance of the young girl, and is said to have searched the whole house, including the couple's bedding, in vain, to see if the Sub-Inspector was there. The Assistant Inspector reluctantly made his way out of the house, crestfallen, a sadder man than before.

The feelings of the girl were much wounded, so much so, that she felt it her first duty to reveal the outrage to her husband, who returned home the next morning. The husband, a social amiable and sensitive man took this to heart. Hearing that his wife, when alone had opened the door, and had some conversation with a stranger (the Assistant Inspector), he at once fell into a mad rage, repeatedly asked the girl whether the Assistant Inspector had the audacity to enter the house at midnight, and search for him, as if he was an escaped convict, and repeatedly beat himself in the breast, giving vent to his feelings. Since then, till his death (two or three days after), he ceased to directly talk to his wife and to take his meals properly. The wounded feelings grew stronger day by day, till at last he took the course already described.

INDIAN PEOPLE.

The lesson of the strikes.

57. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 26th August says, that while the Bombay postmen's strike, which has happily terminated, was in progress, it was triumphantly announced that a number of Europeans, including the Commissioner of Police himself, were working at the post office, and several Europeans went out with registered parcels and letters to ensure their prompt delivery. These gentlemen deserve all credit for the splendid work done by them, but what is done in an emergency cannot be looked upon as routine work. Supposing the strike had continued how long could the Commissioner of Police and policemen have carried on the work of postmen? Then there is work and work. There was the strike of street sweepers in Calcutta. Could the Commissioner of Police and the policemen of Calcutta have swept the streets and kept them clean? The municipality was compelled to give the men an increase of salary of one rupee each and they have resumed work. We think it is a spirit of sheer and desperate bravado that induces a number of Anglo-Indian papers to declare that strikes can be overcome with ease and there is no trouble in dealing with them. It seems to us that the struggle has just begun. No movement is formidable to begin with, and consequently the strikes so far have been comparatively easy to deal with. But look at their extent and the variety of the classes affected by them. Who can doubt that Labour is trying to raise its head in India? As soon as Unions are established all over the country and there is something like an organisation, strikes will not be so easily put down as they are now. The tendency that these strikes now have of bringing about an understanding between the educated and uneducated classes cannot be overlooked, and the labour problem is bound to become a serious problem in the course of a few years.

OUDH AKHBAR,
31st August, 1906.

A generous grant of legal remuneration to Mr. N. Gupta, barrister-at-law.

58. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 31st August, says that editors of newspapers are surprised at the generous grant of Rs. 250, to Mr. N. Gupta, barrister-at-law, instead of the legal fee of Rs. 30 demanded by him, for conducting on behalf of Government the well-known case against Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, and insinuates that this action of Government is only calculated to stimulate other barristers and vakils to come forward to prosecute similar cases for the Crown. Another side of the question is that Mr. Gupta showed strength of character in accepting the brief for the Crown when others were not prepared to do so. The editor remarks that the press hitherto has been silent on the question of the cost incurred by Babu Surendra Nath Banerji in his defence.

SARASWATI,
August, 1906.

Hindi version of the Government Gazette for United Provinces.

59. A correspondence of Saraswati (Allahabad), for August, states that the Government Gazette of the United Provinces is translated and published in Urdu characters only, but under Sir Antony MacDonnell the Government made Hindi the Court language and summonses have since then been issued both in Hindi and Urdu characters. The editor thinks that it is only due to oversight, that the Government Gazette is still published in English and Urdu only, and considers its publication in Hindi very desirable.

ANAND,

Strikes.

60. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 28th August, says that strikes seem to be occurring everywhere. The strike of the post office peons was hardly over when the sweepers struck work in Calcutta. The pays of the strikers should be increased as there is no doubt that these strikes are due to scarcity.

ARYA MITRA,
24th August, 1906.

Foreign trade in India.

61. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th August, says that Government is doing all in its power to encourage foreign trade in India, but it has to be borne in mind that luxuries cannot but harm a country which can hardly get a full meal in the day. The interest of Government leads to one result that India is being drained to enrich England.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th August, 1906.

A suggestion to help the poor in debt.

62. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 29th August, says that Government servants and others are subjected to great hardships owing to the exorbitant interest they have to pay. They find great difficulty in raising loans in the first place, the fall in the value of silver has considerably raised the rates of interest on articles of jewellery made of silver, and compound interest is charged when money cannot be paid at certain fixed periods. Besides the lender takes good care to secure the loan by getting the deed countersigned by a second person. The editor suggests that Government will confer a great boon on the poor and the needy if it can arrange to lend money to those who require it, as the rate of interest will surely be comparatively much lower than what has to be paid to the professional usurer. The system if enforced, will be an additional source of income to Government.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th August, 1906.

Stomach complaints in jails.

63. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of 26th August, suggests that stomach complaints in jails are due in most instances to bad dieting, and inspecting officers will do well to satisfy themselves by questioning intelligent prisoners instead of restricting their inquiries to the jail officials and the superintendent in charge, (1) corrupt motives lead those entrusted with the work to buy grain of an inferior quality to that approved; (2) they do not hesitate to adulterate the flour which is issued with other substances, (3) the quantity of fuel allotted hardly suffices for cooking the food thoroughly, (4) those employed on cooking food have got more work than they can perform, (5) the prisoners do not get enough to eat so they have recourse to eating raw flour when on grinding duty, (6) the prisoners generally get less than the allotted rations, and hence attempt is made not to bake the bread thoroughly, (7) the vegetables supplied are not properly cooked and the dieting is almost the same all through.

RAHBAR,
21st August, 1906.

A new disease in the Agra Central Jail.

64. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 21st August, says that a new disease has made its appearance in the Agra Central Jail. Its advent is prognosticated by the appearance of a pimple in the hand, putrefaction then sets in, and life becomes extinct in two days' time. Should the information be true, the authorities should see that the disease is not allowed to extend beyond this jail.

CITIZEN,
27th August, 1906.

A life annuity to the widow of a Hospital Assistant who died while on special duty.

65. The Citizen (Allahabad) of 27th August, says :—As we go to press the following telegraphic message reaches us for publication from Nagina in the district of Bijnor :—

"Babu Partap Singh, Hospital Assistant of only a few months' standing, was deputed by the Inspector-General of Hospitals in connection with the Dadri Mela to Ballia, where he had an attack of cholera and succumbed to its effect. The widowed wife of the deceased young man represented her helpless condition to the Local Government and an order has just been received from Sir James LaTouche granting her a life annuity of rupees 10 a month. The incident well illustrates how apt and eager Sir James is to respond to a true tale of distress."

HINDOSTHAN,
27th August, 1906.

Escort of prisoners to and from the Allahabad Jail.

66. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 27th August, says:—We learn from our contemporary, the United Provinces Times, that the authorities in charge of the criminal community at Allahabad, having studied the troubles and difficulties of the prisoners and the guards-in-charge, have ordered the construction of a prison van to convey the prisoners between the district jail, at Malaka, and the central prison at Naini, a distance of about four miles. Mr. W. W. Weatheral, Government and Railway auctioneer, was put in charge of the construction, and it is further stated that he has just completed the van in question. Would it not be advisable if the prisoners to and from the said prisons are conveyed to the criminal courts also in the same vans?

ADVOCATE,
26th August, 1906.

The proposed expansion of the Legislative Councils.

67. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 26th August, says:—In connection with these Councils, what we most badly need is to make the election of members a living thing and not farcical. The electorates which return members to the Provincial and Imperial Councils should not be narrow; that privilege should not be limited only to the members of the municipal and district boards or to the non-official members of the Provincial Councils.

The numerical strength of these councils should be strengthened. This will be a distinct gain. But in order to make the fullest use of this gain, it is necessary that we should have an expanded electorate to return the members. The members should be given the right to divide the Council on budget discussions. But this will be of little avail, unless the members themselves instead of being responsible to a dozen men are made responsible to a larger constituency, and they themselves are made amenable to public opinion.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th August, 1906.

Motor-cars.

68. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th August, strongly protests against the new but useful invention of motor-cars, which have caused numerous deaths, and says that they are likely to cause more mischief than good.

V.—LEGISLATION.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
22nd August, 1906.

Grant of jagirs and remission of land revenue for good services rendered to the police.

69. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of 22nd August, says that the Government Resolution regulating the grant of jagirs or remission of a certain amount of land revenue to persons rendering proper assistance to the police in the investigation of crime is a favour for which Government should be thanked. The Local Governments are authorized under this resolution to grant without the sanction of the Supreme Government a life interest in property not exceeding rupees five hundred in value, or a remission of land revenue up to rupees fifteen per annum during the lifetime of the person rendering such good service. The editor expresses a hope that very good results will be brought about by giving practical effect to this resolution.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th August, 1906.

Punishment of whipping.

70. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th August, says that whipping, which is a savage form of punishment, has been abolished in Great Britain, and suggests its abolition in India also.

MOHINI,
24th August, 1906.

Election for the Supreme Legislative Council.

71. Mohini (Kanauj), of the 24th August, says that a meeting was held recently for the election of a member for the Viceregal Council, in which Rai Bahadur Sri Ram and Lala Nihal Chand secured equal votes. The election was therefore adjourned till the next meeting. Rai Bahadur Nihal Chand has been already elected on three previous occasions, and it is hoped that he will now make room for Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya who is quite competent for the office.

ANAND,
28th August, 1906.

Indian element in the Supreme Legislative Council.

72. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 28th August, says that the committee appointed to consider the introduction of additional Indian element in the Supreme Legislative Council consists of Europeans only; and that the public would have no occasion for complaint if it consisted of some Indians also.

VI.—Railway.

Strike on the East Indian Railway.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
29th August, 1906.

73. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 29th August, has reason to apprehend that the men employed recently in place of the strikers on the East Indian Railway will be compelled to resign owing to climatic reasons. The editor therefore advises the railway authorities to appoint, on increased pay, men who can stay on permanently so as to avoid future inconvenience.

Grant of leave to clerks on the East Indian Railway Line.

CITIZEN,
27th August, 1906.

74. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 27th August, says, :—"Natives" as a rule have to be satisfied with appointments of inferior grades. There is a class of people, however, who, if through sheer chance they manage to get a post of, say, Rs. 200 a month, begin to think much of their position and do their level best to become favourites of their European superiors, even if their act occasionally amounts to abuse of power. This disgraceful habit is displayed much more frequently as the day of their retirement draws nigh. Babu Harendra Nath Dutt is a clerk in the Office of the District Engineer, East Indian Railway, Allahabad. On the 18th instant he applied for 15 days' full and 15 days' half pay leave to which he was entitled under the rules. The Head Clerk, who, to our shame is a Bengali, wrote the following remarks on it: "This application is for a long leave and can only be recommended if the apprentice working in the account branch gives an undertaking that he will work regularly, and Babu U. N. Dutt, whose notice expires on 9th September 1906, agrees to work until 12th September 1906 and sees the pay sheets off. The applicant must also undertake to work during Durga Pujah Holidays.—(Sd.) G. C. D." The District Engineer's order runs thus:—He may go if this can be arranged." So, these railway administrators have set their rules and regulations not for the purpose of carrying them out but for a mere show. If the Indian staff on the East Indian Railway are becoming refractory, the reason is not far to seek. Fancy the number of conditions, absolutely illegal, which must be complied with before the leave can be granted to the clerk. Will the Railway Board take steps to prevent this sort of zulm? If so, they will undoubtedly earn the blessings of many an oppressed clerk.

Assaults on Indian ladies while travelling in female carriages.

ANAND,
28th August, 1906.

75. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 28th August, says that an Indian lady travelling in the female compartment from Lahore was outraged by a police constable who forced himself into the compartment while another met with the same fate at Khangpur while proceeding from Calcutta to Lucknow. The editor suggests that signal punishment should be inflicted on the offenders to ensure the prevention of this sort of crime in future.

Assaults on Indian females travelling by rail.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
22nd August, 1906.

76. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of 22nd August, says that travelling by rail is always unsafe for native women, specially when they travel without a relative or a guardian. A number of bad characters are travelling with the object of pilfering their ornaments or dishonouring them. Besides a number of railway employés are constantly committing offences of this description and not a month passes when such occurrences are not noticed in newspapers. The railway authorities should take pity on women and take early steps to remedy this evil.

Corruption of the Railway employes at Agra.

JASUS,
21st August, 1906.

77. The Jásus (Agra) of the 21st August, notices with extreme regret the hardships and inconvenience to which the passengers are put at the Agra station on the Rohilkhand Midland Railway due to the shameful corruption prevailing among the railway employés and the police on duty there. The editor who happened to be there one day found that passengers destined for Agra could not get tickets, and that they were told by the constables and coolies that they would get tickets for them on payment of an additional sum of four annas per ticket which was divided equally between the booking clerk and the police. He invites the attention of the Traffic Superintendent to the state of affairs, and suggests the desirability of appointing European booking clerks on occasions of fairs, or of directing the station master to be present on occasions of fairs and festivals.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
29th August, 1906.

Scarcity of water in railway latrines.

78. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 29th August, suggests the necessity of better arrangements being made for providing sufficient water in the latrines in trains, and says that ice is sold at exorbitant rates in spite of the vendors having been allowed free compartments.

JASUS,
21st August, 1906.

A suggestion for better catering arrangements.

79. The Jásus (Agra), of the 21st August, notices with regret the inattention of the authorities on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the complaints made from time to time against the conduct of its contractors and catering arrangements, and invites the attention of the Railway Board and Government with a view to early and necessary measures being taken to remedy the existing evils. The contract for providing fruits and sweets has now been given to one Madan Mohan, a Rastogi of Lucknow, who has no experience of the business and belongs to a class of bankers determined to make money. He himself has given contracts to a number of local residents all over the line, and this arrangement necessarily leads to a much higher rate than would be payable if the contracts had been entered into direct. Madan Mohan lends money to almost all the railway employés, whether high or low, at high rates of interest, and one cannot help thinking that his proceedings, however detrimental to the comfort and convenience of the passengers, are likely to be connived at by those responsible for better administration on the line.

The editor therefore suggests the desirability of such contracts being given to professional men, and not to persons like Madan Mohan.

RAHBAR,
21st August, 1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

80. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad) of 21st August, says from personal experience gained during a recent journey made by him from Allahabad to Lucknow viâ Fyzabad, that the catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are very unsatisfactory, in spite of the cry raised to improve them. To illustrate his allegation he cites the case of a water-bearer at Lucknow who refused to supply water without being paid for it, and behaved impertinently when questioned as to his motive for such conduct; the prices of the mangoes he purchased at the Lucknow railway station was thrice the value at which they could be had in the city; the puries he bought at the Bara Banki station cost him at the rate of eight annas per seer and had been cooked apparently two or three days back. All this he says is due really to laxity of supervision. The railway authorities seem to be quite unmindful of the health of travellers; and the sale of things supplied at such exorbitant rates when the shopkeepers have to pay little or nothing for the license for sale is highly objectionable.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th August, 1906.

The eclipse fair at Hardwar.

81. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 26th August, says that coolie charges at the recent eclipse fair at Hardwar were exorbitant, and catering arrangements most unsatisfactory. Only unwholesome food could be bought and that at very high prices. The editor invites the attention of the railway authorities, and asks them to see that proper arrangements are made on the occasion of large fairs in future.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
29th August, 1906.

Double line system on railways.

82. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 29th August, deploring the disastrous results to life and property that are brought about by the collisions and derailment of trains, impresses the necessity of double lines at places where there is considerable traffic, and advises the Railway Board to compel the authorities concerned to pay early attention to this matter, irrespective of all considerations as to the cost incurred in the undertaking.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ADVOCATE,
26th August, 1906.

Holidays in Dead Letter Office.

83. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 26th August, has contributed the following letter regarding holidays in the Dead Letter Office:"—Sir—Sometime ago it was pointed out by you that in the local Dead Letter Office clerks are forced to work on Sundays and other gazetted holidays. It was said that the postal authorities would take measures to mitigate the undue severities suffered by the clerks. But by some strange coincidence instead of adding some hands, which was the only remedy for the evil, they decided in the last Postal Conference held at Calcutta to abolish the gazetted holidays in the case of Dead Letter Office altogether. Holidays are given by the State with a view that the health of the employés might not deteriorate. It is for this reason that in addition to gazetted holidays, the civil courts are closed for a month in spite of large arrears. But the Dead Letter Office employés who were already groaning under existing circumstances and hoping to have their grievances redressed have permanently been deprived of all holidays.

Of all the departments of the Post Office the Dead Letter Office work is most tedious, and cases of breakdown of health are numerous. The work consists in the major portion of the deciphering of addresses of articles already rejected and it is not work of an urgent nature that it cannot admit of delay.

As Mr. Stewart Wilson, who has a long experience of postal work and is well known for his sympathy for the poor and hard-pressed employés, is now at the helm of the Department, I appeal to him to have compassion on the Dead Letter Office clerks and redress the grievances complained of.

AN OBSERVER.

EXPRESS,
23rd August, 1906.

Theft of vernacular newspapers in transit.

84. The Express (Lucknow) of 23rd August, received on 29th August, says:— There appears to be a sort of unanimity in the complaints made by the vernacular newspapers as to the theft of copies in transit. The complaints are so numerous that it is time that the Postmaster-General should devise means to prevent such a practice. The complaint is not confined to one newspaper, but is heard in every newspaper office. Moradabad, Etawah, Agra and Lucknow newspapers receive numerous complaints of non-receipt from subscribers. One proprietor even goes so far as to say that if the post office was to raise its charge he would be glad to bear the extra expense rather than have the annoyance of receiving complaints from subscribers. These newspapers are not lost at the office of posting but in transit, and it is the Railway Mail Service van which requires close watching. In the meantime the newspapers should bring every complaint received by them to the notice of the Post Master-General.

NAJMI BAZIGH,
16th August, 1906.

Bearing letters.

85. The Najmi Bazigh (Moradabad) of 16th August, received on 27th August, says that the public send bearing letters only when post-cards and postage envelopes are not available, and with the view of insuring that the letter reaches its destination. The editor suggests a reduction of postage on bearing letters taken by the addressee, and that the sender may be rendered liable to double the postage in case the letter is refused.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th August, 1906.

Sacrilege of a Hindu temple in Muttra.

86. The Nasim-i-Agra of 27th August, says that a Muhammadan official holding a responsible post committed sacrilege by entering the temple of Sethji in Muttra. He gave himself out as a Kayasth, and had access to the very spot where food was kept for distribution to Hindu pilgrims; and on his return it transpired that he was a Muhammadan. All the food had to be thrown away, the temple had to be purified with closed doors and fresh food had to be cooked for distribution. This act of sacrilege caused immense loss to the temple, and wounded the feelings of the pilgrims who were besides put to great inconvenience.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th August, 1906.

A Christian proselyte returning to Hinduism.

87. A correspondent in the Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit) of 4th August, received on 29th August, says that the Budaun Prashiddhi Sabha at a very largely attended meeting at Surajkund performed certain religious ceremonies calculated to purify Lala Ram Chander who had become a convert to Christianity about six years back, his Eurasian wife and their three daughters. Sweetmeats were distributed to those present at the close of the ceremony and were partaken of by about two-thirds of the gathering. These are signs of a happy future, and God is to be praised for the turn Hinduism has taken.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd August, 1906.

Mr. Bhopatkar, editor of the Bhala transformed into a hero.

88. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 23rd August, says:—Very few people outside the Bombay Presidency knew that there was a vernacular paper called the Bhala and its editor was Mr. Bhopatkar. To-day every educated Indian knows who Mr. Bhopatkar is and why he is being lionised in Poona and Satara. He was sent to jail for having published in his paper a seditious article, and now that he has come out of the jail, he is well-known all over the country, and there are many people who look upon him as a martyr in the cause of principle. If his influence—assuming it was for evil—was limited to a narrow circle, it will, now that he has suffered, extend largely. This is how an all-wise Government makes heroes of men who if left to themselves would probably live and die as nine men out of ten. In suppressing what the Government calls sedition, it really ennobles it, and makes it worth the while of many people to avail themselves of the advertising facilities which a nervous Government, which cannot see things boldly in the face, so easily offers. And the curious part of it all is that papers which should be prosecuted for sowing the seeds of discord among the various communities are left untouched. Why? Because the Government is afraid to lay its hands upon them. Need we say that at present there are influential Anglo-Indian dailies which richly deserve the honour of a State prosecution and which if convicted would be an example and a warning to all erring and evil-disposed members of the journalistic fraternity?

OUDH AKHBAR,
4th September, 1906.

The religious prestige of the Sultan of Turkey.

1. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 4th September says that even those who do not acknowledge the Sultan of Turkey as their Caliph, have to admit his religious supremacy; but religious intolerance has so influenced certain correspondents of Anglo-Indian newspapers as to induce them to use disrespectful language while speaking of the Sultan of Turkey in spite of their pretensions to soundness of judgment and good-breeding. The allegation that the Arabs do not acknowledge the Sultan as their Caliph, does not imply that they do not respect him. Minor differences do not in any way affect the broad principles of faith. There is no doubt that a large section of the Muhammadan community looks upon the Sultan of Turkey as the King of Islam and the Defender of Mecca and Medina, but it does not necessarily follow that in case of war between the Sultan and some Christian Power all Musalmans including those in India, will have no alternative but to declare war and side with the Sultan, leaving aside all other considerations. This view of the European correspondent is not consistent with his assertion that the Muhammadans are not united. The Sultan is not proud and self-complacent, nor has he ever been so in his dealings with England, yet every attempt is made in the Anglo-Indian newspapers to lower him in the public estimation. Such writings however have no effect on the minds of the Musalmans generally, and, though Egypt is at present beyond the political sway of the Sultan, yet it can never be said to be beyond his religious influence.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st September, 1906.

Islam in Japan.

2. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of 1st September says that the first lesson taught by Islam is truthfulness and control over passions. It expounds matters that reason fails to comprehend. Japan is at present the centre of spiritual and religious thought. Christian missionaries and learned men from Kabul and Turkey are propounding the tenets of their faith in Japan. Such of the doctors of religion as have been prevented from attending the religious conference in Japan, have sent their works on religion to the Mikado. The editor thinks that Japan will not accept Christianity, as the Mikado knows that Christian powers are jealous of him, and will do all that they can to weaken his power irretrievably. He knows that their professions of friendship are hollow and do not proceed from the heart. The Mikado evidently is not actuated by political considerations in changing his religion, for, if this were the case, he would declare himself to be a Musalman without going through the farce of a conference. In case Japan adopts the faith of Islam, Asia will recover its lost glory, as Arabs, Turks, Persians, Kabulis and many other nationalities will become united by a religious bond and a new leaf will be turned in their social, political and administrative life.

AKHBAR NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th September 1906.

Reuter on the illness of the Sultan of Turkey.

3. The Akhbar Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th September, says that Reuter has considerably magnified the illness of the Sultan of Turkey, which was nothing more than an attack of bleeding piles. The telegram would no doubt have spread consternation were it not that the public are well aware that European papers are in the habit of magnifying things disparaging to Muhammadan powers so as to cause a panic. The editor concludes with a prayer that the Sultan should be spared until steps have been taken to secure Turkey against her foes.

HINDUSTANI,
5th September 1906.

The Legislative Councils and the Muhammadans.

4. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 5th September, says that the question of the expansion of the Legislative Councils is being discussed at present in its various aspects, and the Muhammadans of these provinces are trying to make out that a number of memberships should be set apart for Muhammadan representatives who should be elected by Muhammadan voters only. The editor congratulates the Muhammadans on their having eventually recognized the utility of the principle of representation. Rumour he says is also afloat that a memorial is in circulation and signatures are being obtained with a view to request Government to keep the question of the expansion of the Legislative Councils in abeyance as the Muhammadans are not prepared to profit thereby at present. The editor remarks that the Muhammadans have now admitted the principle of election and the only question that remains to be decided is that of the election of their representatives. He thinks that the proceedings of the Legislative Councils so far go to show that there have been scarcely any questions in which the Muhammadan interests were exclusively involved and were injured by Hindu opposition. If so, their objection falls to the ground. Again if the course suggested is adopted, there is no knowing where it will end. The Shiahs, the Christians, the Brahmins, the Kayasths, the Banias, in fact every class of the Indian community will claim to be represented exclusively on the same principle. The Roman Catholics of Ireland had for a good long time no right to vote at parliamentary elections, but they never urged that they should be given the right of electing their representatives exclusively. He thinks that the grievance is only an imaginary one, that the blame lies mainly with them, and that they should take an active share in matters interesting the Indian nation if they wish to become political leaders. Mr. John Morley has said very clearly that the financial relations of England (with India) are not just. The editor advises Muhammadans to win public confidence by their deeds, and then there will be no reason why they should not be elected as members for these councils. He maintains that there are no Muhammadans who have a command over political questions of the day like Mr. Gokhale, Mr. Subramaniya or Mr. Wacha, or who can take their stand in the councils and meet Anglo-Indian opposition successfully, and says that this is due not to inefficiency but to the inattention of the Muhammadans to the burning questions of the day. Taking the question of education as an example, no Muhammadan leaders or newspapers ever came forward to oppose the proposals of the Universities Commission, which aimed to strike at the very root of high education. Freedom of thought and indifference to the smiles and frowns of officials are indispensable to political activity, and all Muhammadan leaders who wish to set themselves up as the representatives of the people should aim at achieving this invaluable qualification.

SAHIFA,
5th September, 1906.

The increase of representative element in the Legislative Councils.

5. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of 5th September, says that the system of elections as suggested in Mr. Morley's speech is calculated to place Muhammadans in a more disadvantageous position than they have so far occupied, as the elections are made through municipal and district boards which consist chiefly of Hindus. The Muhammadans being in a minority their election even as Government members is practically useless. There would be nothing objectionable in Hindu members being elected for the Councils, but their relations have become so strained owing to religious prejudices that these two great communities cannot be said to constitute one nation. It is therefore suggested that Muhammadans should be elected on the principle of nationality and not in proportion to the population of the country. The editor thinks that this is a lawful demand which should be granted with due regard to justice and the political needs of the country.

HINDUSTANI,
5th September, 1906.

Provincial Association.

6. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 5th September, says that a permanent political association is needed in addition to the provincial conference, so as to advise Government on behalf of her subjects. The place of this association is at present taken by the association of talukdars and zamindars, but their voice is not the voice of the people.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd September, 1906.

The last conquest of India.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 2nd September, says:—No expression is heard more commonly on the lips of Imperial Anglo-Indians than that India was won by the sword and must be held by the sword. Even a two-penny half-penny paper indulges in this boast in and out of season. In the little histories that are taught in our schools our young boys are taught of the prodigious valour performed by the first English conquerors of India, how a handful of British troops put to rout thousands of Indian troops, and how the first English conquerors strode over the land as Gulliver towered over Lilliput. Pretty little works of fiction are seriously taught as history. But these histories do not teach us when India was invaded by an English army and conquered.

* * * * * * *

The fact is, the English in those days never looked upon themselves as conquerors of India, or any part of India. The battle of Plassey was fought in self-defence, and no thought of conquest or empire entered the minds of the English. It is only now that we hear of conquest by the sword. India passed to the English by consent and co-operation, Indians themselves taking the most active part in placing the country in the hands of the English.

HINDUSTANI,
5th September, 1906.

Egypt and India.

8. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of 5th September, says that Egypt is at present progressing at a more rapid pace than India. The legislative councils in India were established much before they were in Egypt (in 1883), but the authorities there have always tried to win the good-will of the leaders of public opinion and their support in matters involving reforms. The editor quotes the opinion of Lord Cromer about this council, when he said that it is now passing through its third stage, that the members have begun to express their concurrence with the modus operandi of Government in all sincerity of heart, and to help it in carrying out reforms, and that they do not show any disinclination to give their opinions, which are invited frequently. The leaders are invariably consulted before a matter in which the people are interested is laid before the council. The interest in and the usefulness of the councils have hitherto been on the increase, and the results have been satisfactory.

The editor says that it is amazing to find that progress in India has been uniformly slow, and that English institutions here do not produce the same results as in Egypt, and secondly that though the legislative council in Egypt is proving so useful, Lord Cromer is in no hurry to introduce Self Government.

AKHBAR NAIYAR-I-AZAM
5th September, 1906.

Mr. Morley's speech on the East India Revenue Accounts.

9. The Akhbar Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th September, refers to Mr. Morley's speech on the East India Revenue accounts, and quotes an extract regarding the false step taken in Southern Africa, showing his apprehensions if a similar mistake is made in India. The editor explains this reference as meaning that, if proper attention is not paid to Indian affairs as heretofore, and if the British Government still persists in not hearing the voice of the Indian people, their dissatisfaction will lead to more baneful results than those that followed the Boer war. The editor trusts Mr. Morley may not be right.

QULQUL,
30th August, 1906.

The British Government in India.

10. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of 30th August, says on the authority of the London Daily News that considering that only two lakhs of pounds are spent on the education of Indians, while two crores and ten lakhs of are spent on the army, and forty lakhs of pounds on the European Civilians, England cannot be said to be doing justice to Indians, and cannot be exonerated from the charge of ruling India out of selfish motives.

ZAMANA
for July, 1906.
OUDH AKHBAR,
7th September, 1906.

Political agitation in India.

11. The Zamana (Cawnpore) for July and the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 7th September, referring to an article on the subject of political agitation published in the Zamana, say that Japan and America have both risen to be what they are by trying to achieve political freedom, to improve the industrial resources of their country and to impart free education to the people. No nation can rise to be great without political freedom. It is often urged that Government views political agitation with an eye of disfavour: this is partially true. Lord Curzon himself remarked in one of his speeches, while the question of the partition of Bengal was under discussion, that the agitation was the work of a few men, and not the outcome of public feeling on the subject. There is no doubt that the partition will be set aside if the agitation is carried on by the public with the zeal and strenuousness it demands. The current of recent events in Bengal and the cancellation of the circular declaring the words Bande Mataram to be sedition, all go to show that the Indians can get their rights if they ask for them in the right way, that Government is not opposing them, but is simply waiting to see whether the people are really deserving of what they seek. There is no fear of opposition from Government; and it is a matter for rejoicing that the need for a political association is felt even by the students of the Aligarh College, which so far has been the centre of opposition in political matters. Lord Curzon has to be thanked for the turn matters have taken since 1905, and there is not the least doubt that the swadeshi movement, and the deputation of certain leaders of the Congress to carry on the agitation in England will prove two great factors in the future prosperity of India. The evil results arising out of the partition of Bengal are not of great national significance : but it has involved important political rights, and the best way of securing them is to boycott English manufactures from the Indian market until the partition is set aside. The Indian public has now to depend on its perseverance and not on the mercy of Government.

ADVOCATE,
2nd September, 1906.

A Hindustani National Conference.

12. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow) of 2nd September, has contributed the following letter on the subject :—"Sir—There has been a talk of holding a Provincial Conference for the United Provinces this year. This proposal in itself is a laudable one. This Conference will probably discuss and pass resolutions on important imperial and provincial questions, and try to educate public opinion on political matters. But I think we have passed the stage of mere resolutions. Such a conference should deal with matters political, social, economic, and educational, and should try to take practical steps to carry out its objects, so far as may be. We do not want such leaders who, though holding advanced views in politics, cannot bear the sight of a highly educated Sudra. We want men of liberal ideas and tolerant opinions. Such a conference would be a great strength to the Hindustani nation. Your readers will perhaps be surprised to hear me talk of the Hindustani nation. But such a nation does exist. Its members may not have realised their unity, but still they are one in their social customs, manners, dress, language, sentiments, and race. They form one-fourth of the total population of India. Now I come to the most important part of my article—the point which I want specially to urge. In my opinion instead of the proposed Provincial Conference, our leaders should convoke a Hindustani National Assembly, which would represent the Hindustani (Hindi-Urdu) speaking people from Delhi down to Bhagalpur and Ranchi. The important problems, that loom large before the eyes of different portions of the Hindustani people in Central and Upper India, are very similar and so they would be better able to discuss each other's questions by meeting together in a common place. Besides it is the dream of every educated Indian to form an Indian Nationality, but we cannot have a strong and compact nation unless and until the foundations are properly laid. Now what can be better than to bring together and unite all the Hindustani people and make them ready to be used as efficient materials for the superstructure of a compact Indian Nationality. By the way, I may as well caution my Moslem brethren (I do not address those who take great interest in the politics of Turkey, the deserts of Arabia, and the new born Persian parliament to the exclusion of any interest on the politics or welfare of their own country) not to fight shy of the word 'Hindustani,' as it includes both Hindus and Moslems, and is actually applied to us by men of other parts of India.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

OUDH AKHBAR,
3rd September, 1906.

The proposed visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

13. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 3rd September, referring to the intended visit of the Amir of Kabul to India, says that rumours are afloat that one Ishaq Khan, one of the rivals claiming the throne of Afghanistan at the time that the British Government espoused the cause of the late Amir Abdul Rahman Khan, is negotiating matters with the Czar of Russia, and intends seizing the throne during the ensuing visit of the Amir of Kabul to India. The public and the kith and kin of the Amir are all fully satisfied with the present state of affairs in Afghanistan which is in a very prosperous state, and no rising can be expected to have any important effect on the country or its ruler, except that it might tend to disturb the visit which is anticipated with so much pleasure. It is quite possible that Ishaq Khan hopes to gain something by holding out such threats, and by attempting to disturb the friendly interview between the Amir and the Government of India.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st September 1906.

Sirdar Ishaq Khan and Afghanistan.

14. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of 1st September, says that Sardar Ishaq Khan, a cousin of Amir Abdul Rahman Khan, was one of the rival claimants to the throne of Afghanistan when the British Government espoused the cause of the late Amir and placed him on the throne, which led Sardar Ishaq Khan to go into exile and remain a pensioner of the Russian Government, until recently when, finding that the pension which the Russian Government had been reducing gradually would not suffice to maintain him, he returned to Afghanistan. It is now said that Sardar Ishaq Khan has invoked the assistance of Russia to help him in taking possession of Afghanistan, and it is feared that he will seize the opportunity of the Amir's visit to India to overrun Afghanistan with Russian Cossacks. The editor however thinks that Russia will not consider Ishaq Khan's application favourably as the Czar is at the present moment endeavouring to form an alliance with England.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

RAHBAR,
28th August, 1906.

The successor of Maulvi Abdul Gafur in Rampur.

15. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 28th August, says that Sahabzada Hamid-ul-zafar Khan is reported to be the likely successor of Maulvi Abdul Ghafur as Minister of Rampur, but hopes that the Sahabzada Sahib will not accept the appointment as any interference with His Highness' private life is sure to stir up old animosities. The editor suggests that the next Minister should be altogether disconnected with the state.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st September, 1906.

Assault by natives on a European.

16. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of 1st September, notes that several of the bad characters who assaulted Mr. Maxwell of Allahabad some time back were sentenced each to four years' rigorous imprisonment. The editor notes that such assaults are the result of a desire on the part of Europeans to impress ignorant natives with their dignity as conquerors. He also questions if the same punishment would be inflicted on Mr. Maxwell if he happened to be the accused.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st September, 1906.

The prosecution of the Sub-Inspector of Seohara (Bijnor) for wrongful confinement.

17. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st September, says that the Sub-Inspector of Seohara, who has been placed on his trial on a charge of wrongful confinement, has managed so far to remain attached to his police station, and is said to be going round to the residents of Seohara with a view to get the case compromised. It is rumoured that he is doing so in order to win over the witnesses, who will be examined in the presence of the accused on 4th instant. The editor thinks that the presence of the Sub-Inspector as such in Seohara is calculated to enable him to exert the same influence as he did before the institution of the case. The case has been lately transferred to the court of the Joint Magistrate of Moradabad.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th September, 1906.

Illegal procedure in courts in Agra.

18. The Nasim-i-Agra of 7th September, says that the depositions of witnesses in criminal cases are recorded in the lower courts in Agra by the peshkar or by the court ahlmad while the presiding officer is busy doing something else. It is said that certain presiding officers talk in whispers occasionally with their readers in open court, and allow them to give their opinions if the parties are represented by weak legal practitioners. This tends to give the peshkars undue influence in the public eye. The editor says that the District Magistrate should report such cases of breach of circular letter No. 4 of 1881 to the High Court.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st September, 1906.

A Madrasi girl raped by a Eurasian.

19. The Kanauj Punch of 1st September says that the number of complaints against European and Eurasian high-handedness during this year is by far in excess of those in previous years. One Wood, a Eurasian in Midnapore, is reported to have induced a minor Madrasi girl to go into his house and to have raped her. The accused is on bail. The public are very anxiously awaiting the result of the trial.

COLONEL,
1st September, 1906.

Complaints of non-payment to employes in the Survey department in Moradabad.

20. The Colonel (Moradabad) of 1st September says that certain tracers, who were working under one Hafiz-uddin of the Survey Department, were paid very irregularly. Mr. Murphy, who was in charge of the work, had at its completion furnished them with written orders that they will receive payment either by money-order or through the tahsil, but no money has yet been received in spite of repeated applications. The hands employed were overworked, and some of them had to do so at the risk of their eyesight.

SITARA-I-HIND,
4th September, 1906.

Sentence of whipping inflicted on a constable.

21. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 4th September, says that the constable arrested on a charge of theft was sentenced to thirty stripes on 3rd September, and the Superintendent of Police had arranged for the presence of the entire police force at the time of the infliction of the sentence, so that it may have a deterrent effect on the force.

JASUS,
for September, and October 1906.

A murder at Gahmar (Ghazipur).

22. The Jasus in Hindi (Ghazipur), in its combined issue for September and October says that the pargana of Jamanya in the Gahmar circle has earned a notoriety for crime, and that a large number of offenders belonging to the circle are at large at present. The paper then refers to the murder of one Subhag by a Kshatrya now under trial before the court of sessions. The editor suggests that deterrent sentences should be passed on offenders so as to bring down crime in this locality.

ARYA MITRA,
1st September, 1906.

Murder of a native by a Eurasian.

23. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st September, says that the strained relations between Europeans and the natives of India are making themselves visible in some shape or other more frequently than ever, and cites the case of one Smith, a fireman who is said to have assaulted and thereby caused the death of a native baker at Puri railway station.

(b).—Police.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
28th August, 1906.

The arrest of the proprietor of Gulzar-i-Hind of Lahore.

24. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad) of 28th August notes with regret that one Gulzar Muhammad, proprietor of the Gulzar-i-Hind, Lahore, has been arrested on the charge of habitually purchasing postal stamps effaced from letters by one Noora, a post peon. The latter was caught removing stamps from covers which were in his custody. The police searched Gulzar Muhammad's house and recovered some stamps from his possession, while a third person, a relative of his, has been arrested for trying to destroy evidence by removing the stolen stamps. Noora has made a confession admitting that he used to sell the stamps to Gulzar Muhammad.

HINDUSTANI,
5th September, 1906.

Police interference with swadeshism at Rurki.

25. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 5th September, says that one Hira Lal has complained of the way in which he has been shadowed by a police constable, and of the attitude adopted towards him by the Sub-Inspector of Rurki at a subsequent stage, in connection with a pamphlet forbidding the use of foreign sugar. The correspondent says that it is in this way that the police try to deter people from the discharge of their public duties.

DILSHAD,
30th August, 1906.

The swadeshi movement and the Meerut police.

26. The Dilshad (Meerut), of 30th August, notices the objectionable and somewhat impertinent curiosity of the local police in connection with a lecture on the swadeshi movement delivered by Kashi Nath Misra at the house of Dr. Ram Chander. The inquisitiveness of the police is said to have frightened the doctor so much that he gave some very absurd answers.

OUDH AKHBAR,
5th September, 1906.

Insult by a Punjab constable to a lady in a female compartment.

27. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 5th September denounces the conduct of the police generally, saying that the powers delegated to them are so extensive that they can easily ruin the social position and respectability enjoyed by the best of men; and refers in particular to the case of a policeman who gazed voluptuously at a beautiful Muhammadan lady at the Phillour station while she was travelling in the train, and stepped into her compartment as soon as the train was in motion. A young Kayasth from Delhi who had been watching the policeman intervened, arrested him on the footboard with the help of a fellow traveller, and telegraphed to Jullundur where he found a police officer waiting to take up the investigation of the case. It is to be hoped that an exemplary sentence will be passed on the culprit for his attempted assault on an unprotected woman.

ADVOCATE,
2nd September, 1906.

The police of Benares.

28. A correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow) of 2nd September, contributes the following letter on the subject:—" Sir—The atrocity of the police in this city has begun again. Every day measures are being taken to put down the élite and gentry. It may be said that the present condition of the high-handedness is not a whit less than what it was in the time of Khan Bahadur, City Kotwal. The residents do not open their lips on account of fear of additional oppression. You lent a helping hand on that occasion. It was due to your advocacy that Sir Antony MacDonnell relieved the local residents of great zulum prevalent in those days. For an example of what is going on now-a-days I quote an instance to show how the public were molested on the occasion of the last lunar eclipse. The bathers were not allowed sufficient place to bathe and sufficient time to worship—although the Hindu religion makes this binding on the Hindus to remain in the water and say the Lord's prayer so long as the eclipse is not over. Many a ghatia was disallowed to sit at the ghats and the public were deprived of giving them dakshina which is another obligatory duty binding on those who belong to orthodox Hinduism. Lashes were freely used on bathers—nothing to talk of abuses and bad language for which the guardians of the public peace are world-renowned. Instead of all the ghats, a few ghats only were opened for the purpose of bathing. In short, the oppressions on such occasions as they were practised can better be imagined than described. The administration of the present police is rotten to the very core, and Government will do well to relieve the citizens by transferring some heads of the local police. When the attention of Government was called to the prevailing abuses in 1892, no notice was taken. The sad consequence was that first class zabardastism was practised. The authorities came to know the whole thing afterwards and the outcome was that they were sorry and could do nothing. In 1895 the thing happened in a similar way. The same clouds are gathering now and it would be simply a mistake if the matter be allowed to remain as it is. Ramlila is about to commence. The part the police is playing is most unsatisfactory. Unfortunately the District Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police both are quite new to Benares.

SITARA-I-HIND, 28th August, 1906.

Thefts by police constables.

29. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad) of 28th August, says that a number of constables entered the house of a bania on the night between the 23rd and 24th August, and decamped on the complainant raising a hue and cry, and calling his neighbours to his succour. One of them however who had got possession of a casket of jewellery was caught in female attire bedecked with the ornaments. The editor suggests that the offender, who was under suspension in connection with another charge should be severely dealt with. The turban of a policeman was found at another place on a different occasion about the same time. The editor remarks that thefts have been on the increase during the incumbency of the present Kotwal, and suggests that better and more effective supervision is highly desirable. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of 31st August, however commends the supervision of Kalyan Rai, the city kotwal, in a paragraph dealing with the arrest of this very constable.

RAHBAR, 28th August, 1906.

Gambling and theft in Agra.

30. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 28th August, says that gambling and thefts in Agra are rampant, and a source of great annoyance to the public, so much so that even men of moderate incomes have to employ extra servants for the purpose of watching their property. The editor says that the Agra public, especially those living in Raja-ki-mandi and Gokulpura, can scarely sleep in peace during the night, and considers the state of things well worthy of the attention of the district authorities.

MOHINI, 31st August, 1906.

Disappearance of boys in Calcutta.

31. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 31st August, after giving an account of the mysterious disappearance of boys in Calcutta, expresses a hope that the Calcutta police will soon detect the offenders and solve the mystery, and suggests that the police should entrust the investigation to some capable detectives.

BHARAT JIWAN, 3rd September, 1906.

The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 3rd September, in dealing with the subject says that the police wish to treat the matter lightly as they have remained unsuccessful.

ARYA MITRA, 1st September, 1906.

Pelting stones in Agra.

32. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st September, says that there was an affray at the shop of one Raja Ram at Phulhatti in Agra sometime ago, and that stones have ever since been thrown into his shop to cause him annoyance. The inability of the Agra police to put a stop to the nuisance is discreditable.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th August, 1906.

Contracts for sale of sweetmeats and fruits in courts and schools in Aligarh.

33. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th August, writes from Aligarh that confectioners, fruit-sellers, ice-sellers and other itinerant tradesmen were hitherto allowed to do their business in the civil and revenue courts, and in the local Government school, without payment of any special taxes. But gradually taxes were levied, and now contractors have been appointed who have to pay enormous sums of money. One result of these contracts is that people have to pay twice and thrice as much as they would in the bazar, and as to the quality of the articles purchased the less said the better. The correspondent does not see any reason why there should be any monopoly for the sale of these necessities. He is sure that the Government can do without the fourteen or fifteen hundred rupees a year thus recovered, and it means a good deal to the poor people.

NASIM-I-AGRA,

Sanitary arrangements in Agra.

34. The Nasim-i-Agra of 3rd September, says that the sanitary arrangements in Agra city require more effective supervision.

RAHBAR,
28th August, 1906.

The sufficiency of water supply at Agra.

35. A correspondent in the Rahbar (Moradabad) of 28th August, says that the Agra public are put to great inconvenience owing to the stoppage of pump water supply between 12 and 3 P. M. in the day and after 6 or 7 P. M. in the night. Such restrictions are highly objectionable, when the public pay a water tax for the whole day and night.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
31st August, 1906.

The refuse of Agra.

36. A correspondent in the Nasim-i-Agra, of 31st August, says that the Municipal Secretary and his muharrir are so inattentive to their duties that the District Magistrate has to take the trouble of paying frequent visits even to the place where manure is collected on the outskirts of the city. He suggests that, if not disposed of periodically, the accumulation of refuse will tell upon the sanitation of the city, and points out that the chief reason why it is not disposed of is that the place is a long way off, and the price asked is excessive.

The editor remarks that the sanitary arrangements are very unsatisfactory and require greater supervision; and fails to understand why they are not attended to properly when a special officer has been appointed for the purpose.

OUDH PUNCH,
6th September, 1906.

The bathing ghats in Lucknow.

37. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of 6th September, contains a dialogue between a correspondent and a Seth, wherein the Seth admits that his passion for bathing in the Gumti is due chiefly to his having the opportunity of feasting his eyes on the women who bathe side by side with men, owing to there being only one ghat for both men and women. The correspondent deplores the inattention of both the public and the municipality in the matter, and the Seth, after suggesting various devices for bringing the matter to the notice of the authorities, concludes with saying that the matter is bound to attract their notice by a publication in the Oudh Punch.

OUDH PUNCH,
6th September, 1906.

Distribution of pay to sweepers in the Lucknow municipality.

38. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of 6th September, publishes a dialogue between a correspondent and a municipal sweeper which reveals a deplorable state of affairs in the Lucknow municipality. It appears from the words put in the mouth of the sweeper, that those concerned in the distribution of pay take a share at each monthly distribution, leaving almost nothing to the sweeper after he has paid his money lender.

OUDH AKHBAR,
4th September, 1906.

Assessment of house-tax in Mohan, district Unao.

39. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 4th September, says that the number of assessors of house-tax in Mohan has been reduced from seven to three only, and that they have not sufficient firmness of character to discharge their duties fairly, besides there is only one Hindu member, though the Hindu population is by far in excess of the Muhammadan community. He invites the attention of the district authorities to the matter, and solicits a thorough examination of the assessments made, which is sure to disclose that personal feeling has been at work in the discharge of this public duty.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st September, 1906.

Municipal lanterns in Kanauj.

40. The Kanauj Punch of 1st September, says that the municipal arrangements for lighting are still very defective, that the number of lights sanctioned within the municipality is twenty-four only, and the district authorities should be requested to provide for a sufficiently large number of lanterns within municipal limits.

HINDUSTANI,
5th September, 1906.

Inspection of schools.

41. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 5th September, says with reference to the report of the Assistant Director of Schools on the subject that the education imparted in Sanskrit and Arabic is mostly never tested at the inspection of schools, owing to the inefficiency of the inspecting officer for the purpose. The editor suggests that now that there is to be an increase in the number of inspecting officers, really capable men should be appointed, irrespective of all considerations of creed and colour, so that they may be able to do full justice to their work.

AGRA AKHBAR,
7th September, 1906

The present age, and education in schools.

42. The Agra Akhbar of 7th September, says that the present age is one of retrogression. The rich and poor alike are weighed down by heavy expenses, things are becoming very costly, and physical health has deteriorated considerably. This latter can to some extent be attributed to the present system of education. Religious education seems to be looked upon as unnecessary, and does not form a part of the course of training given. The editor thinks that languages alone should be taught, and that the rest of the subjects should be left to the individual's choice so, that every man can cultivate them according to his personal requirements. The time spent in teaching Urdu grammar is practically wasted in his opinion.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st September, 1906.

Urdu as the common script of Upper India.

43. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 1st September, while praising the Watan and criticising the Prakash and the Civil and Military Gazette adversely, agrees with the contention of the Muhammadans that Urdu is the one language that can be said to be the language of Indians, that words from the various dialects of India have become blended in its formation, and that no other language can ever become the universal language of the Indians. The editor suggests that both Hindus and Muhammadans should combine to adopt the Urdu as their common language, so as to bring about a feeling of unity, which will be an inevitable consequence of the existence of a common language for the Indian nation.

INDIAN PEOPLE
30th August, 1906.

Mr. Cooper, Head-Master, Aligarh High School.

44. A correspondent in the Indian People (Allahabad), of 30th August, referring to the attacks of the vernacular press on the personality of Mr. Cooper, the Head Master of the Aligarh High School, says that those who had seen the Government School ten years before and see it now are forced to admit that it is quite a different thing altogether. The number of boys in the school before was never more than 400, but now it is above 700; and boys will never rush to a tyrant. There is no doubt that Mr. Cooper sometimes loses his temper and that he is occasionally indiscreet in his language, but then he is not so bad as he is depicted. Sharp temper may be natural to him, but the indiscreet language is mostly due to those who go to see him and leave behind their self-respect at home. He is personally acquainted with Mr Cooper and has very often met him but never had any occasion for complaint. Adverting to the Shakesperian and the Miltonian clubs started by Mr. Cooper, he says that such clubs were once started before and quite a respectable sum of money was realized by subscription. The boys who again have had to pay subscriptions are very anxious to know what has become of the money that was collected before. He thinks that such inquiries are good, and so the Head Master will do well to appoint a treasurer either from among the boys themselves or from among the teachers of the school. He also suggests that Mr. Cooper should invite old boys of the school to join and take part in the meetings of the club.

The swadeshi sugar.

45. The Nasim-i-Agra of 7th September says that the public are talking about boycotting foreign sugar as it is injurious to health.

AKHBAR NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th September, 1906.

Swadeshi sugar.

46. The Akhbar Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th September, says that a meeting was held at Sambhal (Moradabad district) on 27th August last, when it was decided to sell the stock of sweetmeats prepared from foreign sugar at six seers per rupee and thenceforward to boycott foreign sugar from the market. The resolution was adopted and carried out unanimously.

ARYA MITRA,
1st September, 1906.

Foreign versus indigenous manufacture.

47. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st September, expresses its surprise at the attitude of certain Christian missionaries who have recently opened a shop, where they are selling articles of foreign manufacture at a discount in the hope of repressing swadeshi enterprise. This conduct is surely highly objectionable. The editor thinks that the missionaries are receiving some encouragement from Government, as they play the spy when occasion arises.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
for July, 1906.

Practical swadeshism.

48. In the Hindustan Review for July Nanak Chand Dutt discusses practical swadeshism, and urges on his countrymen the necessity for subscribing capital freely to encourage Indian trade. He says that societies should be started throughout the country, and that a better class of men should be sent for instruction to foreign countries.

He further advocates that Government be petitioned to afford protection to the Indian industries by imposing heavy duties on imported articles.

OUDH AKHBAR,
8th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

49. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 8th September, says that Shamsululma Doctor Nazir Ahmad, of Delhi, delivering a lecture at the annual meeting of the Madrasa Tibbia, spoke strongly in favour of the swadeshi movement, and said that the movement if kept alive will no doubt lead to very beneficial results. He regretted that the products of India are being exported to foreign countries, and, that foreigners are sucking the life-blood of Indian wealth like so many leaches. He concluded that even the Government and its officials cannot be so blind as to discourage the movement and to drain the resources of the country so as to render it quite useless. He remarked that a milch cow is fed better even by ignorant villagers than other cattle.

One Farogh has contributed some verses to the paper on the subject noting the progress of the movement in Lucknow and elsewhere with gratification.

RAHBAR,
28th August, 1906.

The effects of the swadeshi movement.

50. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 28th August, says that the swadeshi movement has produced beneficial results which are making themselves felt in various ways, as evidenced by a comparison of the imports for the two preceding quarters. Salt worth thirty lakhs has been imported from other countries: but if laws prohibiting the manufacture of salt in Bharatpur could be repealed, the need for such import would cease to exist. Our Government has done this to benefit Englishmen. The English correspondent of the Pioneer writes that there is a decrease in the import of all articles from Great Britain every month, and the total decrease during the quarter amounts to forty-nine lakhs and a half. The value of liquor imported during the quarter is six lakhs less than that in the preceding quarter. The improvements effected during the first year of the swadeshi movement are satisfactory. There are yet a large number of matters to which attention has not been directed so far. It is to be hoped that perseverance will bring about still better results during the next quarter.

RAHBAR,
28th August, 1906.

An appeal on behalf of the swadeshi movement.

51. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th August, says that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji has addressed a letter to Pandit Rambhaj Datt asking him what progress the swadeshi movement is making in the Punjab, and telling the Pandit that it is his duty and that of his countrymen to give it every encouragement in their power. The editor remarks that the Punjab will prove that they are already prepared for the action proposed to them, and expresses his regret at the slackness of the inhabitants of the United Provinces. The paragraph closes with an exhortation to them to give practical support to the swadeshi movement by using articles ~~of~~ Indian manufacture.

DILSHAD,
30th August, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

52. The Dilshad (Meerut), of 30th August, says that Babu Baij Nath, a Professor of the Meerut college, was presented with an address on 21st August last. Mr. David, Assistant Sessions Judge, presided over the meeting. The Principal of the college in the course of his speech adverted to the swadeshi movement and pointed out that the idea was a very happy one and was calculated to lead to many beneficial results. He exhorted his pupils to take an interest in matters affecting their country, and to respect her interests just the same as they respect their teachers. The editor remarks that though Europeans brought up in the same school as Lord Curzon and Sir Bampfylde Fuller, feel it their duty to crush swadeshi feeling, yet there are others who give the movement all the support they can.

RAHBAR
28th August, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

53. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th August, says that the inhabitants of the United Provinces do not sufficiently interest themselves in the swadeshi movement. They lack patriotism and magnanimity. The editor points out that the movement has nothing to do with politics, that the door of high education and superior service has been closed against Indians, and that they should be able therefore to appreciate the swadeshi movement properly. He says that the Muhammadans can gain nothing by keeping aloof from the movement, and if they persist in doing so, Hindus will refuse to use things made by Muhammadans. The movement is Indian, it is not the work of an individual or of any particular section of the community.

QULQUL,
30th August, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

54. The Qulqul (Bijnor) of 30th August, says that practical results obtained have sufficed to contradict the Anglo-Indian newspapers that tried to make out that the movement was only ephemeral, and the work of certain agitators who were dissatisfied at the partition of Bengal. The editor deplores the attitude of the Muhammadans of these provinces in holding themselves aloof from the movement and thinking that their future prospects will be blasted if they join it. He points out that the prosperity of the Muhammadans of Bombay and Madras is due to commercial enterprise, and that they are endeavouring to improve the commercial resources of India, and are giving every encouragement to indigenous products.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
28th August, 1906.

Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of 28th August, likewise gives details of the meeting for the boycott of foreign sugar in Sambhal.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st September, 1906

The swadeshi movement.

55. Kanauj Punch of 1st September says that the swadeshi movement is taking a firm root in the hearts of the Indian public. Shops selling articles of swadeshi manufacture have been opened, and swadeshi manufactories have been established in various large cities in India. The partition of Bengal has so excited the Bengalis that they have advocated the cause of the movement very strenuously, and it is to be hoped that the movement will take a firm root in the country.

OUDH AKHBAR,
5th September, 1906.

Babu Surendra Nath Banarji and swadeshism.

56. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 5th September says that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and his partisans are assuming an attitude which necessitates that Government should be on its guard. Referring to the Bengali it states that Surendra Nath Banerji was anointed and a crown was placed on his head declaring him king of both Bengals. Babu Surendra Nath's personal vanity must no doubt have been extremely gratified. He protested strongly on this occasion against the use of foreign articles and invoked religious aid to support the boycott. His argument against piece goods of British manufacture was that they are sized with the fat of cows and swine, which is revolting to the feelings of both Hindus and Muhammadans. He made some very pertinent remarks on the prevailing famine.

INDIAN PUNCH,
3rd September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

57. The Indian Punch (Budaun) of 3rd September, contains a short poem addressed to the Indian public, chiding them gently for their lack of interest in the swadeshi movement, and depicting the attitude generally adopted by the Indians when they come across articles of Indian manufacture. The Punch says that the number of true supporters of the movement is limited, that a large section of the Indian community is very forward in finding fault with and holding up to ridicule indigenous products for their coarseness or some other defect. They very often question the truthfulness of swadeshi shopkeepers, and occasionally hold out threats of exposing them through the press, thus everything is done to discourage the movement, while articles of foreign manufacture are receiving every support.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

58. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 2nd September, says :—The industrial side may be the most important feature of the swadeshi movement, but it has a much profounder significance. It has broken down the barrier between the educated and uneducated classes. The first meetings in Calcutta were themselves remarkable, irrespective of the enthusiasm of the audience. Marwaris, traders, labourers, and even coolies filled the open spaces round the speakers, who invariably spoke in the homeliest vernacular language. What began in Calcutta spread to the mofussil, and swadeshi work is chiefly carried on among the illiterate and ignorant people. Surendra Nath Banerji is no longer the idol of the educated classes and schoolboys, but of all classes of people. When a European was being savagely assaulted in Calcutta, Babu Surendra Nath rushed alone to the rescue. The mob did not even know him by sight but the magic of his name was enough. The crowd fell back at once, obedient to the magic influence of the name of "the anointed and crowned king of two Bengals." That is the highest work the swadeshi movement is rendering to the national cause. Our leaders are becoming the real leaders of the people. They are quite as much at home among the educated as among the uneducated classes. Let the gospel of swadeshism be carried from village to village, from peasant to peasant, from one class of people to another and the calumny about the Congress and other movements representing nobody will soon be a thing of the past.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
5th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

59. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of 5th September says that the zeal for swadeshi articles is being carried to extremes, and the Bengali leaders, who have infused false notions of patriotism in the minds of Bengali students, are responsible for their indiscretions. The editor cites as an instance the assault made by about fifty Bengali students on a marriage procession on their refusing to part with articles of foreign manufacture.

ADVOCATE,
2nd September, 1906.

The new patriotism.

60. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 2nd September says that the Indian is intensely patriotic. Such is the verdict of sojourners in this land who come in contact with Indians, and of friends and professors of Indians who go to England and America. A great discovery has been made at the present moment, it is that there is enough latent power in the Indian to develop himself into self-reliant manhood. The key-note is self-help. In the field of education, in the race for commercial supremacy, as also in the administration of the country, the Indian is anxious to share the responsibilities with the Anglo-Indian, if not to supplant him. Our sense of responsibility should be fully realized and acted upon, with a stern but sympathetic hold upon our new born patriotism. In an inconceivably small time we have got a goodly band of makers and manufacturers of our every day necessaries, a large body of dealers in Indian-made things and numerous customers, one and all fired with the sentiment of India for the Indians. Some again have taken to getting the trade of India into their own hands, while others with the help of Indians equally patriotic, mean to float fleets of merchantmen to carry on at least the coast trade of India in Indian ships and under the control of Indians. The education of the nation by the nation itself is a pretty loud cry. In Bengal and in the Punjab, in Bombay and to some extent in Madras we have got national institutions that mean to carve out their own ways and work out their own ideals. The new light that has dawned on us has revealed the extent of the responsibility that rests upon us. Let us begin with dispelling our ignorance of our own country. To do so mass education is as much a necessity as greater exchange of ideas, and comparing of notes by the educated of all provinces by a system of frequent if not extensive travels. For such a purpose we require one provincial conference in each province, and district associations to take up the actual work of imparting elementary instruction to the masses, giving information to the tillers of practical ways of improvement and teaching the artisans less costly and more labour saving systems of manufacture.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
for July, 1906.

Indian Economics and German Economics.

61. The Hindustan Review for July publishes an article by Mr. Arthur Griffith on Indian Economics and German Economics, in which the writer says that India's salvation requires a teacher like Frederic List, and that the Indian Nation to be great must be a manufacturing nation.

He advocates protection in the case of products which the Indian manufacturer cannot prepare so cheaply as his English or foreign rival.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
for July, 1906.

Labour Problems in India.

62. Mr. K. Perraju, some time member of the Madras Legislative Council, wrote an article in the Hindustan Review for July on Labour Problems in India advocating that the State should direct its efforts to industrializing and extending agriculture and manufacture in India.

TAFRIH,
7th September, 1906.

Mr. Morley's Budget speech.

63. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 7th September, says that if India is a key to the greatness of Great Britain as remarked by Mr. Morley, the treatment accorded to this country is not what it should be, that the so-called savings are the result of the heavy-taxes weighing on the Indian public, and that the railways are not a boon but a bane to India, inasmuch as they facilitate the export of Indian produce to foreign countries. The editor thinks that Mr. Morley has been showing only lip sympathy for the Indians, and asks if the same octroi duties are levied in England on country products as here in India, and if the salaries and the expenses of Government servants and the army in the two countries are equally large.

TAFRIH,
7th September, 1906.

Government servants and politics.

64. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 7th September, says that it is a matter for regret that Government is not acting on a fixed principle in dealing with Government servants dabbling in politics. If those opposing its views are punished, those supporting them should likewise be dealt with more or less in the same manner. In fact Government servants should have absolutely nothing to do with politics. Referring to a letter subscribed I.C.S. in the Pioneer, attacking the Bengalis and the Supreme Government in connection with the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, the editor says that Government should find out who the writer of the letter is, and give him his deserved punishment, to maintain the prestige of the rulers of the land.

TAFRIH,
7th September, 1906.

Mr. Bryan and the Times of India

65. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 7th September, points out that the strictures of the Times of India are inconsistent with its encomiums on Mr. Bryan in its issue of the 28th March last.

AKHBAR NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th September, 1906.

Escapes from jails.

66. The Akhbar Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th September, says that escapes from jails have been on the increase during the past few months, and invites the attention of the Inspector-General of Prisons to the matter. The editor says that a retired warder on reference attributes these escapes to the dissatisfaction of warders generally, who are treated no better than convicts, are fined and dismissed for trifling offences, and have no inducements to show better work, as the pension given is hardly enough to keep them alive, and is no more than what one can earn by begging.

AKHBAR NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th September, 1906.

Effect of punishments on editors and proprietors of newspapers.

67. The Akhbar Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th September, says that sentences inflicted on the proprietors and editors of newspapers do not produce the same deterrent effect as they have on others. This class of offenders undergo the punishment, but the sentence, rather than lowering, tends to raise them in the estimation of their contemporaries, and they are looked upon as martyrs suffering in the cause of freedom. The instances of the editors of the Bhala and the Jama-ul-ulum are in point. It is desirable in the interests of Government that the limit of these martyrs be kept as low as possible. All the good that results is the temporary immunity of officials from the remarks of the party prosecuted, but this does not in any way tend to affect public opinion respecting them.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
31st August, 1906.

The Agra charitable dispensary.

68. A correspondent in the Nasim-i-Agra, of 31st August, says that the subsisting arrangements in the charitable dispensary involve a very tedious process, and out-door patients have to go to several persons before they can get medicines. There is besides a want of sufficient sympathy for and interest in the treatment of patients, and the dispensary seems to be dwindling into a training school for novices. The editor requests those in power to see that the institution does not deteriorate, and that the original object for which it was started be kept in view.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
28th August, 1906.

The enlistment of graduates in the Army.

69. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad) of 28th August notes with satisfaction that a Muhammadan graduate from the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental college, Aligarh, has passed successfully through the first year of his probation in the 5th Bengal cavalry stationed in Meerut; and requests Government to hold out encouragement to him so as to make service in the army sufficiently alluring. The editor expresses a hope that if this is done the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College will become a depôt for future recruitment, and, in case the officers in the Army accord good treatment, it will be possible in no time to raise whole regiments of stout built literate men.

INDIAN PUNCH,
4th September, 1906.

Quack physicians.

70. The Indian Punch (Budaun) of 4th September complains of the license with which quack physicians are allowed to applaud and sell their medicines in open market without any restrictions on the trade or any certificates as to their qualifications or genuineness of their medicines. The public are robbed by them of their money and it not seldom happens that those purchasing the medicines lose their lives in the bargain, and yet the vendors manage to elude the grasp of the police and the law.

ADVOCATE,
6th September, 1906.

What is efficiency.

71. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in its issue of the 6th September, in an article entitled "What is efficiency," advocates admitting educated Indians to a larger share in the Government of the country. A large fund of sympathy he says, is the first requisite for an efficient administrator. And sympathy for his own people is natural to every member of that nation: it is every man's birthright. However learned an Englishman may be and however fast may be the throbbings of his heart while thinking of Indians, he cannot give us as much out of his fund of this noble quality as he can for another Englishman. He may be a more clear-headed man, better able to reason out things, keener in weighing evidence than the Indian, but towards the Indian people his heart cannot go out so well, wholly, and so disinterestedly as that of one of their own. The ideal of a nation being the only legitimate manager of its own affairs is based upon this principle. So in the matter of sympathy as a factor in administrative efficiency, the Indian—be he a Hindu, be he a Muhammadan—stands on a superior footing to the Englishman.

But we do not ask this sentiment alone to be made the sole criterion of efficiency.

* * * * * * * *

To the rulers our request is: Give up your new-fangled ideas of efficiency where cold reason holds sway and the warm heart has no place. Found the administration of the country on justice between all parties, sympathy for all noble aspirations, and help in causes for national advancement, and you at once broad base your domination on the people's will and enthrone yourselves in their hearts. Efficiency lies in this, and not in cutting down the lengths of reports, calling for one uniform system of returns, making lengthy speeches, riding rough over the wishes of the people, using language to hide your thoughts, and thus driving the people to despair and discontent.

SITARA-I-HIND,
4th September, 1906.

Grain mart of Moradabad.

72. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 4th September, says that the banias should be made to sell things during the day at least, at the rates furnished to the tahsil, and that strenuous measures should be adopted to prevent under-weighment.

DILSHAD,
30th August, 1906.

Mr. Adams, Joint Magistrate of Meerut.

73. The Dilshad (Meerut), of 30th August, referring to its notice in its issue of the 30th of May last regarding the violent and irascible temper of Mr. Adams, Joint Magistrate of Meerut, who had terrorised the public, remarked that his conduct and attitude in court were from time to time brought to the notice of the District Magistrate, who contented himself with telling people not to go to his court.

The editor further notes that Mr. Adams has recently gone on leave, and his conduct for a week previous to his departure was all that could be desired.

RAHBAR,
28th August, 1906.

Assaults by Europeans on Indians.

74. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 28th August says that the Indians are chiefly to blame for the assaults and other ignoble treatment to which they have to submit at the hands of Europeans. These latter learn to treat others with contempt by being addressed in flattering language by their servants. The next step they take is to scold them, and then after some experience they begin to accord the same treatment to respectable Indians. If by chance some one has the courage to resent their ungentlemanly behaviour, they learn a lesson for good. If not they get spoilt, and habit with them, as with every one else, becomes second nature. The editor refers to the case of one Lala Sita Ram, rais of Amritsar, who while standing with his face towards the Small Cause Court, failed to notice a European coming on a bicycle and was hit by him with 'a hunter' on the face. The Lala Sahib has not appealed to law and the editor says that it is Indians of this stamp who encourage Europeans to maltreat them, and that the Lala Sahib is doing a great wrong to the country by taking the insult quietly.

ADVOCATE,
6th September, 1906.

Some reflections upon Indian society.

75. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 6th September, says in an article entitled "Some reflections upon Indian Society," that the plight of the Indians defies all attempts at reform and improvement. He does not believe that if the assessment upon the land is made lighter and more permanent the impoverishment of the people will be reduced permanently. What guarantee is there to say that the landlords will limit their demands upon the poor ryots or that the ryot will become thrifty enough not to incur heavy expenditure at marriages, &c., to keep the balance always in his favour. The nazranas given by tenants previous to any land being let out to them, offers by rival tenants to cultivate land on enhanced rates, the corruption of police and other things of a similar nature cannot be stopped by any amount of legislation. Any amount of increments of salaries will not bring about the desired result. Highly cultured officers of Government, both high and low and the learned men of the several professions, either themselves prey or abet the preying upon the petty purses of their poor countrymen. The moralist and the reformer alone can by their strenuous efforts bring about the desired result in this direction.

ADVOCATE,
6th September, 1906.

Cow-killing at Chunar.

76. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 6th September, says:—Great commotion was caused at Chunar, by a pensioner residing in the lower lines having, it is alleged, killed with his Quackenbush a fine milch cow and wounded another. Fearing an attempt on his own life, the pensioner went to the tahsildar and sought the protection of the court. Subsequently the dead cow was sent to Mirzapur, and a police investigation is proceeding in the matter. Much excitement prevails among the Hindu community. The cow being an object of veneration among them, the owner cannot accept compensation for the loss of the animal, as this is against custom. The gwalahs have combined and stopped supplying the European residents milk from 30th August.

OUDH AKHBAR
6th September, 1906.

Causes leading to the discontent of the Muhammadans of India.

77. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 6th September, says that the Muhammadans of India are very much dissatisfied at the cold treatment given to them by Government in spite of their loyalty and faithfulness, and the Congress party is anxiously awaiting the day when old differences can be forgotten and the Muhammadans can work conjointly with them. He then refers briefly to the speeches delivered recently at the East Indian Association in London by Mr. Gokhale, Mr. Abdul Qadir and Mr. Amir Ali, and says that the concessions made to the Hindus vary in direct ratio with the pressure they bring to bear upon Government. The Muhammadans can agitate and move the entire Muhammadan world, but this is what they do not wish to do. They depend entirely on Government and will be contented with what they receive. The correspondent looks upon the Government Resolution declaring the Nagri to be the court language as extremely injurious to Muhammadan interests, and thinks that such a resolution would not have been passed if Sir Saiyad were alive. The Hindus and Muhammadans form the two chief communities under British Rule in India, and it is inconsistent with equity and good conscience to show favour to the one, and to frown at the other when both claim to be the faithful subjects of Government. The Hindus were ready to unite with Muhammadans, but it is to be regretted that the latter set themselves up as loyal subjects and well-wishers of Government and have separated themselves from the Hindus.

VI.—RAILWAY.

QULQUL,
27th August, 1906.

Anticipated strike on the Bengal and North-Western Railway.

78. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of 27th August, says that a strike is anticipated on the Bengal and North-Western Railway. The chief grievances are low salaries, the severity of the leave rules, hard work, insufficient accommodation and ill-ventilated houses, the issue of third class passes to clerks, and infliction of departmental punishments without a hearing.

RAHBAR,
28th August, 1906.

Assaults on native females travelling by rail.

79. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th August, says that the assaults by the railway employés (particularly Eurasians and Europeans) on Indian females travelling by rail are constantly on the increase, and attributes this increase to the partiality shown to them by our judges and magistrates owing to racial predilections. Indian women may perhaps have to cease to travel by rail, but if this is impracticable Indians will have to take the law into their own hands. The editor makes a reference to the Kharagpur case, which is of recent occurrence, in which a girl fourteen years old was raped and robbed of her ornaments.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st September, 1906.

Outrages on females travelling by rail.

80. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of 1st September, says with reference to the outrages committed on a female passenger at Kharagpur and on another at Soron that the investigation of such cases should be conducted with particular care and interest, and that exemplary sentences should be meted out to the offenders.

CITIZEN,
3rd September, 1906.

Case of outraging the modesty of a female passenger at Kharagpur.

81. The Citizen (Allahabad) of 3rd September, says that another case of outraging the modesty of a female passenger is reported from Kharagpur. This is the third case in a quick succession. The facts run thus: Nurjahan Begam, an up-country girl of fourteen, came down from Lucknow on a visit to her relatives at Siri. After some days when she was going back some vicious characters played a mischievous trick and managed to purchase for the girl a ticket for Kharagpur. They disappeared, the girl reached Kharagpur but finding the route, roadside and station quite different from what she saw before, her suspicion was roused. She got down at Kharagpur and was waiting in the platform verandah having made up her mind to catch the next Down-train, when a railway jamadar in uniform approached and asked her to leave the platform and to go to the travellers' shed. She hesitated but, on the man's continually persisting she at last accompanied him. She was waylaid, taken to a solitary place at the back of a house and was most ruthlessly disgraced. She tried to raise alarm but he silenced her by gagging her mouth and threatening to kill her on the spot. The ruffian did not rest content with disgracing her. He robbed her of her money and valuables and escaped, leaving the girl lying in a precarious condition. The police are enquiring into the matter. Judging from the circumstances it seems quite apparent that the man who cheated her at Siri was following her all along in order to assault her. He took her to Kharagpur and, personating himself as a railway servant, he dishonoured her.

UNION GAZETTE,
28th August, 1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

82. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 28th August, after quoting an article from the Jásús says that Madan Mohan, the contractor, is a professional banker and knows nothing of the business of a confectioner or a fruit-seller; that besides doing his own professional dealings as a money-lender, he owns a number of ferries, and cannot devote sufficient time and attention to catering arrangements and that the Railway employés, both high and low, are more or less indebted to him, and hence have to connive at his shortcomings. The Government can well imagine that a man circumstanced as Madan Mohan is, with such multifarious pursuits and occupations, cannot possibly save time to go about and exercise effective supervision over the catering arrangements. It is therefore extremely desirable that the contract should be given to some one who can spare time to attend to the work and has a better knowledge of the business.

UNION GAZETTE, 28th August, 1906.

Derailment of trains.

83. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 28th August, referring to the derailment of the Dehra Dun mail near Doiwala on 20th August, and of a passenger train between Lucknow and Hardwar a short while ago, points out the immense loss to life and property, and suggests to Government to call on the Railway Board to take measures calculated to stop the frequent occurrence of such accidents.

HINDOSTAN, 2nd September, 1906.

Accidents on the North-Western Railway.

84. The Hindosthan (Hindi edition, Kalakankar) of 2nd September says, that a corpse run over by a train was found on 16th August last between Sarna and Jakulari stations on the North-Western Railway line, and remarks that the line is becoming unpopular owing to accidents of this sort.

RAHBAR, 28th August, 1906.

The reduction of expenditure on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

85. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 28th August, says that Mr. Jacobson is said to be proceeding on a year's leave from 4th October next, and the Manager also is said to be about to avail himself of leave preparatory to retirement. Mr. Pope then will be the probable successor as manager, and will have to upset the present reductions that have already begun to produce baneful results. The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway has during the last two months sustained a loss of three lakhs and a half, besides which work is in a state of utter confusion.

RAHBAR, 28th August, 1906.

Inconveniences of travelling on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

86. The editor Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th August, says (in continuation of his experiences noted at paragraph 80 of Selections No. 35) that while travelling viâ Lucknow on 21st August last he arrived there at 4 A. M., and found that the number of coolies present was very small, and that not one of them was prepared to accept anything less than four annas to take his things to the ekka stand outside. He remarks that such a state of things is calculated to cause much inconvenience to persons travelling with their families, and invites the attention of the Railway Board and the Government to the matter.

NAJMI BAZIGH, 24th August, 1906.

Toll on the Ramganga Bridge in Moradabad.

87. The Najmi Bazigh (Moradabad), of 24th August, says that a toll of three pies only used to be levied both ways from persons going across the Ramganga bridge for mere amusement, but people have now to pay three pies each way. The editor suggests that the old practice should be adhered to, and wonders whether the innovation has been introduced by the contractor or by his men without his sanction.

NAYAR-I-AZAM, 5th September, 1906.

The Hedjaz Railway.

88. The Nayar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th September, notes that the editors of the Akhbari Watan (Lahore), and Vakil (Amritsar) have collected and sent subscriptions amounting to Rs. 31,000, and Rs. 19,000, respectively, to aid the construction of the Hedjaz Railway. The editor exhorts the Muhammadans of these provinces to endeavour to raise similar subscriptions for this laudable purpose, which will lead to their material and spiritual happiness.

EXPRESS, 30th August, 1906.

Floods on the Kotarnian Ghat Branch Railway.

89. The Express (Lucknow), of 30th August, says :—Information reaches us that the recent floods have caused a great disaster on the Kotarnian Ghat Branch Railway. The whole line has been swept away and every log between Kotarnian Ghat and Nanpara has been borne off. At Rai Bojha the bodies of buffaloes, cows, goats, men, women and children were swept away into the flood, and no one could help them. A correspondent states that the loss of life has been awful. An official intimation states that the Bengal and North-Western Railway have stopped the booking of traffic until further notice to stations between Nanpara and Kotarnian Ghat owing to floods.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th September, 1906.

Loss of newspapers in transit.

90. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th September, says that on complaints about the loss of newspapers in transit being made the postal authorities send certain categorical questions extending over two or three pages to the proprietors calling for information, and thus cause an additional waste of time. The editor suggests that the papers are mostly given away by the Mail Service clerks and postal peons to their friends, that proprietors should take steps to send out occasionally their men with the mail train and instruct them to watch the clerks closely, particularly at stations whence the largest number of complaints are received. This will enable them to bring justice home to some of the culprits, and when once a few persons are convicted, the rest will give up the practice.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

SAHIFA,
5th September, 1906.

A Muhammadan Association in Delhi.

91. A correspondent of the Sahifa (Bijnor), of 5th September, says that an association styled the "Hidayat-ul-Islam" has been started in Delhi with a view to instruct Muhammadans residing in villages who have adopted the customs of Hindus. The association has recently published a notification quoting verses from the Koran to dissuade Muhammadans from listening to the lectures delivered by the roadside by Christians and Arya missionaries. This notice is said to have a marvellous effect in inducing Muhammadans to leave the lectures as soon as it is handed over to them.

UNION GAZETTE,
28th August, 1906.

Maulvi Hidayat Rasul at Bareilly.

92. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 28th August, says that a lecture was delivered by Maulvi Hidyat Rasul on the evening of Friday the 24th August last at Bibi-ji-ki Masjid in Bareilly. He had recourse to vituperative language aimed at his opponents and those of Maulvi Ahmad Raza. The best way of explaining matters in connection with the Mecca incident would have been by contradicting the objectionable statements through the press. Maulvi Hidayat Rasul has been sentenced to undergo imprisonment on previous occasions solely on account of his abusive language, and had to leave Bareilly last year for similar reasons. The editor concludes with a warning to Muhammadans in general exhorting them to be careful of mischievous mullahs like Hidayat Rasul, who is expected to return after a short absence in Calcutta, to pursue his old course of vituperation and mischief-mongering at Bareilly.

Political weakness in the United Provinces.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st September,
1906.

1. THE Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 1st September, while supporting the views of the Advocate (vide Selections No. 34, para. 6. and Selections No. 36, para. 6) regarding the formation of a political institution for the United Provinces, regrets to notice an utter absence of political leaders who would work quite disinterestedly for the good of the country. The editor thinks that much cannot be expected even from the independent profession of the bar, and from retired Government officers, and suggests the need of selecting a number of political leaders who will be willing to make every sacrifice for the good of their country; and who should begin the work by training public thought for future political regeneration.

The Indian National Congress and the Muhammadans.

ZUL QARNAIN,
7th September,
1906.

2. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of 7th September, says that ever since the departure of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, Muhammadans are beginning to reflect on their situation, they have realized the need for political agitation, and that some of them have expressed a readiness to join the Congress, but this movement is not at all calculated to improve their prospects. The Congress, split as it is into innumerable sects professing various religions, cannot be said to be a national institution representing Indian interests. The Indian National Congress is revolutionary in its views, and is calculated to aim at the subversion of the present system of Government. The editor thinks that the representative form of Government is not at all calculated to suit India at its present stage of progress, and suggests a strict adherence to the views of Sir Saiyad Ahmad Khan on the subject. He suggests also the resuscitation of the political association started some time back by Nawab Mushtaq Husain Wiqar-ul-Mulk.

The present situation of the Muhammadans of India.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th September,
1906.

3. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 8th September, deprecates the inaction of the Muhammadans and says that the present times teach men to be independent and to help themselves, that Government can have no respect for a people who cannot help themselves, and can very well understand that the Muhammadan inertness is the outcome of a desire to injure their Hindu brethren who are agitating at present. The editor thinks that the Muhammadans are acting against the dictates of their conscience in charging Hindus with fomenting sedition. Government can fully gauge the feelings of the Bengalis, for it would exterminate the entire community if it looked upon them as rebellious. Mr. Morley's speech gives clear indication of what Government thinks of the Congress and the Bengalis, who have one political creed, and have by their firmness of character succeeded in compelling Sir Bampfylde Fuller to resign his office as Lieutenant-Governor.

Causes leading to the discontent of the Muhammadans of India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th September,
1906.

4. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 10th September, says, in continuation with his views on the subject published in its issue of 6th instant (vide paragraph 77, Selections No. 36 of 1906), that the present generation of Muhammadans who have received the light of modern civilization are dissatisfied with their lot as they occupy the same position as the Hindus did twenty years back when they started the Congress movement, which has made considerable progress during the last twenty years and has won the sympathy and support of the Indian public, as well as of a certain section of leaders of public thought in England. Its success is proved adequately by the fact that certain leaders of the Congress movement have been knighted and honoured with other titles, besides being freely appointed as Judges of the High Courts, and being made members of the Councils of Government. The Muhammadans notice with regret and surprise that they have been excluded from the honours conferred in commemoration of the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to India; and think that had they served Heaven as they have served the British Government they would not have been so neglected, and thereby subjected to disgrace and ignominy. They regret very much that their faithfulness to and dependence on Government has led to their being left far behind in the race for advancement; and there is no one to sympathize with their misfortunes except their brethren in the Congress. They ask Government how it is that they are neglected in every way and are excluded from lucrative and responsible posts as well as from titles of distinction, invite its attention to their deplorable lot and seek redress of their grievances. The correspondent concludes with the remark that the Muhammadan leaders of public thought and opinion, who are entirely loyal to the British Government, altogther sympathize with their co-religionists and recognise that their claims have been totally ignored.

AL BASHIR,
11th September,
1906.

The Muhammadans in India and Mr. Morley's Budget speech.

5. Al Bashir (Etáwah), of 11th September, says that Mr. Morley's speech has caused much uneasiness in Muhammadan circles. The Muhammadans have neither money, nor the training to be able to make a proper representation to the Secretary of State, but they have lives in their bodies, energy in their lives, and bodily strength to support their zeal. All these must be guided by their religious fervour. Their honour, their religion, and their freedom are in danger, and they will rather die than endanger them. The editor views suggestion for representation with strong disfavour, and pronounces Mr. Morley's policy as ruinous to the interests of India, and as calculated to promote Hindu interests to the detriment of Muhammadans. He then exhorts the Muhammadans to make a loyal and constitutional representation of their grievances to Government, and to start a political association of their own.

ANAND,
4th September,
1906.

Expansion of the Legislative Council.

6. The Ánand (Lucknow), of 4th September, says that the expansion of the Legislative Councils is not calculated to lead to practical good, until the number of Indian and European members is made equal, nor can the privilege accorded to Indian members to debate for three days on the budget question be in any way useful unless Government is prepared to give due consideration to what they say. The election of members is based on British principles, while their rights and privileges are restricted to making requests and proposals to Government; though the chief duty of the representatives of the people is to oppose the views of Government where they clash with public interests. The Opposition in England is a responsible body that can defeat the measures of Government, and is therefore a formidable force while opposition in India is bound to result in defeat which must cause the public discontent and indignation. The present breach between the rulers and the ruled is the outcome of this opposition, and it is desirable to secure against these evils in the course of debates on public matters, by attaching due weight to the opinions and wishes of the representatives of the public.

ARYA MITRA,
8th September,
1906.

The Council of the Secretary of State for India.

7. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th September, says that either Pandit Shyam Krishna or Mr. Romesh Chander Dutt will be the proper person to fill the vacancy in the Council of the Secretary of State for India, as they have real sympathy for India, and have a thorough knowledge of Indian problems.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th September,
1906.

Self-government in India.

8. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 8th September, referring to the opinion of Mr. Ross about plague says that considering that Europeans do not suffer from plague, one cannot but think that the deaths of Indians are due to some extraneous causes and not to the plague itself. The report of the Plague Commission attributes 35 per cent. of the deaths to other causes. The editor points out that famine is only another form of the plague, and this likewise cannot affect Europeans; that self-interest is the guiding principle of British administration, and that countries hitherto have only risen through self-government. He advocates therefore the imperative need for giving the Indian public a larger share in the administration of the country.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th September,
1906.

Self-government in India.

9. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 8th September, while speaking of the progress that European nations are making, says that they are very jealous of the advancement of others, and that though England excels every other nation in its love for freedom, yet its influence has never produced beneficial results in any of its colonies. The editor quotes the opinion of Mr. Hart Kennedy, who says that England wishes that every country should be free and should govern itself, even if lives have to be risked in the attainment of this object. The editor then points out that the Muhammadans have by their faithfulness to Government given ample proofs of their fitness to govern India, besides they have certain latent qualities in them which will enable them to rule a vast country like India much better than any other community.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th September,
1906.

The Indian Cadet Association.

10. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th September, says that the Indian Cadet Association which has been referred to by Mr. Morley in his Budget speech can do no practical good to the country; as the Political Agents invariably exercise a very bad influence on Indian chiefs, and will never allow them to speak out their minds freely, even if they had the ability to do so.

OUDH AKHBAR,
14th September,
1906.

The vagaries of the Anglo-Indian Press and Golden Bengal.

11. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 14th September, condemns the vagaries of the Pioneer and the Englishman and says that their encomiums on Sir Bampylde Fuller and expression of sympathy with Muhammadans have been looked upon with disfavour by the Civil and Military Gazette and the Madras Mail owing to their tendency to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans. Their attitude is calculated to produce a very unwholesome effect on the ignorant masses of India, which they do not seem to realize. The strikes are attributed by them altogether to the agitators of the swadeshi movement, and to the Bengalis who have become discontented over the partition of Bengal, and they seem to ignore all that the Bengali Press says on the subject.

The allegations in telegrams regarding the intrigues in Bengal are quite unfounded; the allegation regarding the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath has been proved to be false, and such vagaries cannot but lead foreign Powers to laugh at the expense of the British Government. The Anglo-Indian Press has made a mountain of a mole-hill, when speaking of the likelihood of Mr. Tilak being the president-elect for the next congress, and has given undue prominence to Babu Bepin Chander Pal, who was practically unknown to the general public of India. Considering that the British Government could hold its own during the mutiny when the country had not been disarmed, and that the Indian public and Rajas and Mahárájas prefer to place themselves under the benign rule of the British Government, the suggestions of the Anglo-Indian Press regarding an impending mutiny cannot but be viewed as the ravings of a maniac, the utterances of a drunkard. Referring the reproduction of a seditious circular letter from Chinsurah in the Englishman, the correspondent reminds the public of alarm spread by the Anglo-Indian Press a few years back expressing their worst apprehensions regarding the daubing of trees, which ultimately was found to have no political significance. He hopes that truth will come out eventually, and prove the utter falsity of the circular letter, which as reproduced speaks for itself, and bears internal evidence which conclusively shows that it is not the outcome of the brain of a Bengali. Considering that the Englishman has come to know of the existence of the secret society, and been able to get hold of a copy of the circular, it remains now for the editor to throw further light on the subject, otherwise we must conclude that he has allowed his imagination to run riot, and the whole affair is nothing but the creation of his fanciful brain. Such publications are calculated to injure the feelings of the Indians, and it is desirable to place some restriction on the excessive liberty given to the Anglo-Indian Press.

The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 14th September, referring to the translation of the circular in the columns of the Pioneer, says that it was at once concluded that the circular was the outcome of the brain of a maniac. It has since been proved beyond all doubt that it was not circulated in Bengal, as asserted by the Pioneer, and the editor maintains that it is the work of some spiteful person, who got it published, and sent a few copies to the Anglo-Indian papers to decry the Bengalis. The editor suspects that this might be the work of some Anglo-Indian paper. The Englishman not liking the idea of being outdone by the Pioneer has traced the existence of the secret society to Chinsurah. The editor thinks that the Anglo-Indian papers indulge in these vagaries as they are allowed a greater latitude than Indian newspapers and expresses its surprise at the indifference of Government to their tone and attitude in spreading discord and discontentment.

Al Bashir (Etawah), of 18th September, condemns the Golden Bengal if such an association actually exists, and hopes that the Muhammadans will not be dragged into the case.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

ZUL QARNAIN,
7th September,
1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

12. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 7th September, says that the Amir's visit to India will be an altogether friendly meeting, and will have no political significance.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
28th August, 1906.

Jaora.

13. The Jásus (Agra), of 28th August, received on 11th September, complains of the maladministration in Jaora, and says that the police and the Tahsildar of Mallagarh are robbing the state of half the revenue.

JASUS,
7th September,
1906.

Rampur.

14. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th September, expresses its disapprobation of the conduct of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur, who is spending large sums of money in arranging for a fair at a critical time like the present, when he should pay particular attention to the administration of the State. The editor says also that the news writers in the state have of late been extorting money from officials by threatening to report them for corruption.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

RAHBAR,
7th September,
1906.

Murder by a constable in Bareilly.

15. A correspondent from Bareilly writes in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th September, that a constable of the Garhi Police station in the Bareilly district has murdered a boy aged 15 years for the sake of his ornaments valued at Rs. 69. The constable makes a confession, but says that having lost all that he had while gambling with the boy, he asked the boy to return his money, and murdered him on his refusal to do so. The editor remarks that a constable charged with theft in Moradabad has been let go only recently with the light sentence of thirty stripes, and considers that the conduct of the protectors of life and property (the police) is extremely unsatisfactory.

RAHBAR,
7th September,
1906.

Prosecution of the Sub-Inspector of Seohara (Bijnor).

16. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th September, says that the Sub-Inspector of Seohara who is in trouble over a case under section 342, Indian Penal Code, and is now going about from door to door to win over the witnesses against him in the case since transferred to Moradabad, succeeded for some time in impressing the District Magistrate with the idea that Munshi Balmakund, the Sub-divisional officer bore him a personal grudge and let off his cases in consequence. The Seohara public is very much dissatisfied with him, but the district authorities have so far paid no heed to the matter.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th September,
1906.

The evil effects of the Dupernex scheme.

17. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares) of 8th September, says that the reduction of officials in courts has led to many evil results, amongst them the irregular practices of the officials employed. The Government and the High Court can very well understand what the officials will do when they have to go over hundreds of miles in a month's time without getting any allowance. The editor hopes that the Parliament and the Secretary of State will see reason to interfere with the innovations brought about by the Dupernex scheme, and invites their attention to the many unlawful practices permitted by the High Court and the Government of the United Provinces, though they are against English principles of administration.

INDIAN PEOPLE

The duty of Judges and Magistrates in cases where the conduct of police is suspicious.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th September, while commenting on the judgment of Mr. Lyle, Sessions Judge, in re Moti Lal versus Mohan Lal and Bhana Mal, jewellers of Agra, section 406, Indian Penal Code, says that in a case like this where there is a strong suspicion against the searching party which consisted of the sub-inspector and his subordinates and the complainant and his witnesses, some one ought to be held responsible for the wrong done to the accused. A mistake so grave should not be ignored by merely being called technical. . . . .

The sub-inspector (Sri Ram) said that he had been living for the last few weeks in the disputed house and that he occupied it after this case was instituted. But to his great annoyance his own search witnesses said that he had been living there for the last five or six months, and supported the defence in this respect.

The editor says that considering all these things we are of opinion that the Sessions Judge ought to have taken a serious view of the matter. The circumstances of the case, the meagre evidence produced to support the theory, and the spirit in which it was conducted, all go to prove that the case was a got up one, and that there was malâ-fides on the part of the complainant and the sub-inspector. Let judges and magistrates bear in mind that, for the sake of justice, they should deal with such cases rather severely, and not excuse the police inspector and constables by calling such deeds technical mistakes. They have sufficient power in their hands to harass the people, and an encouragement like this, which we believe is quite unintentional, may make them more oppressive towards the people.

However, the public is very much satisfied with the judgment of acquittal of the two accused.

CITIZEN,

1906.

Complaints of non-payment against the Tahsildar of Jhansi.

19. A corespondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of 10th September, says :—In December last the tahsildar of Jhansi sent an order to me to supply 100 maunds of grass at Baruasagar. I complied with the order and actually hold receipts for the quantity of grass delivered. The market value of grass at the time was Re. 1-4-0 per maund. After waiting a considerable time for payment, I sent a notice to the tahsildar, which he refused to accept. He, however, wrote asking me if I wanted cash payment, or whether I would prefer to have the money credited to my land revenue account. In reply I signified my consent to the latter arrangement. The money was, however, not credited to my land revenue account, as I now find. For recently, the tahsildar issued an attachment against my land for the non-payment of revenue. I forthwith paid Rs. 120, the amount due from me, and petitioned the Collector, detailing all the circumstances of the grass transaction in my petition. A few days after the submission of the petition I received an intimation from the tahsildar to call and receive payment of the value of the grass. Accordingly I went to the tahsil when the naib-tahsildar offered me only Rs. 78 in full settlement. I told him that the tahsildar had realized the full market value of the 100 maunds of grass from the Military authorities at Re. 1-4-0 per maund, and I will only accept my just due. Meanwhile I have not been paid a single pie up to this time. Only recently the Commissioner of Allahabad paid a visit to Jhansi. The tahsildar sent for 20 maunds of firewood, 5 maunds of grass, and 3 maunds of coal, to be supplied to the Commissioner's camp, from Musammat Radhabai of Mastra. Two tahsil peons, Ghasita and Rafiq, called for the goods, and the lady's agent asked for a receipt for things supplied which the peons refused, alleging that the giving of receipt was against orders. The peons told the agent to go to the tahsildar.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th September,
1906.

Thieves and dakaits in the garb of mendicants.

20. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th September, says that thieves and dakaits very often assume the garb of mendicants, go about talking like God-fearing devotees, and disappear after committing theft or other cognate offence as soon as they get an opportunity. The editor suggests that Government should insist on the fakirs travelling with a passport duly signed by the head of their akhara or gurdwara and countersigned by the district officer or the Superintendent of Police of the district to which they belong. The police should be instructed to keep a close eye on persons going about dressed as mendicants.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th September,
1906.

The Annual Police Administration report for the United Provinces.

21. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th September, expresses its dissent from the remarks of the Inspector-General of Police about the public satisfaction, and suggests that the increase of crime as admitted by the Inspector-General was the result of police inefficiency. The editor says that persons who committed thefts owing to the prevalence of famine should have been let off without having their cases tried out, as they were actually forced to commit the offence. Now that a conviction has been obtained it will remain evidence against them, and if they are brought up a second time the trying magistrate will never take into consideration the extenuating circumstance of necessity arising from famine. As regards the rise of crime owing to the prevalence of plague, the editor thinks that here again it was the result of police inefficiency as it was their duty to protect property in the absence of its owners.

Counterfeiting King's Coin.

22. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of 4th September, says that the offence of counterfeiting King's Coin has been on the increase ever since there has been a considerable fall in the value of silver, and that any successful repression of the crime will not be possible so long as there is any appreciable difference between the value of silver and the rupee. The offenders belong chiefly to the goldsmith and blacksmith communities.

KANAUJ PUNCH,

23. The Kanauj Punch, of 8th September, expresses its satisfaction at the proposed reduction of the salt tax, though the editor would suggest its complete remission.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th September,
1906.

Mr. W. T. Stead on Mr. Morley's Budget speech.

24. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th September, says that Mr. W. T. Stead while commenting on Mr. Morley's first Budget speech in the Review of Reviews considers it deplorable that Mr. Morley should have "disappointed the fond expectations of the Bengalis."

* * * * * * * *

"The one thing necessary to be done is to increase the influence and authority of the Indian vernacular press. Parliamentary Government is at present out of the question. But the native press might be developed so as to be a fairly efficient temporary substitute."

* * * * * * * *

The editor says :—"There is great wisdom in Mr. Stead's suggestion. The power of the press is of slow growth, but it has grown even in India. The swadeshi movement and the boycott have been greatly advanced by the press. It is the usual practice to ignore the press in this country, but its power is acknowledged when even the most obscure vernacular paper is prosecuted by the Government for sedition. It stands to reason that anything which has a power for evil has also some power for good. The vernacular press chiefly has an immense future before it, if it happens to be in proper hands, and may materially help the growth of a strong public opinion in the country.

The Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th September, says in connection with this subject that "much surely depends on the development of the vernacular press, we mean the respectable section of the press. But the press itself has not only to contend against several odds in the country, but it has to meet an organised crusade against it by the Anglo Indian Press."

* * * * * * * *

Readers of Anglo-Indian papers are led to believe that the principal vocation of the vernacular press is abuse of the Government and its officers, and to rouse the hatred of the masses against the established Government of the country.

* * * * * * * *

What are the Pioneer and the Englishman doing of late ? They have been setting Hindus and Muhammadans by their ears, inventing stories of want of sympathy between the two communities and exciting the Anglo-Indians' anger against the Hindus.

* * * * * * * *

May not the leaders of the Indian public opinion appeal to the Government of India against the present evil spirit of the Anglo-Indian Press which is more likely to increase the gulf between Indians and their rulers on the one hand, and Hindus and Muhammadans on the other, than any amount of writings in the vernacular press ?

The article has been reproduced from the Advocate in the Hindustáni (Lucknow) of 12th September.

Octroi tax on pilgrims in Fyzabad.

ANAND KADAMBINI, July and August, 1906.

25. A correspondent of the Ánand Kádambini (Mirzapur), in its combined issue for July and August, deprecates the levy of a tax of one anna per head from the pilgrims visiting Ajodhya, and suggests its abolition. The pilgrims, it is said, have to purchase fresh tickets on their return after visiting temples outside municipal limits. The editor also deplores the oppression of the municipal chaprasis, and the disregard of the municipal authorities of these wrongs, and compares the tax to the Jeziah levied by Aurangzeb.

The roads in Moradabad, Benares and Gorakhpur.

JASUS, 7th September, 1906.

26. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th September, says that the roads in Moradabad stand badly in need of repairs, particularly the one passing along the octroi office to the railway station.

The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 1st September, makes similar complaints about the roads in Gorakhpur and Benares. The editor says that the sanitary condition of the streets of Benares requires more looking after, so also the sanitary arrangements in the villages in the Benares district.

Conservancy arrangements in the Agra Cantonments.

MUFID-I-AM, 8th September, 1906.

27. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 8th September, takes serious objection to the recent orders regarding the use of latrines in Agra Cantonments, and thinks that if the servants of two or more bungalows are obliged to use one latrine, they are bound to be put to great inconvenience.

Education in Baroda and British territory.

ANAND KADAMBINI. July and August, 1906.

28. The Anand Kádambini (Mirzapur), in its combined issue for July and August, congratulates the Baroda people at education being made compulsory, and regrets to find that the British Government is adopting an attitude hostile to extended education.

The Missionary educational influence in Benares.

CENTRAL HINDU COLLEGE MAGAZINE, September, 1906.

29. The Central Hindu College Magazine (Benares), for September, says that the Central Hindu College after ensuring the success of the Teachers' Conference invited the heads of the other schools in Benares to take part, and to share in the credit of the undertaking. They responded but they took the whole thing out of the hands of the C. H. C., appointed a missionary to control all arrangements, and changed the date of the meeting from the Durga Puja to the Christmas holidays. This promising movement, so highly approved by the Lieutenant-Governor and the Director of Public Instruction, has thus been made into a missionary-controlled enterprise, and stamped as a sectarian undertaking.

* * * *

The same fatal influence seems likely to capture girls' education in these provinces, and thus to destroy it, so far as girls of the higher classes are concerned. The Lieutenant-Governor, in starting the work, very wisely constituted a Committee of Indians—Hindus and Musalmans. But a Committee just called consisted of English people chiefly, and had a missionary as Chairman. If the missionaries are allowed to control this movement, only the outcastes will be educated, for the higher castes will never allow the Christians to have the chance of influencing the future wives and mothers, on whom the happiness of the home depends.

Educational Code, United Provinces.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st September, 1906.

30. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 1st September, while commenting on the Educational Code, takes exception to the present practice of charging students with two months' fees in advance, and considers it a great hardship on parents.

University Examinations.

TUFAH-I-HIND, 4th September, 1906.

31. The Tufah-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th September, notices the large failure of candidates at the last Entrance examination of the Calcutta University, and suggests that the work of students will be considerably facilitated if the candidates who fail are required to appear afterwards in only the subjects in which they are plucked. The editor hopes that such a course will lead to the progress of education, invites the attention of the Education Department and of Government to the measure suggested, and requests them to minimize the hardships of public examinations.

ADVOCATE,
9th September,
1906.

The Persian paper of the B. A. examination of the Allahabad University.

32. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th September, says that an unexpectedly large number of candidates have failed at the last B. A. examination of the Allahabad University in Persian; that some concession should be made to such candidates, as the Arabic-Persian course has been substituted for the purely Persian course in the B. A. examination for 1907; and that, considering that it will be difficult and almost impossible for them to prepare the new Arabic-Persian course in the short interval of seven months only, they may be allowed to appear in the same course in Persian which was prescribed for 1906. The professors and the failed candidates should move the Vice-Chancellor to allow a supplementary examination to be held in Persian in the old course.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th September,
1906.

The Engineering class in the Mission College at Allahabad.

33. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 8th September, says that Christian missionaries who brought the light of Western civilization in India have recently started an engineering class in connection with the Mission College at Allahabad, where practical instruction will be given to people of all classes irrespective of creed or colour. The editor says that the originators of this idea are entitled to the heartfelt gratitude of the Indian public for their sympathy in the matter.

RAHBAR,
7th September,
1906.

Indian students in America and other foreign countries.

34. A correspondent in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th September, says that the Hindustáni of the 22nd August, contains an appeal from Babu Mahesh Charan Singh (referred to in Mr. Rachid's letter in the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar of 28th July 1906) requesting the Indian public to help him with a sum of Rs. 800 so as to enable him to return to India after having completed his education in America. The hardships that the Babu has undergone to achieve his end in scientific education are given in detail, and an appeal is made in his behalf to the Dayanand Anglo-Vedic College and the Vaishya Maha Sabha. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) made the same appeal and has since announced that a zamindar of the Bulandshahr district has generously given Rs. 1,200 which will suffice for the purpose.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th September,
1906.

Urdu the common script for India.

35. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 8th September, takes objection to the criticism of the Civil and Military Gazette of the remarks of Mr. Agnew made about Urdu at a prize distribution, and says that the attitude of the Supreme Government, the opinions of high European officers, and the proceedings of the Education Department of Bombay, Madras and Eastern Bengal, supply ample evidence to confirm the belief that Urdu is the common script of India. There are no Government orders making a knowledge of Urdu necessary for holding Government appointments, nor have any works on science and literature been written in this language, yet it is liked universally. A large number of newspapers are published in this language through the length and breadth of India. It has been adopted as the vehicle of thought by the theatrical companies in their performances all over the country, and fakirs, jogis and sanyasis use it as their language in delivering their sermons throughout India. The editor condemns the attitude of persons, who, in spite of their pretensions to being the peace-makers between the Hindu and Muhammadan communities, raise obstacles in the way of the Urdu, and give expression to thoughts which are calculated to spread discord.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th September,
1906.

Education of the children of workmen employed in manufactories.

36. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 11th September, says with reference to the views of Government on the subject that it is highly desirable that the children of artizans and labourers employed in manufactories should be educated only to an extent calculated to equip them for the better performance of their ancestral calling; as liberal education is sure to produce in them a love for ease and an apathy for their hereditary profession.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

ZAMINDAR WA KASHTKAR,
for August, 1906.
OUDH AKHBAR,
13th September,
1906.

Improvement of fallow land.

37. The Zamindár wa Káshtkár (Bijnor) for August, and the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 13th September, while reproducing the article from the Zamindar wa Kashtkar, say that the resolution on the subject is a significant outcome of Lord Curzon's administration and is not calculated to give public satisfaction as the favour shown therein is inconsiderable. The Indian soil is the property of the Indians, and it has to be borne in mind that any favours conferred do not affect the rights of the people. The present policy of Government in this respect is open to serious objection, and calculated to render it liable to the charge of self-interest, as its treatment of the zamindars here is more exacting than in provinces governed by the raiyatwari principle (settlement of land rents &c., made with the cultivators themselves without the intervention of a landlord). The reduction of land revenue assessed, with the decrease in the productive powers of land, is viewed with approbation, but the refusal to give any compensation to cultivators, who lay out their money but fail to effect improvement in their tenures, is detrimental to the attainment of the object contemplated, as digging of wells in certain provinces is not attended with fruitful results. The result of the present policy will be a gradual decrease in the income of the tenants.

MOHINI,
28th August, 1906.

Famine caused by flood in certain districts in the United Provinces.

38. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 28th August, received on the 10th September, states that floods have caused serious injury to many districts in the United Provinces. The floods in Bahraich have created much distress, and relief measures have had to be adopted, as nothing can be expected from the kharif crops in such of the villages in that district as are under water. The editor therefore suggests that takawi will be necessary before rabi sowing can be started. Portions of Gonda, Hardoi, Unao, Ballia, and Gorakhpur districts also have suffered from the flood, though not to the same extent as Bahraich.

The Mohini (Kanauj) of 11th September likewise deals with the deplorable condition of the Agra and Allahabad Commissionerships and of Eastern Bengal, quotes instances from certain English and vernacular papers, and prays Government to open relief works where necessary.

BHARAT JIWAN,
10th September, 1906.

French opinion on famine in India.

39. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 10th September, expresses its thankfulness for the sympathy expressed by their colonial officer De Lemetta, who on return to France pointed out that crores of Indians had died on account of famine during the last six years. The editor says that all the same our British rulers think that India is ever happy and prosperous.

OUDH AKHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

Babu Mahesh Charan Singh, an Indian student in America.

40. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 14th September, commends the generosity of Raja Chandra Chur Singh, of Chandapur, who in response to the appeal of Babu Mahesh Charan Singh has offered him the sum of rupees one thousand to enable him to pay his passage back to India and to write an account of his journey to America, on the condition that he devotes himself for five years to the reform of the country. The raja will pay him during the time and meet the cost of providing such implements of husbandry as he might propose.

(g).—General.

AWAZÁ-I-KHALQ,
1st September, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

41. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 1st September, says that Sir Bampfylde Fuller had received his training under Sir Auckland Colvin, and, though personally a well-meaning civilian, he was obstinate in the extreme even as a District Magistrate in the United Provinces. The editor thinks that he was led into various acts of oppression by a certain section of the Anglo-Indian Press, whom he followed blindly. His acts of oppression affected the whole of India. He says that the influence of papers that uphold official acts of oppression is constantly on the decrease both in the public estimation and in the opinion of thoughtful Europeans.

AL BASHIR,
4th September, 1906.

The Press on the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

42. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 4th September, says that Sir Bampfylde's resignation has thrown the newspaper world in a state of ferment. The Hindu newspapers are rejoicing at the event, the Anglo-Indian Press is animadverting on the weakness of Government, while the Muhammadan papers are unanimous in acknowledging the good done by him to their community, and in resenting the action of Government in the matter. Every Muhammadan newspaper contains copious evidence of sympathy and disappointment, and meetings expressing regret at, and protesting against, his resignation and untimely departure have been held in every city of Eastern Bengal and in most of the cities in Western Bengal, the Punjab, the North-Western Provinces, Madras and Bombay. Addresses acknowledging his services and expressing regret at his departure were presented to him in every city through which he had occasion to pass. His speeches were full of pathos. He regretted that he had no opportunities of doing good to the Muhammadans during his short tenure of office extending over nine months : but the time had sufficed to enable him to see that Muhammadan interests were being disregarded and that there was no one to look after their rights. He pointed out that the circulars issued recently, if carried into practice, will ensure many beneficial results, and that it was high time that the Muhammadans should endeavour to secure their rights instead of continuing to think that Government will of itself confer on them their rights and privileges as occasion required. The editor deplores the vulgar and vituperative language used by the Hindu newspapers, particularly the Congress organs, in speaking of the Nawab of Dacca and the meetings convened by him and other Muhammadan leaders. These so-called political agitators characterise Muhammadan speeches on the subject as mutinous and impertinent in the extreme. Coming as they do from persons who are agitating the country, and whose every word is calculated to disseminate disgust and sedition against the British nation and Government, such expressions of opinion are most objectionable. The editor remarks that the political leaders are doing everything possible to defeat Muhammadan interests. He exhorts Muhammadans to be careful of their so-called friends and brethren whose suave professions lull them into confidence till their destruction has been encompassed.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th September,
1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

43. The Kanauj Punch, of 8th September, says that the credit for the institution of the National Council of Education, which is the first step in the resuscitation of a nation, and the foundation of weaving and spinning factories in Bengal, which have given an impetus to indigenous arts and industries, are due to Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

The editor says that Lord Minto's repeated instructions to Sir Bampfylde Fuller to reconsider his proposals regarding the disaffiliation of certain schools were the result of his weakness, and of the deceit practised on him by the selfish Bengalis, and that the Government will have to bear the unpleasant consequences of its weak policy.

The Tufah-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th September, says that Sir Bampfylde Fuller in reply to the farewell address given to him at Bombay remarked that he will be gratified to hear of the good resulting from his circular to the Muhammadan community, and that he had the satisfaction to know that the Muhammadans, particularly those in Eastern Bengal, had begun to realize their situation.

The Mufid-i-Am (Agra) of 8th September, says that Sir Bampfylde Fuller, while replying to an address given by the Muhammadans of Faridkote, pointed out to them the need for educating their children on the English system, and of teaching them modern sciences. He said that their agitation was in his opinion nothing more or less than an expression of goodwill for their sovereign, that party politics were beginning to influence the administration of India, that Muhammadans should no longer maintain a passive attitude as they have done so far, and that they should have implicit faith in the justice of Government for their rights and privileges. The editor remarks that the Muhammadans should make these instructions their guiding principle, otherwise looking at things as they stand it is impossible that their lot should be ameliorated.

CITIZEN,
10th September,
1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

44. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 10th September, says :—Regarding the Pioneer's telegraphic report of a large and representative Muhammadan meeting at Allahabad city, an eye-witness says that he heard about it from a school-boy the same day in the afternoon and was present with a relative of the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya at the meeting, which, it was stated, would take place at 5 P. M. About sixty representative men, consisting almost entirely of school-boys and baburchis, attended. The business commenced a few minutes before six and terminated in twelve minutes, during which time there was a stirring speech delivered by a student, deploring the loss of Sir Bampfylde Fuller's services. A resolution was adopted and the Presidential speech, which was short and sweet began and ended thus :—" I am glad to read the resolution." No printed notice was considered necessary by the individual at whose instance the meeting was convened.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th September, 1906.

Agitation in Bengal.

45. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 10th September, says that the political intricacies in Bengal have brought to the front a number of new leaders who disapprove of the extravagant views of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji. One of these Bepin Chander Pal advocates boycott at any cost, wishes that it should take a very prominent place in the proceedings of the ensuing Congress in Calcutta, and proposes that Mr. Tilak who holds strong views should be its President. The telegrams that are appearing in the Amrita Bazar Patriká indicate that endeavours are being made to induce the Reception Committee to ask Mr. Tilak to preside.

The editor then gives a verbatim translation of a circular published in the Englishman and supposed to have been issued by a secret society in Chinsurah, exhorting the Bengalis to shed their very life blood for Bengal and to turn the British nation out of India. It is an invitation to both Hindus and Muhammadans of all classes to arm themselves with lathis, spears, swords and guns and to rise for the protection of their mother (Bengal).

The Oudh Akhbár, in its issue of 12th September, describes the circular as extravagant and ridiculous. Any idea of subverting the present Government cannot fail to be regarded as childish and frantic. The Bengalis are admittedly the most enlightened of the Indian communities, but they cannot have any pretensions to being warriors, and should such a society be in existence it is the duty of both the Press and the public leaders of Bengal to see that it is eradicated.

The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 14th September, expresses its regret at the split in the camp in Bengal over the election of the President-elect of the forthcoming Congress to be held in Calcutta, and deprecates the attitude adopted by the Bengali Press since the alleged coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji. The editor points out that even Dhobis and Chamars in India are crowned at the time of their marriage, and that the Press has been unnecessarily concerned over the matter because Babu Surendra Nath Banerji occupies a very enviable position amongst Indian leaders.

CITIZEN,
10th September, 1906.

Sir Andrew Fraser and his anticipated resignation of the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal.

46. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 10th September, says :—The Government of India having expressed their disapproval of the scheme of starting a model college at Ranchi, it is stated that Sir Andrew Fraser will throw up his appointment of Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. Is it now too much to expect that, as suggested by our Anglo-Indian contemporaries, Lord Minto will bow down before His Honour and apologise and accord his hearty support to the scheme ?

BHARAT JIWAN,
10th September, 1906.

A Muhammadan deputation to Lord Minto.

47. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 10th September, while writing on the deputation to Lord Minto, advises the Muhammadans to work in harmony with Hindus, as exclusive representations can do no good to the country.

HINDUSTANI,
12th September, 1906.

Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy.

48. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 12th September, says that a deputation will be sent to memorialize His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General on 1st October with a view to insure the protection of Muhammadan interests. The editor surmises that the memorial will have some bearing on the question regarding the expansion of the councils, and thinks that it would be much better if Lord Minto's Government could publish the proceedings of the Select Committee instead of keeping them confidential, so as to enable the Muhammadans and other Indian communities that are in a minority, to see if expansion on the representative principle is calculated to injure their interests in any way.

ADVOCATE,
9th September, 1906.

Babu Surendra Nath Banerji King of the two Bengals.

49. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th September, says that we are afraid much unnecessary fuss is being made of the crowning ceremony of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji held some time ago and an amount of attention is being bestowed on it which the event does not deserve.

* * * * *

The country had been so long adoring the Bhagats, the God-fearing men. It has advanced a step further and has begun to adore the Desh Bhagats, patriots. Why should that event cause any burning of heart. Desh Bhagats have so long gone uncared for; their task has been a task of so much thanklessness that we for one would not grudge even slight over-doing. There can be little danger in a little extravagance in such demonstrations. Surely Babu Surendra Nath's friends did not intend to instal him at the gadi of Belvedere. No Bengali can dare go near it after the slap given to Mr. K. G. Gupta. Crowned or uncrowned, Surendra Nath is the king of Bengali hearts; if Anglo-Indian papers are interested in dragging him low, the Bengali Press surely should not join them.

The article has been reproduced in the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 12th September.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th September,
1906.

Babu Surendra Nath Banerji as a public leader.

50. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th September, says that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji is said to be very hungry of praise and to be known as the leader; he is in the habit of taking to himself the merit that belongs to others, and so on and so forth. Very well, if he does not make a good leader let him go, but who is to take his place? Our cause is not suffering for want of leaders but of followers. The leadership is divided, the following is divided. There is no unity of purpose, unity of leadership, unity of following. If a man does not deserve to be our leader out he goes, but are we all ready to follow any leader, for in the solidarity of the following is our strength. Every province, every city is divided by petty jealousies. The leaders very often are men of no worth, with no high ideal and no unselfishness. The following is always doubtful. And we babble glibly of being a nation. What have we learned from the Japanese race? Every one there is a leader, every one is a follower.

AL AZIZ,
August, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

51. Al Aziz (Agra), for August, received on 12th September, says that it is a great mistake to treat the swadeshi movement and the partition of Bengal as concomitant questions, as this tends to weaken the swadeshi movement, which has engaged the attention of the Indian public more or less for some years.

The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 8th September, characterizes the swadeshi movement as the outcome of interested Bengali agitators, who wish to take the reins of Government in their own hands. The editor thinks that, being far ahead of the Muhammadans in educational qualifications, the Bengalis, if successful in their aims, will look down upon the Muhammadans, and treat them like coolies; all thinking men therefore, and particularly the Muhammadans, should hold themselves aloof from the movement. He looks upon the national flag of Bengal as the standard of rebellion; and is surprised at the toleration of Government of such seditious acts.

The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 8th September, while praising the Christian missionaries of Dacca for their enterprise in opening a depôt for the supply of foreign products, and laying out two lakhs of rupees over the concern, with a view to counteract the swadeshi movement, exhorts the Muhammadans to join the Christian movement.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

52. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th September, says that the Prem Prachárni Sabha of Cawnpore is doing excellent swadeshi work, and suggests the need of such associations in every district. It notes also that an exhibition will be held at Chaubepur to encourage indigenous arts and industries in the United Provinces.

JASUS,
7th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

53. The Jásus (Agra) of 7th September, says that meetings have been held and resolutions passed in Muttra and Agra unanimously boycotting foreign sugar. The editor himself took an active part in the meetings at Agra, and remarks, with reference to the conduct of certain gentlemen in alleviating the miseries of the Chittagong public brought about by famine, that the swadeshi movement has made people God-fearing.

The Cawnpore Gazette, of 8th September, says that a lecture was delivered at Cawnpore by Tahal Ram Ganga Ram, the swadeshi advocate, exhorting the public to use articles of swadeshi manufacture and to encourage indigenous arts and industries. Rai Debi Pershad, B.A. LLB. and a vakil of the High Court, was in the chair.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th September,
1906.

Swadeshi Glass factory in Upper India.

54. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 7th September, says that Lala Panna Lal is the proprietor of the Upper India Glass Factory, Umballa. He has proposed to admit two students in his factory in order to teach them the art of manufacturing glass and will give those apprentices an allowance of Rs 20 to Rs. 30 a month during the first year.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th September,
1906.

The swadeshi sugar.

55. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 8th September, condemns foreign sugar on the ground that it is purified by means of bone ash, and says that its use is against the religious principles of both Hindus and Muhammadans. The editor exhorts the Indian public to give up the use of foreign sugar, and to live up to the principles of their religion.

The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 7th September, suggests that the case of copyists and clerks working in the Collector's record rooms is deserving of His Honour's consideration, and suggests a modification of G. O. No. 1-IX--8413, dated 13th February 1906.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
8th September,
1906.

Swadeshi sugar.

56. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of 8th September, while noting the boycott of foreign sugar from Sambhal and Chandausi, exhorts Indians to extend the boycott to every article they use, but at the same time advises them to keep aloof from seditious ways and language.

OUDH AKHBAR,
11th September,
1906.

The proposed swadeshi sugar-mill in Cawnpore.

57. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 11th September, says that a prospectus has been circulated wherein it is proposed to start a swadeshi sugar mill in Cawnpore, which is calculated to turn out twenty-seven tons of swadeshi sugar every day. The factory will very likely be opened close to the railway in Gatahia.

OUDH AKHBAR,
16th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

58. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 16th September, says, with reference to an article in the Zamanah (Cawnpore) for July, that the swadeshi movement has a political aspect and boycott is its essential element; and it is on this account that it gives rise to apprehensions in certain quarters. The Oudh Akhbar points out that indigenous arts and industries were thwarted in every possible way during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries owing to political slavery, that their chances so far have not been improved to any appreciable extent, that boycott is the first practical step towards political agitation and an essential element of the swadeshi movement; and that it is the duty of Indians to injure the trade of such foreign nations as have struck at the root of indigenous arts and industries, and reduced them to a state of penury. If the English nation was justified in placing its king on the scaffold surely Indians have every justification to boycott foreign products from the Indian market. The laws that are enacted in opposition to public opinion, as has been done recently, do not deserve to be obeyed, and the opposition of such enactments is not the opposition of law. The paper says that if we are told that we are mistaken in this view, we should meet the charge by stating that the Revolution in England in 1649, was not only a revolution of the worst type, but was also a revolution against the laws of God. If our acts are characterized as childish, we are prepared to assert that similar acts were done in America one hundred and fifty years back, that they assumed a very formidable aspect in Boston and eventually led to the emancipation and the present greatness of America. The sad events that led to the Revolution in England, and the iniquities of the Inquisition in France were far more atrocious than the so-called extravagances of the Indians, but the verdict of Macaulay and Carlyle that the sacrifice of thousands of lives was only the proper value given to save crores of men, has been accepted by the world at large. Love and revenge are both parts of human nature, and it is high time that Indians who have so long borne everything patiently should cease to look upon ideas of revenge with abhorrence. Boycott of foreign products is sure to lead to many beneficial results, and no one should condemn action in this direction as childish and imprudent.

CITIZEN,
10th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

59. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 10th September, says :—In consequence of the carters at Silchar having refused to carry belati salt and sugar, the convicts are being lent by the magistrate for carrying salt escorted by the police.

CITIZEN,
10th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement and the students of the Thana High School.

60. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 10th September, says:—It would, indeed, be a great pity if Fullerism were allowed to prevail under the administration of Lord Lamington, and his Lordship's Government came to be associated with an ugly instance of persecution of students in connection with the swadeshi movement. It appears that in March last, the senior boys of the Thana High School, contrary to the advice and orders of the Head Master, formed a debating society, at which the swadeshi movement and the desirability or otherwise of high school students taking part in such movements were discussed. As a result of the discussion, twenty students were suspended. Eight apologised and were readmitted, but eleven disputed the master's right to interfere. As now over five months have gone by, Government consents to their readmission on an apology, and an undertaking of future obedience to the master's orders. If the principles of the swadeshi movement have got a firm hold in Bombay, we need only point out to His Excellency that the policy of repression will make the people firmer than ever.

JASUS,
7th September,
1906.

The Barisal Trade Association.

61. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th September, says that the tradesmen of Barisal have at a meeting held recently resolved not to indent for piece goods from Manchester. The editor, while commending their conduct, has occasion to point out that the Elgin and Muir Mills of Cawnpore are the traitors in the camp, and are said on reliable information to be importing piece goods from Manchester and selling them as indigenous manufactures of their mills.

ADVOCATE,
9th September,
1906.

Commercial versus Political.

62. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th September, says that the Germans do not conceal the fact that they mean to compete for commercial supremacy and have no political designs behind their professed objects. The Pioneer is satisfied "that the German plan is to build up commercial connections which may be made the excuse for political action when a suitable moment arrives." Hence his anxiety to nip this movement in the bud. Alas! for our friend or his nation's helplessness in the matter. He and people of his persuasion may fret and foam at the mouth, but cannot injure their competitors, for the Germans are not Indians to be saddled with counterveiling duties nor is Germany a dependency to England. It must be confessed that the Kaiser is after all an apt student of British tactics. Do not commercial dealings precede political action wherever Englishmen set their foot? It is no edifying sight for the sieve to remark the hole in the needle.

HINDUSTANI,
12th September,
1906.

Famine in Eastern Bengal.

63. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 12th September, says that the zamindars and other well-to-do persons in Bengal are spending lakhs of rupees, and doing all they can to help Eastern Bengal out of the present famine. Grain worth lakhs is purchased from Burma and Northern India and supplied to Eastern Bengal at cost price, without distinction of creed and colour. The editor asks if any one can doubt the mischievousness of the Anglo-Indian Press in the face of these facts.

RAHBAR,
7th September,
1906.

The Jamalpur strike.

64. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th September, while speaking of the assault by certain European officials on the labourers in the Jamalpur workshop, says that the shots killed two men whose bodies however have not been recovered, and that six men received more or less serious injuries. The editor is afraid that the present state of affairs on the East Indian Railway is sure to lead to some serious results shortly.

OUDH AKHBAR,
14th September,
1906.

The Railway strike.

65. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 14th September, says that the railway strikes are the work of certain agitators who are constantly on the move, and agitating the employés to strike work, as they are underpaid and badly accommodated. They are told that their salaries are much lower than those of Europeans, though they are the chief factors in the working of the lines. They are exhorted to persevere if they wish to receive better payment and treatment, and are encouraged in every possible way. These agitators are said to distribute notices and hand bills announcing the meetings to be held.

The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 16th September, points out that the Bengal-Nagpur Railway has, on receiving a deputation from its European guards, only recently increased their salaries, regrets the apathy of Railway authorities generally to the wants and representations of Indian employés, and points out that the authorities on the East Indian Railway lost no time in giving an increase to their European guards on a previous occasion.

AL BASHIR,
4th September, 1906.

The anniversary of Sivaji.

66. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 4th September, says that the anniversary of Sivaji was a few years back celebrated in Poona only, but it has recently come to be observed in most large cities in the Madras and Bengal Presidencies also. The editor thinks that the importance now being accorded to this highway robber and assassin goes to point to a prejudiced public opinion, and to the moral deterioration of the country.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th September, 1906.

The administration of Sir James Digges LaTouche and its good and evil results.

67. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 8th September, says that the administration of our present Lieutenant-Governor has been marked by peace and prosperity. Improvements have been brought about in various departments, viz., in the Police, the Education, the Civil and Revenue departments. His rule has been commemorated by two events deserving of particular mention, viz., first the foundation of the Medical College, which will have its beneficial results, and will lead to much public good; and secondly the abolition of the competitive examination for Deputy Collectorship which has done more harm to the educated classes than is ever possible hereafter. It is a mistake to say that the sons of zamindars and talukdars and of bankers will show good work by virtue of their family pedigree. On the contrary experience has shown that those appointed by competition have proved better officers. The abolition of the competitive examination will tend to fill the service with incapable men who will have no independent opinions of their own. The editor points out that Sir Antony MacDonnell gave the appointments both by competition and election, and there was no reason to depart from the old practice. He hopes that the leaders of the country will move the Government to rectify this error, and concludes with saying that Sir Antony MacDonnell pointed out in his farewell address that the Muhammadans thought he had shown great favour to the Hindus, but such was not the case. Let us now see what Sir James Digges LaTouche has to say in extenuation of the exclusive patronage accorded to Eurasians.

TUFAH-I-HIND,
11th September, 1906.

The need for Militia in India.

68. The Tufah-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 11th September, advocates the organization of a Militia to meet the Russian army if it should ever invade India; to bring about a reduction in the expenditure incurred on the army; and to win the satisfaction of the warrior classes in India. The editor cites the Englishman in support of his views regarding the curtailment of expenditure by reducing the European and increasing the Indian force in its place. He also refers to the views of Mr. Thoburn, late of the Punjab Service, and to the formation of the Cadet Corps by Lord Curzon, and suggests that a college be opened in India for training Indian officers.

UNION GAZETTE
7th September, 1906.

Escapes from jail.

69. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th September, supports the views on the subject expressed in para. 66 of Selections No. 36 for 1906 and expresses its sympathy for the ill-paid and hard-worked warders.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th September, 1906.

Diseases in jails.
